NOTE.—Some three years ago Bro. Tucker called at the Cynosure office, and after some conversation he convinced us all that he would be a very suitable man, indeed, to undertake colporteur work. The announcement of Bro. Day, therefore, rejoices us. It is proof that the prayer that God may put forth laborers into his vineyard is being answered. Again we say, pray for Bro. Tucker.

PRESIDENT BLANCHARD IN MEMPHIS.

MEMPHIS, Jan. 12, 1886.

EDITORS CYNOSURE:—If we had done anything before to excite the friends of the lodge, we have still more deeply offended, by planning for a sermon and a lecture by President J. Blanchard, whom it was our privilege to have with us for a few days. The severe storm and cold seriously hindered his plans for securing an interview with the pastors of the white Presbyterian churches, and when he preached for us Sunday morning at the Second Congregational church, it was to an audience of not more than thirty-five persons. His theme was, "Victory over death through Christ." Sunday night at the Tabernacle Baptist church (Mr. Countee's) he preached upon the relation of the secret lodge to the Kingdom of Christ. The force and fervor of his remarks evidently made a deep impression. A good audience was present considering the cold weather, yet it is to be regretted that many more were not there. Monday night a larger audience attended the lecture at the same place. A copy of the lecture, printed in the Memphis Appeal, you have doubtless received.

I have heard to-day that threats were made and freely circulated that if a lecture should follow the Sunday night sermon at the Tabernacle the house would be set on fire. What may yet be attempted is not known. Evidently it was not decided to attempt any violence at the time of the meeting. I attended the venerable speaker to and from the church on both occasions, over half a mile, on foot, and there was no sign of disturbance. This means, either the sober conclusion that it were better to allow than to oppose free discussion, or simply it may mean the lack of decision upon what plan it might be best to try suppression, or seek revenge. We hope for the best, and give thanks to God that it is possible to maintain the cause—which is his own—with so much of liberty, despite the resistance of misled and deluded men.

President Blanchard was himself much gratified, and justly so, at the willingness of the Appeal to publish his lecture. It will awaken thought in new quarters. It will make mad many who are described in the lecture as "blindly following unknown superiors." It will astonish many who have so long and willingly submitted to the despotism of secret orders, that they never dreamed of questioning the validity of their pretensions, nor thought of any open examination of their principles and practices. It will, perhaps, trouble some good and well-meaning souls who must admit the force of the facts and arguments presented, and who yet cannot see it to be their duty to stand up and testify honestly to their convictions against this evil. We look into the house of Rimmon and Naaman says, "The Lord pardon thy servant in this thing." May it be not always so.

Our esteemed visitor is an incessant toiler, and when taking leave of us to-day for Jackson and Natchez, was very much fatigued and needing rest.

B. A. IMES.

FROM THE GENERAL AGENT.

Pecatonica is the second station on the C. & N. W. railway west of Rockford, Ill. In response to an invitation from Rev. J. P. Aurelius, I reached the town on Wednesday last, and was met at the train by the brother who entertained me in a most acceptable manner at his pleasant home. Making inquiry and consulting the village paper, I found that there were seven churches and seven secret societies advertised in the place. I further learned that the Swedish Lutheran church had a membership of 212, which was, according to the best information I could obtain, about equal to all the others combined. From the pastor I learned that they did not allow members of any of the minor or major secret societies to come to their communion and that they were financially independent of "outside" support, and in every way prosperous. Their church is of brick with a commodious basement, and the largest audience room (except the skating rink) in the town.

My meeting was well advertised and the evening favorable, so that a good audience gathered at our first session, composed of Swedes and Americans, with the leading Masons of the place. After religious services, I talked in a familiar way for an hour and a half, and felt gratified with the marked and undivided attention with which my remarks were received. There was nothing to criticise in the deportment of any one present, but all retired in a quiet and orderly manner after the benediction. On Thursday I learned that the topic of discussion the previous evening was the theme of much comment on the streets and in shops and stores, and was not surprised to meet a much larger audience on the second evening. There was very little available space unoccupied, and the most perfect order prevailed during the two and a half hours in which I spoke to them as friend speaketh to friend of the things that are done in the chambers of their imagery. No one responded to my offer to attend to any questions that might be asked, and the audience retired as orderly as from an ordinary religious service.

I was very glad to add seven new readers to our list in connection with these meetings and anticipate more permanent good from the weekly lessons of the Cynosure in these homes, than from any talks. Friends expressed a wish to hear further of the "secret empire," and should they be successful in obtaining the skating rink as proposed, I shall be glad to accept their kind invitation to return and give a few further facts concerning the "mystery of iniquity which doth already work."

is not new ground for reform work. Brother Ronayne and others have plowed, harrowed, and sowed the seeds on this soil. Rev. Bro. Hales and others on the lookout felt that the time had come to stir the public mind on the subject, and I called to spend Friday evening with them. A most cordial welcome awaited me at the home of brother and sister Thaxter, where every possible attention was given to my comfort. The lodge brotherhood had prepared the way by a public installation of officers in the Masonic lodge, which was quite fully reported in the Rockford Gazette. As they had given the outside of their "religious society," I proposed to supplement the exoteric with the esoteric work of the lodge, so that having both before them the people might judge intelligently of its character. The audience was not large, but attentive, and among them were the pastors of the M. E. and Congregational churches. The latter availed himself of the opportunity to ask questions, and at the close both pastors came forward as inquirers and treated both the subject and speaker with courtesy and kindness, for which they have my sincere thanks.

I was gratified to learn from one of my clerical brethren, that while at Byron recently he had found much interest on this subject of secret societies, and that he was becoming deeply interested himself in the subject, which had never before attracted his notice. Some friend had sent him, through the mail, documents which he was reading, and he spoke of Pres. C. G. Finney's writings on Masonry as being especially gratifying to him. On the train to-day (Saturday) I met sister Hawley and her son returning from Iowa, and on reaching Wheaton found all well at home. This evening and to-morrow I expect to spend with friends at Itaska, and to meet Bro. Hawley and other friends in Iowa in convention at Westfield on Thursday next. J. P. STODDARD.

GOOD WORK IN IOWA.

DEAR CYNOSURE:—I went to Delta in Keokuk county. I arrived there on Saturday. Sabbath morning I preached for the Free Methodist minister. In the evening I attended the M. E. church and by invitation of the minister preached to them. There was quite a revival interest developed before the meeting closed. Four or five arose for prayers. Monday and Tuesday evenings I lectured on the Religious Philosophy of Freemasonry and its Relations to Christianity. The pastor of the Christian church was present and conducted the opening religious services. The pastors of the Free Methodist and M. E. churches, were holding revival meetings at other points, so that they could neither follow up the Sabbath night indications of a revival, nor attend the lectures. The lectures were in the Free Methodist church. The pastor was anxious to be present, and thought he would close his meetings Sabbath night and be with me; but several before unmoved came forward for prayers, and duty called for a continuance of the meetings.

The announcement for the lectures was made on Saturday night, and on the Sabbath. Monday we learned that the Odd-fellows, out of sympathy for their Masonic parent, had telegraphed to Rev. Evans, who has taken it upon himself to defend and glorify lodgery, to come and withstand me. I might naturally be expected to tremble some at this announcement. But I remembered how the armies of the aliens had been turned to flight, and kingdoms subdued, as well as righteousness wrought by faith; and so I trusted that the God and Father of our Lord Jesus Christ would be with me, and help me to overcome any one who should come to the defence of this Masonic anti-Christ. So I went forward, not doubting but what, as God was with David in his contest with Goliah, so God would be with me, against any one who should rise up to defend the deistical, anti-Christian, and idolatrous worship of Freemasonry. But Mr. Evans, for reasons satisfactory to himself, declined to come to Delta; and so I was spared the trial that my faith might have been subjected to if he had come out against me, as Goliah of Gath did against David.

However, as the Odd-fellows failed to get Mr. Evans, a Freemason from a nearer point came, it was said, to withstand me. But, upon hearing my lecture he did not see just where he could take hold to advantage, and so, as the boys say, he did not attempt to "catch on."

The second night, as report had it, I was menaced again; but my would-be antagonist after he had heard me, as Patrick would express it, "was spacheless." The M. E. minister, who had taken a degree in Masonry, was so anxious to hear the lectures that he adjourned his revival meeting for one night and came to hear the second lecture.

I rehearsed the lecture to him in his study, and he was so impressed with the great wickedness of Masonry that he renounced it to me. He said that soon after he was initiated a Mason told him that Masonry had been revealed. He looked at "Freemasonry Illustrated," by Pres. J. Blanchard, and said that Freemasonry was correctly revealed as far as he had gone. He joined in the introductory religious service the second evening with the Christian minister, and aided me in the distribution of Anti-masonic tracts at the conclusion of my lecture.

When I left Delta it was the lodge against the church—all three of the pastors having committed themselves against Masonry.

The next day, while detained for a little while at Winfield Station, I began distributing tract literature. One of the gentlemen who received them came up to me and introduced himself as a United Presbyterian minister. He was pastor of a church about twenty miles south of Clevelaud, Ohio, and by invitation Mr. Ronayne worked two or three degrees of Freemasonry in his church and also at several other places in that vicinity. This U. P. minister said that one of the High Masons told him that Mr. Ronayne worked the degrees correctly. But that Freemasonry did not seem so ridiculous when it was given in the lodge as it did when Mr. Ronayne worked it publicly. He said they were more solemn when they worked it in the lodge.

The protracted rain storm broke up my arraugements for lectures in the churches of Revs. Robb at Linton, and Dill at Mediapolis. I have spent some time in the city of Burlington, looking up the situation there and distributing litrature. I am now engaged in working up a convention at Winfield for the organization of a Henry County Christian Association, opposed to the saloon and to the lodge. It will be held, if the Lord will, in Glass's Hall, in the village of Winfield, on the 21st and 22nd of January, commencing at 7 P. M. It will be prefaced by a course of lectures in the Lutheran church of Sweedsburgh, on the evenings of the 18th, 19th and 20th of January. Truly, the harvest is great and the laborers are few. Let us pray that the Spirit of God may come on us, and that the truth may be made mighty to pull down those strongholds of Satan—the lodge and the saloon, Satan's two masterpieces—the one for debauching the religion and the other for debauching the morals of men.

Men and woman of Iowa, let us arise for the defense of our homes against the saloon: and for the defense of our churches against the lodge. If we will by faithful reformation and humble confession prepare the way of the Lord, we may expect great tidal waves of revival to sweep over our land, and such multitudes to be gathered to Christ that the question whether this land shall be a distinctively Christian land will be answered. C. F. HAWLEY.

FROM THE ILLINOIS AGENT.

DEAR EDITOR:—On Sabbath morning I scattered Cynosures through the hotel, went to the African M. E. church, Rev. H. De Pugh, pastor. He requested me to preach for them at night which I agreed to do. After services I returned to the hotel, where after dinner I took a seat in the parlor, Bible in hand, to prepare my mind for preaching at night. While thus engaged a gentleman entered and took a seat near me. Presently the landlady, whose husband was a Freemason while liviug, entered also and seated herself before me. A long conversation followed, during which the man declared I was never a Mason, but had been reading Morgan's book, but when challenged to give his oath to the opinion, he called me a perjured man, and became enraged.

At this, the landlady resumed the conversation. She remarked that she believed that the virtue professed by the members was possessed by the institution of Freemasonry and the men who composed it. Then she remarked, "I should think you'd be afraid to expose the secrets of Freemasonry. I thought there was a penalty if any one did so."

"And you think I should be afraid of a good institution?"

"Well, they have a law, and if you are a Freemason you have violated it. I don't see why they don't enforce it, or how you dare to violate it."

"I see why they do not enforce it," I answered. "It is because the majority of Freemasons are better than the institution to which they belong."

I preached to as interesting and interested an audience of colored people at night as I have addressed for a number of years.

On Monday morning I noticed indications which led me to draw the inference that my room was more acceptable than my patronage, and my suspicions were soon confirmed in a conversation with the landlady.

JAN. 14th.—I have just finished my round of the business houses in which—where they would let me, I placed, rather left, a copy of Weed's letter, and the tract on "Freemasonry in the Family," in each. The craft are very mad. If I was ordered out after enduring the abuse of a set of them once, I was four or five times. But let the truth cut. The sword is in God's hand.

I saw the Signal editor this morniug, who promised to publish an article for me if I'd furnish it. The man who paid my fine is practically a seceded Odd-fellow, has taken his card from the order, a man of wealth and influence. He is a leading member of the Presbyterian church, teacher of the Bible class, and I believe a Christian.

Previous to going to prayer meeting last night I gave out Weed pamphlets in the hotel. When I returned, I had the whole houseful down on me, landlord and all. But the latter did not attempt to order me out of doors. When the smoke had cleared I had killed a would-be candidate for Masonic degradation, and two others took sides with me against the landlord and two Masons who supported him. The would-be candidate for Masonry and another exclaimed with horror when I quoted the Entered Apprentice oath. He declared that I had saved him from ever going into it. But the whole towu is a babel on this question.

An Urbana lady said to me this morning, "I wish you'd come to Urbana as soon as you are through with this city." This city is in a terrible condition between saloons and lodges. I wish you'd send me another supply of Cynosures. If I cannot sell books "without a license" I can try to obtain Cynosure subscribers, when the distribution of tracts is completed. Pray for me: the looks of malice and hatred and the imprecations of the wicked show me that I have need of the presence and help of Christ. Yours in the Gospel, G. T. DISSETTE.

AT THE FRONT IN OHIO.

PIQUA, O., Jan. 15th, 1886.

DEAR CYNOSURE:—I am now at the home of Rev. J. W. Kerr, pastor of the United Presbyterian church of this place. Since my last letter I have visited Georgetown, Ithaca, Arcanum aud Laura. At Georgetown I found our friends engaged in a series of protracted meetings. Not wishing to divert their minds from the most important question, I did not attempt any lectures. Several subscribed for the Cynosure and requested that I return in the near future, promising their prayers and support.

At Arcanum I found a few friends. The United Brethren church here is in a very cold, back-slidden state. Many members belong to secret societies of different kinds. Two leading members recently attended a gambling concern gotten up by the Odd-fellows and Knights of Pythias, and gambled for groceries. What will be next? At Ithaca I found the United Brethren "standing by the old landmarks." They have seen the spirit of the lodge too long to receive its members. Special care is taken in this matter. They very gladly opened their doors for a lecture, and gave me a full house.

Last evening I spoke in the Uniou church at Laura. The uight was cloudless and the attention good. A German, who had belonged to some half dozen different lodges, came forward at the close of the lecture and stated that he thought I was right. At least I told it as it was in his lodge. I left him to tell the boys all the secrets. I expect to take the evening train for Lockington, going on to-morrow aud spending the Sabbath at Sidney as already announced.

I am indebted to Mr. David Stoner, John Rasor and Rev. J. Swank, of Jamton, Rev. S. Lambert and M. Blackburn, of Georgetown, Mr. Cromwell, of Ithaca, Mr. Joseph Yant and Mr. Earnest, of Laura,and others for kind entertainment and assistance iu our work. W. B. STODDARD.

—Pres. J. Blauchard writes from Knoxville, Tenn., that wherever he has crossed the track of Bro. H. H. Hinman, the first N. C. A. missionary to the South, he finds left a good impression both of the lecturer and of the cause he represented.

—Secretary Stoddard returned from Itaska Monday morning, and reported a much better feeling in the place than when he first visited it a few months ago, so that a lecture is desired in the church which was almost closed against him before. He will go to Iowa this week, and leave Champaign to Bro. Dissette. Possibly Bro. M. N. Butler, who is expected from Wisconsin may go to the aid of the Illinois agent.

CORRESPONDENCE.

DEATH OF MR. FEE'S DAUGHTER.

BEREA, Ky., Jan. 11.

EDITOR CYNOSURE:—Your readers have known something of the bodily affliction of my dear daughter Bessie. She came down early last spring with chills and fever, and not long afterwards there were evidences of tubercle in the long. On the 9th iust. she fell asleep in Christ. She had attained to the age of twenty years and nine months. From childhood she was conscientious in all her acts, and kiud in her associations. At the age of teu, on profession of her faith iu Christ as her Saviour, I baptized her. During her sickness she ofteu expressed her desire "to live to do good"—"do good to all." She often expressed her "trust in Jesus as her Saviour;" her belief "that she was a lamb of his fold, and that he would keep her."

Pres. Blanchard visited her twice during his stay in Berea. His visits and prayers were a great comfort and good to her. She often talked about her relation and association with Christ immediately after separation from the body. She sang parts of the hymns, "Abide with me: fast falls the even tide," "Fade, fade each earthly joy," "Jesus is miue," aud "Jesus I my cross have taken, all to leave aud follow thee." A few minutes befose her death she said. "Tell mother to come. I want her to talk to me about heaven."

'Tis hard to for us to give up one to us so dear, and with such a prospect of future usefulness here. Our comfort is that she is with one who can do more for her than we can, that ere long that loved form of hers will be still more beautiful, and that she will have an eternity of usefulness. JOHN G. FEE.

MASONIC OUTRAGES.

909 PENN. AVE., N. W., WASHINGTON, D. C., Jan. 9, 1886.

DEAR CYNOSURE:—In reply to Bro. Callender's "Open Letter," I would say that I fully appreciate the importance of the tract suggested. I feel complimented by the request that I write it, and should be truly glad to do so were it not that my present duties over-reach my abilities and I need rather to curtail than add to them. I would suggest that Miss Flagg, of Wellesley, Mass., would prepare such a tract with greater facility and more excellence than any one I know of. It is eminently proper for her to undertake it and make it something more than a tract. It might be to her other excellent works what "The Key to Uncle Tom's Cabin" was to Mrs. Stowe's original production. H. H. HINMAN.

REFORM WORK WITH EDUCATORS.

BLANCHARD, Iowa, Jan. 8th, 1886.

EDITOR CYNOSURE:—I preached National Reform twice to the students of Park College, Mo., on Sabbath, Dec. 20th. It is a Presbyterian college from top to bottom. There is no book the students are so well drilled in as the Bible. They repeat the Shorter Catechism in concert. They have three Bible readings a day. I never saw 340 more intelligent, wide-awake students than filled the Presbyterian church on Sabbath.

I addressed them in the morning on the impossibility of our government being neutral on such questions as: Is God of supreme authority? Can government ignore the Sabbath? Should the Bible be the text-book of morals in our public education? In the afternoon I preached on Bible republicanism compared with that of the United States. I traced the central idea of the American party platform, viz., opposition to oath-bound secret societies, to a feature of Mosaic legislation contained in Lev. 5: 4, 5: "Or if a soul sware, pronouncing with his lips to do evil or to do good, whatsoever it be that a man shall pronounce with an oath, and it be hid from him, when he knoweth of it, then he shall be guilty in one of these. And it shall be when he shall be guilty in one of these things, that he shall confess that he hath sinned in that thing." I showed that this was an anti-secret plank, which would sweep Freemasonry out of any government. Some of the students were struck with this interpretation of Scripture, and came to my room afterward and enquired if that Scripture would require a man to renounce the lodge.

I was glad to see the Statesman and Cynosure on file in the reading room. There is also an anti-secret library in the college.

I called on Rev. J. D. Gehring, who resides just out of town, well known as an interesting correspondent of the Cynosure. He is a Presbyterian minister and is a radical opposer of secret societies. President McAfee said before the students, as he introduced me on Sabbath, that I seldom addressed such an audience, for at least seventy-five young men before me would in a few years be preaching the Gospel, and seventy-five young ladies present would be ministers' wives.

This college impressed me as an excellent place for a student. The atmosphere is pervaded by the best religious influence. It is rarely that a student can remain long out of the church. At seven in the morning they all gather in the chapel for a Bible reading. One of its best features is that each student spends three hours a day in physical labor. This gives health and mental vigor. It would have saved the writer a year lost in college by ill health, for want of exercise, to have attended such an institution. Connected with it is a large farm, also shops and printing establishment. Thus mingling physical with intellectual labor, the student by paying an initiation of $25 is able to work his own way and graduate with as high a grade of scholarship and with sounder physical development than students in other colleges. The ladies attend to all the departments of housekeeping for this large family of students, and all go out with an experimental knowledge of life's practical duties. With seventeen penniless students Prof. McAfee began this college ten years ago in an old hotel building and twelve acres of ground. Now it has grown to a college of 340 students, taught by a faculty of nine professors, and all maintained at a cost of over $20,000 a year. It has almost no endowment, but its support is earned by the students and contributed by the friends of Christian education.

I spent Monday morning at the Ministers' Alliance in Kansas City. About twenty ministers were present, but they had no time to hear me on National Reform. Dr. Bell had a long paper to read on the importance of observing Christmas. I agree with Bro. R. Loggan that all such festivities in churches are the devil's institutions, to blind Christians to great and vital issues. I visited the universities at Lawrence and Lecompton, Kansas, and arranged to have lectures on National Reform before the students. The following Sabbath I presented the cause from the pulpits of Bro. M. F. McKirahan and Bro. H. W. George of the United Presbyterian and Presbyterian churches in Topeka. Monday I addressed the Ministers' Alliance in the Y. M. C. A. parlor, and Tuesday and Wednesday attended the Annual State Teachers' Association in the Capitol building, where I had several opportunities of presenting National Reform. Near 800 teachers were in attendance. Now while fierce winter is raging without, I am enjoying the holy days in the bosom of my family. M. A. GAULT.

BIBLE LESSONS.

STUDIES IN JEWISH HISTORY.

LESSON V, Jan. 31, 1886.—Daniel and Babylon. Dan. 1: 8-21.

GOLDEN TEXT.—Wherewithal shall a young man cleanse his way? by taking heed thereto according to thy word.—Psa. 119: 9.

Open the Bible and read the lesson.]

COMMENTS ON THE LESSON BY E. E. FLAGG.

1. Daniel an example to reformers. vs. 8–16. (1) In courage. No weak spirit would have made such a proposition in a heathen court, where only ridicule and persecution could be expected to follow. (2) Faith in God. The reason why all Christians are not reformers is because so many lack this element. Pastors, while secretly sympathizing with some unpopular cause, would not be deterred from espousing it by fear of losing their pulpits or even their influence, if they realized that God was able to make up to them all and more than all. They would rather say with St. Paul, "None of these things move me." (3) Courtesy and gentleness, Daniel's request to the church is a perfect carrying out of the Christian rule, "Be pitiful; be courteous." He does not obtrude his religious principle with offensive ostentation. He only begs the reasonable favor of having these principles fairly tested by their practical results. Still another lesson may be derived from his example. The Christian who prays for clearer revelations of God's will must not make that prayer futile by feeding on the dainties or drinking from the intoxicating cup of the world. Those amusements which by general consent have been given over to the worldly and the frivolous; everything which trenches in the least on the devil's ground, should be to the Christian like the king's meat—unclean.

2. Temperance gives us strong minds in healthy bodies. vs. 17–21. While the knowledge and skill of Daniel and his companions was a direct gift from God, we must remember that such a gift needed the channel of a pure and healthy body through which to flow. Rich and unnatural delicacies are not only ruinous to physical health and beauty, but often create a craving for strong drink, and have a direct tendency to rouse sensual appetite. We never expect purity of a wine-drinking youth or man. It is true that many great poets and brilliant writers have been votaries of the wine cup. But what has been their end? Byron died at 37, prematurely old from dissipation. Burns at an equally early age from a fever caught by lying out all night in a drunken fit. And the list might be indefinitely extended. But we read that Daniel continued even to the first year of King Cyrus. Seventy years, through all the changes and intrigues of life at an idolatrous Eastern court his strong, healthy body, carried him, till the close of the captivity and the return of his people to the Holy Land.

LIGHT FROM THE WORD.

What did the Lord do for others as well as Daniel? Gen. 39: 21; Prov. 16: 7. How can we gain wisdom? 1 Kings 3: 12; Jas. 1: 5, 17. What must be kept under? 1 Cor. 9: 27; Ro. 8: 13; Col. 3: 5.

From Peloubet's Notes.

"He would not defile himself with the king's meat," i. e., food; not limited to meat in our use of the word. It was the food appointed by the king for those who were in training for the court. He would be defiled or polluted by it, because (1) the dietary might comprise articles of food, such as the flesh of swine, hares, etc., which the law interdicted to the Israelites (Lev. 11); (2) the flesh may not have been perfectly cleansed from blood, so as to be allowed by the Jewish law (Deut. 12: 23–25). Jews, even at this day, have their own butchers, and regard as unclean meat prepared in the ordinary way.—P.

"Devout Jews were very scrupulous in obeying these requirements (Ezek. 4: 14; Acts 10: 14). Probably much of the food prepared for the table of the king of Babylon was such as the Jews regarded as unclean." (3) Probably that which rendered the royal provisions unclean in Daniel's estimation was the universal custom among the heathen of consecrating each meal by offering a portion of it to their idols, and pouring out libations of wine in their honor.—Todd.

"Nor with the wine." The four captives were tempted (1) to do that which was debasing and degrading; (2) to disobey the law of their God; (3) to deny their religion and God, and yield to the popular idolatry of the day; and (4) thus to be recreant to their country, and their nation, and all the promises and hopes which belonged to them.

They were tempted by their change of names (see ver. 5). Their own names were all compounded with the name of God, Daniel, "God is my judge;" Hananiah, "God is gracious;" Mishael, "This is as God;" Azariah, "God is a helper." The new names were compounded with those of royalty or of idols. Daniel was named Belteshazzar, "favored by Bel or Beltis;" the great Babylonian god and goddess. Hannaniah was named Shadrack, "Royal scribe or circuit of the sun," an object of worship. Mishael was named Meshach, "Royal guest or the Ram," a name of the sun god among the Chaldeans. Azariah was named Abed-nego, "Servant of Nego, i. e., Nebo, a Chaldean god. These changes were doubtless made as one means of transforming them into real Chaldean heathens, and to lead them to forget their country and their God.—P.

The "favor and tender love" were the gift of God, doubtless, (1) by influencing Ashpenaz by his Spirit; (2) by producing in Daniel attractiveness of person and manners, promising talent, and a noble and loveable character. If there is tender love, there must be something worthy of that love to awaken and hold it.—P.

"Give us pulse to eat." "Grain, vegetables, herbs, opposed to flesh and more delicate food."—Gesenius. What Daniel wanted was a vegetable diet, with water instead of wine. "And water to drink.,, This, also, was a most interesting and important experiment, to show that wine was not necessary to produce healthfulness of appearance, or manly strength and beauty.—Barnes.

By the diet they took they had their minds in some measure more pure, and less burdened, and so fit for learning, and had their bodies in better condition for hard labor. So they readily amassed all the learning of the Hebrews and the Chaldeans.—Josephus. Then, too, such self-denial, such courageous adherence to principle, would strengthen their character.

"God gave them knowledge." Some of it was direct from him, as the visions; some was by blessing their daily studies, by opening doors to wider knowledge, by aiding their thoughts and judgments; also by keeping them from those vices and prejudices which weaken the mind.—P.

"Skill in all learning." In science, in astronomy, in literature, in philosophy, the Chaldeans at this time stood at the head of the world. The great library of Assurbinapal founded at Nineveh B. C. 650-620, containing over 10,000 tablets of clay written upon and hardened into stone, and from the ruins of which we are now deriving much of our knowledge of the age of Daniel, shows something of the extent of learning in this age.

"And Daniel continued even unto the first year of king Cyrus," who conquered Babylon. At this time the proclamation was issued by him to rebuild the temple at Jerusalem (Ezra 1: 1), B. C. 534. Thus Daniel continued in influence and authority, at different times, during the seventy years' captivity. It is not necessarily implied that he did not live longer.—Barnes. Indeed one of his prophecies is dated in the third year of Cyrus (10: 1). It is commonly believed that when the captives returned, he remained in Chaldea, probably detained by his high employments in the Persian empire, and that he died either at Babylon or at Shusan.—Barnes

LODGE NOTES.

—The long pending dispute between the two branches of the Order of United Workmen came before the Supreme Court of Iowa at Des Moines, Dec 18, and was probably definitely settled. The order in Iowa divided on the question of paying death losses outside of the State. The objecting Workmen organized a grand lodge known as the State Grand Lodge, while the other side returned allegiance to the Supreme Grand Lodge. Each side claimed the name of A. O. U. W, and the franchises of the order in Iowa. Suit was brought by the Supreme Lodge of affiliation to compel the State Grand Lodge to surrender the name and property and cease exercising the functions of the order. This was heard before Judge Utt at Waterloo, who decided in favor of the Supreme Lodge. The defense appealed to the Supreme Court, where Judge Utt's decision was set aside and judgment rendered in favor of the State Grand Lodge. Counsel for the Supreme Grand Lodge then filed a motion for a rehearing, which the court this morning refused, holding, as heretofore, that the order is an insurance organization and not a fraternity; that the Supreme Lodge is a citizen of Kentucky, and must make the necessary deposit with the State Auditor if it does business in Iowa; and that the State Lodge is entitled to the name of Workmen in the State. It is said by Des Moines Workmen that suit for injunction to restrain the Supreme Lodge adherents in Des Moines from longer using the name or exercising the functions of that order here will be immediately commenced.

—It is said that the Odd-fellow lodges in Germany and Switzerland do not attend the funeral of a deceased brother in regalia, fearing from public prejudice that it will injure them in business. It will be a happy day when public sentiment in America shall be equally strong against these lodge conspiracies.

—The lodge press reports that John F. Burrell, former Gra. Sec., Grand Lodge, Illinois, committed to Chester Penitentiary for defalcation, is released, having served his time. This is a mistake. Burrell was pardoned out by Gov. Oglesby, his lodge brother.

—The Fraternal Legion is a secret endowment and beneficial society, organized under the laws of Maryland, with headquarters in Baltimore. It has a branch camp or so in Chicago.

—The Heptasophs are out of their short dresses. It is stated that the Seven Wise Men constitute an independent order, which is rapidly spreading all over the United States. It is able to stand alone as an independent order, and therefore does not seek a union with any other.

—The Odd fellow Grand Lodge of Indiana have paid during the past year $30,422.86, for widowed families $416.80, for educating orphans $8,537 81, for the burying of the dead $3,355.95. They have 25,214 members and 495 Rebekah degree (ladies) members. Illinois has 664 lodges and 32,346 members. Total revenue, $274,725.58; paid for relief $49,-427.81. Foot up this mock charity.

—A study of the "Proceedings of the Nineteeenth Annual Encampment of the Department of Illinois, G. A. R," gives us facts like these: The total membership in good standing at the commencement of the year 1885 was 20,015. During 1884 the gain in membership was 8,767, more than 50 per centum. The total loss during the year was 4,199. Of this uumber 3,142 were "lost by suspension." It is safe to say that the greatest number of these were suspended for non-payment of dues. Yet these dues are so small, that these figures prove how little there is in the order to sattsfy a rational man.

—Excelsior Odd-fellow lodge has been so renowned for its benevolence that though it has but 140 members it is worth over $20,000 in real estate and bonds.

—An Egyptian Freemason lately died, and some of the Chicago 32 deg. Hiramites who represent the "Nobles of the Mystic Shrine" issued the following: In accordance with an edict issued by the Imperial Council of the United States of America, and directed to all illustrious potentates, rabbans and shareefs throughout the jurisdiction of the western hemisphere and in honor of our revered brother illustrious noble, Ali Mahmoud Pasha el Falaki, Grand Shareef, Al Mubazzi of Al Kaheerah Temple, of Cairo, Egypt, under the domain of the Crescent; Medinah Temple, of Chicago, will for the period of three crescent moons, within the sacred sanctuaries of its temples, observe with fitting ceremonies and decorations, as is the ancint Oriental custom, this departure to the unseen temple.

—In one of the Chigago evening papers we have seen notices for eight different lodges of the order of "Ancient Hibernians" to meet on the Sabbath day. Alongside was a notice for a picnic on the same day of the cigar-makers' secret union.

AMERICAN PLATFORM.

ADOPTED AT CHICAGO, JUNE 20, 1884

Viewing with deep concern the corrupt and unsettled condition of American politics, and witnessing with alarm the fearful prevalence of caste and clannisbness by which our citizens are being arrayed in hostile bands, working secretly to compass political ends, a method directly and powerfully tending to increase corruption, to destroy mutual confidence, and hasten disruption and bloodshed; and having no hope of adequate remedy for these evils from existing parties, and believing the foundation of a party based upon the fundamental principles of tbe Declaration of American Independence, both inevitable and indispensable:

We, therefore, a portion of the American people, believing with our fathers that we have our rights and liberties, not from men or parties, but from God; believing in the Christian marriage, and not in Mormonism; believing in the religious democracy of the New Testament, and not in the despotism of the lodge; believing, also, with our Scotch and English ancestors, that civil government, though ordained in God, is "founded in nature, not in grace," and, therefore, that all have equal civil rights; while we abhor the idea of enforcing religion or controlling conscience by human laws and penalties as calculated to make hypocrites, not Christians, and savoring of the days of priestism, tbe fagot and the stake, we at the same time as firmly believe that atheism and priestcraft are twins and both alike foes to human liberty and welfare. We further most firmly believe that a government without God has none but lynch power, and is destitute of all legitimate authority to maintain civil order, to swear a witness, to try a criminal, to hang a murderer, to imprison a thief; and while we consider government without God as a mere usurpation, we regard all religions and worships invented by men, and so having no higher than human origin, as mere swindling impositions and cheats. We believe in peace and in national arbitration as a means of perpetuating it; yet we as profoundly believe that the bravery and blood of our soldiers have bougbt us the peace which we enjoy, and we honor the memories of the dead and will be just to the claims of the living; and we take up and prolong the strain raised by the women of this country: "For God, and home, and native land," and trust that this beautiful and patriotic motto will soon be not only echoed by their voices, but sustained by their votes.

We, therefore, solemnly adopt and present the following as containing a brief synopsis of the principles of our government, by which we intend to be governed in casting our votes. We hold:

1. That ours is a Cbristian and not a heathen nation, and that the God of the Christian Scriptures is the author of civil government.

2. That the Bible should be associated with books of science and literature in all our educational institutions.

3. That God requires, and man needs a Sabbath.

4. We demand the prohibition of the importation, manufacture, and sale of intoxicating drinks.

5. We hold that the charters of all secret lodges granted by our Federal and State Legislatures should be withdrawn, and their oaths prohibited by law.

6. We are opposed to putting prison labor or depreciated contract labor from foreign countries in competition with free labor to benefit manufacturers, corporations or speculators.

7. We are in favor of a revision and enforcement of the laws concerning patents and inventions; for the prevention and punishment of frauds either upon inventors or the general public.

8. We hold to and will vote for woman suffrage.

9. Tbat the civil equality secured to all American citizens by Articles 13, 14 and 15 of our amended National Constitution sbould be preserved inviolate, and the same equality should be extended to Indians and Chinamen.

10. That international differences should be settled by arbitration.

11. That land and otber monopolies should be discouraged.

12. That the general government should furnish the people with an ample and sound currency

13. That it should be the settled policy of the government to reduce tariffs and taxes as rapidly as the necessities of revenue and vested business interests will allow.

14. That polygamy should be immediately suppressed by law, and that the Republican party is censurable for the long neglect of its duty in respect to this evil.

15. And, finally, we demand for the American people the abolition of electoral colleges, and a direct vote for President and Vice President of the United States.

J. BLANCHARD. HENRY L. KELLOGG.

CHICAGO, THURSDAY, JANUARY 21, 1886.

"But the fearful and unbelieving, and the abominable and murderers, and sorcerers and idolaters, and all liars have their part in the lake which burneth with fire and brimstone." Rev. 21: 8. All these classes exist at the present day, and the ministers who see people consumed, and churches disintegrated by secret lodges, and do not dare to warn men against them, head the horrid list.

Col. Keating, of the Memphis Appeal, bought out Albert Pike's interest in that paper, and is doing a noble work with it, though he loosely belongs to the lodge. Pike initiated Indians, fought at Pea Ridge, and is now translating Asiatic religions, which have so degraded the masses that millions toil without a full meal's victuals from one year to another.

The man or party whose merit is in ancestry or records of the past, is on a down-grade which has no ascending. Such is the Republican party.

THE AMERICAN MISSIONARY ASSOCIATION is doing a magnificent work in the South. No other mission board, (though all of them are doing good) has half its opportunity. When slavery fell in the South, opinion burst its fetters too, and every good cause is lifting up its head: and Satan has not had time to intrench himself as he has in Northern society. So, asone expresses it, "The sun is now rising in the South."

Judge McFarland of Memphis says: "I like the blacks better than I do ourselves. Had we been the slaves, we should have taken revenge. But they guarded our homes while we were in the war."

EDITORIAL CORRESPONDENCE.

MEMPHIS, Tenn., Jan. 19, 1886.

At the Mississippi at last. I can now look back over three interesting schools, from this city with the Egyptian name, signifying, "The foundation of good.' May this city of Memphis prove the foundation of good to the South and to the whole United States. The schools are

BEREA COLLEGE, KNOXVILLE AND NASHVILLE.

I am writing in Lemoyne Institute, which I will consider in due time. Of the three collegiate schools above named, Berea and Nashville are born of the American Missionary Association and manned by radical Congregationalists; Knoxville is United Presbyterian. The three are dissimilar, yet the same.

"As the mountains were round about Jerusalem," so mountains are round about these. Unlike the Green Mountains, which overlook the colleges of Vermont, the Kentucky and Tennessee mountains are not a solid range, but seem dropped down promiscuously to diversify this fair Southern landscape. In the scenery surrounding them, these three schools are alike beautiful; and, if so fair in mid-winter, what must they be when green-crested groves are waving like living creatures, and vocal with the robins which stay here all winter, waiting for spring. These schools are alike moral and mental lighthouses, built for the colored people, and manned by godly men and women: and they are alike prosperous.

But here their likeness ends. Berea, like the first churches of Christ, knows no nationalities or sects. The other two are for colored students. Knoxville is United Presbyterian, and as it cannot hope to Presbyterianize the colored masses, it is the most disinterested and distinctly missionary of the three. One is made proud of and hopeful for his race to look in upon these schools, so disinterested and so true. The old hard-shelled sects are softening and blending under the same blessed light and heat which animates and warms these schools.

Here, in Memphis, on the day of my arrival, the meeting for the week of prayer met in a Cumberland Presbyterian church; was led by a Methodist judge, who called on Prof. Steele, of Lemoyne Institute to close with prayer. This would have seemed more like Pentecost and the millennium but for the fact that if colored faces had appeared there, other faces would have turned pale. But the fact that Prof. Steele, who represented the colored school here, was called to lead that meeting in prayer, a meeting composed of Presbyterians, South and North; Methodists, Cumberlands, and Disciples, and Lutheran, that such a man should have lead them in prayer, with acceptance, shows that "God is marching on," and that Christ's children are yet to be one.

THE PRESBYTERIAN CHURCH SOUTH,

perhaps, has more of the old elements of aristocracy and slavery in it than any other denomination or other church here. I called on their leading pastors in Knoxville and Nashville, and hope to see them here; and to call on Dr. Palmer (whose father I knew) in New Orleans. They are a noble looking company, both ministers and people; and the administration of their government and defence of their doctrines necessitates an intellectual superiority. But though the Presbytery of Nashville consists of thirty churches and some twenty-five ministers who are supported and paid by the people as their moral and religious guides, a prominent member of that Presbytery told me that neither Masonry nor prohibition had been so much as mentioned in that body! Although their people pay their money by thousands into the lodges, and the saloon question is rocking the State.

PROHIBITION IN TENNESSEE.

I called on the gentlemanly editor, George W. Armistead, of the Issue, a new temperance paper in Nashville. I have read the first number of the second volume, now just out. It is scholarly, Christian and exceeding able. It gives a powerful argument by Dr. Herrick Johnson of Chicago. I learned that prohibition in this State is non-partisan at present, though no one expects it to remain so. Next year they hope to vote on inserting prohibition in the State constitution, and they appeal to Republicans and Democrats to submit it to the people. When once prohibition is in the constitution, the formation of parties advocating and opposing the law will be inevitable, and I have conversed with no one who doubts that the ultimate result will be prohibition.

THE LEMOYNE SCHOOL.

This excellent school, under the care of Prof. Steele, was founded by Dr. J. F. Lemoyne of Washington, Pa., who was an Abolition candidate for the Vice Presidency along with J. G. Birney. Prof. Steel has been here some thirteen years under the care of the American Missionary Association. The students here now are some 300 under ten instructors, six or seven of them females. The rooms are crowded, and many have been turned away for want of room. The faculty are hoping for a revival, but the week of prayer is closing in the city with no special tokens of a reviving. There is talk of a visit from Moody and Sankey; but if they come the colored people are so kept aloof that special meetings must be held for them, if they get to hear Moody. The colored people are in the street-cars, but have not yet gotten into the white churches, or white lodges. But they have lodges enough of their own. A barber has just been in to shave me who was in the school at Atlanta, Ga. He tells me he has paid upwards of sixty dollars for initiation into five or six secret societies; and is now dropped for non-payment of dues; but his wife holds on in the Eastern Star woman's lodge. These debasing social curses keep late hours, and when the lodges turn them out into the dimly lighted streets, there are but two doors open, the saloon and the house beyond it! And, with minds fuddled with the lodge foolery and debauched by devil-worship, thousands go into "the way to hell going down to the gates of death." Some of the schools enforce rules forbidding the lodges to their students; but the opposition is weak, and papers like the Golden Censer, Rockford, Ill., are taken by the reading colored people, who thus hear little and read nothing on the subject of their chief danger. The Grand Army craze has drawn in some excellent members of these faculties, and thus they marry one, and morally support the whole family of dark orders.

A white pastor here, whose church will seat a thousand or fifteen hundred, says he would be happy to have me preach for him to-morrow; but the weather is cold, and he shall not open the large audience-room, and would be ashamed to have me preach to thirty or forty people! I expect to preach in Bro. Countee's church Sunday (to-morrow) and Monday nights, and will report results. Col. Keating, of the Memphis Appeal, is a superior editor of a strong daily paper. He bought out the interest of Albert Pike in it, which was a God-send to Memphis. And as a prohibition revolution is inevitable in the State, salvation may come in the wake of it.

Jan. 13!—I came in to Memphis from Nashville, the last of last week and today, (Tuesday, Jan. 13th) I start for Natches. The good Dr. Lemoyne established the "Lemoyne Normal Institute" here, and I have been sheltered in its home during the terrible "cold wave." God "scattereth the hoar frost" over the entire South "like ashes, and who can stand before his cold?" Every city and town south of Mason's and Dixon's line, now has secret altars outnumbering the churches of the God of the Bible. Time was when such a terrible blast such as the South has seldom or never before experienced, would be considered a mark of God's displeasure. It is no less so because a blinded and besotted people do not see it. Byron in his matchless apostrophe to the ocean describes results, though ignorant of causes:

> "Assyria, Greece, Rome, Carthage; where are they?
> Thy waters wasted them while they were free,
> And many a tyrant since. And their decay
> Hath dried up realms to deserts."

This is poetry. The simple prose fact is that these "realms" once had the true God, a Decalogue and a Mediator. They forsook him and substituted lodge-worship without Christ, without a Decalogue, and wrath came upon them to the uttermost. So will it be in the United States unless God is entreated for us.

THE LEMOYNE IMSTITUTE.

This interesting institution is under the care of Prof. A. J. Steele, assisted by a faculty of twelve, counting himself. A majority of the teachers are ladies, and most excellent young women they are. The students number between three and four hundred; and when they are somewhat advanced, they disperse all over the South and teach in the log school -houses the lowest strata of the colored population. If you get grammar and arithmetic, or even reading and writing into the heads of these colored children, they will find means to free themselves from fraud and oppression by the illiterate whites; and the educated whites are fast coming over on the side of humanity and patriotism.

THE MEMPHIS APPEAL

is the leading paper in Memphis. Col. Keating, its editor and proprietor, though a Mason himself, and personal friend of Jeff. Davis, bought out the interest of Albert Pike in the paper. He said, "Pike fought a battallion of Indians at Pea Ridge:" a fact well known to the readers of the Cynosure. Col. Keating's large paper has this morning, (Jan. 13), a full report of my speech in Rev. Mr. Countee's church, to a large audience Monday night, last: and the Colonel has given me two courteous notices as the associate of Dr. Lemoyne and Owen Lovejoy. There is something marvelous in these Southern men. They remind me of the Roman centurion whose faith Christ commended, and the saying of Cornelius that, "In every nation he that feareth God and worketh righteousness, is accepted of him." Col. Keating is a descendant of Scotch-Irish Presbyterians, and is a very superior man.

THE SCHOOLS.

I now look back over Berea, Knoxville, Nashville, and am here in Memphis. The retrospect fills me with holy joy. The schools supported by the State Legislatures are taught by the colored runners for State politicians; and no one need be told what those teachers are. The work of the American Missionary Association, and the United Presbyterians at Knoxville, is thus important beyond words to describe.

WORK IN MEMPHIS.

I have preached twice on the Sabbath and lectured on Monday night. The lecture is printed in the Appeal. Rev Mr. Countee was out on Sabbath evening at his church for the first time since October last. A small pistol ball or buckshot is under the skin and resting on his skull. I felt of it. His aged mother pleads with desperation that he will not go to night meetings. Rev. Mr. Imes is now gone to arrange for me a meeting with brethren Brinkley and Countee, and then I am off for Natchez. I will report the result of our consultation to the Cynosure.

I am overwhelmed with a sense of God's goodness to me in this journey. Here in Lemoyne Institute "Home," my every want has been anticipated, and if the faculty were my own sons and daughters, they could not have been kinder or more attentive. The wisdom and discretion of Prof. Steele, has won for the Institute the respect and good will of the entire city.

Yesterday, I called on Col. Keating, Mr. Johnson, Judges Eldridge and Prince; and also on Mrs. Meriwether and Mrs. Lacon, who devote themselves to temperance labors. Their Tennessee organ is The Issue at Nashville. It is a powerful sheet. I have promised an article for it. Mrs. Meriwether conducts the W. C. T. U. department in it. I will strive to recur to this paper again. Yours in Christ,

J. BLANCHARD.

BISHOP WEAVER AND THE U. B. COMMISSION.

The Telescope of last week prints the report of the Commission appointed by the Fostoria General Conference on revision of the Confession of Faith and the Constitution of the church. The report is accompanied by an "address of the Bishops" to which the names of J. Dickson and Milton Wright, very significantly do not appear. The address is intended to allay opposition and smoothe the way for the adoption of the report, which must be voted on by the churches generally. But if this is not enough Bishop Weaver adds an article replying to his opponents and also preparing for the acceptance of the report. The center of all this strife in the denomination which has come now to this issue is in the article of the constitution on secret societies. The commission has provided for their indefinite admission to the U. B. communion in these terms:

ARTICLE III.

Sec. 1. We declare that all secret combinations which infringe upon the rights of those outside their organization, and whose principles and practices are injurious to the Christian character of their members are contrary to the Word of God, and that Christians ought to have no connection with them.

The General Conference shall have power to enact such rules of discipline with respect to such combinations as in its judgment it may deem proper.

Explain it as they may the leaders of the "liberal" wing know very well that this means a general opening of the doors of the church to the lodge. In some conferences it will be a source of prolonged controversy, for it is not difficult for an honest and intelligent man to prove that all the orders would come under ban. But will the majority of the next General Conference enact a rule forbidding them?

Bishop Weaver, like Ahab before Elijah, charges the loyal members of the church with all the trouble of the past, all the revisions of Discipline, etc. The hypocrisy of his letter is patent. Loyal Brethren he well knows would never have modified or changed their wholesome law but for the unholy crusade which he has led for years against it.

JEFF DAVIS ON MASONRY.

The letter from the chief of the late rebellion in reply to the tract of M. N. Butler was referred to last week and appears below. Although membership in the lodge is denied, yet the friendship expressed for the order is just as good or better for Masonic purposes. and possibly there is some concealed explanation of the denial. The following is the dispatch from New Orleans:

Some one, in order to annoy Jefferson Davis, recently mailed to him at his home in Beauvoir, Miss., a sheet headed, "A Summary," containing the following paragraph:

"Benedict Arnold, first traitor to American liberty, learned his patriotism in Hiram Masonic Lodge, No. 1, New Haven, Conn., and died a Freemason in good and regular standing. Aaron Burr, another traitor to the Government, plotted his treason in Royal Arch cipher, and also died a Free and Accepted Mason in good and regular standing. Jefferson Davis, a Free and Accepted Mason, led the great Rebellion, and the fact did not even taint his Masonic standing, but did have much to do in securing his pardon."

Mr. Davis enclosed the sheet to his friend, Col. J. L. Power, of Jackson, Miss., secretary of the Grand Lodge of Mississippi Masons, with the following letter:

"Dear Sir:—I have received, with others of a similar character, the inclosed sheet, having a paragraph underlined to secure my attention, and I send it to you to attract your notice. Under the head of "Summary" is a concentrated distillation of malice and mendacity. The main attack seems to be against the fraternity of Free and Accepted Masons, and, as many slanderers have heretofore done, the writer avails himself of a sectional prejudice existing against me to point his attack against Freemasonry, and in less than the three underscored lines perpetrates at least as many falsehoods.

1. I, Jefferson Davis, am not and never have been a Free and Accepted Mason.

2. As a citizen of the Sovereign State of Mississippi I obeyed her commands, and as sovereigns cannot "rebel," neither led nor followed a rebellion, great or small.

3. As I had no Masonic standing, the assertion that it was not tainted hy the imputed act of mine rests, not upon a fact,hut upon a misrepresentation.

4. Masonry could not have had "much to do with securing my pardon," as I have never heen pardoned, or applied for a pardon, or appealed to Masonry to secure to me the benefit of the writ of haheas-corpus that I might have the constitutional right of every American citizen to he confronted with my accusers.

To exclude a possible inference I will add that my father was a Mason, and I was reared to regard the fraternity with respect, and have never felt any disapproval of it other than that which pertains to every secret society. Viewing Freemasonry from a distance, and judging the tree by its fruits, I have believed it to be in itself good. Respectfully and truly yours.

JEFFERSON DAVIS."

We remember how Mr. Davis has repeatedly and emphatically denied the well-proven incidents of his capture. With that, put his view of rebellion above, and then we can tell better how much credit to give his denial of Freemasonry. If he never was a Mason any more than he was a rebel, as his own letter indicates, his denial of the lodge goes for nothing; so that the public may reasonably still believe that he was a Freemason with Toombs and others of the Southern leaders. His own and the denials of the lodge aside, the evidence is in favor of such a conclusion. Of course the lodge denied any association with him, as they always do with Arnold. The letter at least proves that he is not an Anti-mason by several degrees.

REDDING & CO'S. REVELATIONS.

Redding & Co., of New York, who advertise themselves as "the only firm doing a strictly Masonic business in this country," and as "carrying the largest and most complete line of Masonic books and goods ever issued," still advertise the cables, hoodwinks, slippers and other paraphernalia of lodge initiation, than which there could be no stronger proof of the truth of the oft-denied revelations of Masonry. In their book catalogue Hayden's "Washington and his Masonic Compeers" is marked as "out of print" along with Mackey's "Mystic Tie" and Oliver's "History of Masonic Persecutions." The natural inference is that these books have lost their value to Freemasonry and are dropped from their libraries. The "Mystic Tie" was outlawed years ago. It was a most powerful witness against the lodge, showing it to be in unquestioned affiliation with savages, pirates, robbers, traitors, etc. Hayden's book on Washington is compelled to print the Snyder letter, which is Washington's own contradiction to much of the falsehood contained in other parts. In a special list of "very rare Masonic works" out of print and but few for sale are, Mackey's Lexicon, Jurisprudence and Cyclopedia, several of Oliver's books, and the "Masonic Advocate" "a complete defense of Freemasonry against Anti-masons and Fanatics." To allow such a book to die out is to confess that the "Anti-masons and fanatics" are getting the lodge under their feet, since they have evidently not subsided under its attacks.

Redding & Co. are the publishers of "Ecce Orienti" and other instructors in the secret work of the lodge in cypher, supposed to be intelligible only to Masons. The reason for publishing these books is thus given:

"For the want of an authentic instructor it is well known that members are using the open exposes and other spurious works, published in this city and Chicago. As these works are highly erroneous and are sold alike to the public at large and to the Fraternity, their use is corrupting the ritual and subversive of Freemasonry. To arrest this evil and meet the demand for a work of this nature that is both accurate and legitimate, these instructors have been prepared."

The endorsement of the very high Masonic authority, A. L. Rawson, 33-degree, and chief of a Masonic exploring society in the Holy Land, is given to these cypher expositions. Why should not his testimony be used in connection with those of Lowe, Ronayne, Doesburg, Slooter, Hoek and others, in proving the accuracy of the Chicago publications?

This catalogue gives also a list of the Masonic Grand Lodges in the United States with the number of subordinate lodges and members in each. The affiliated Masons in the United States, according to this table, number 554,541, the non-affiliated 445,-674. As we remarked in giving the statistics of Masonry in the Cynosure of November 26th, 1885, there are probably more Masons out of the lodge to-day than in it. Josiah H. Drummond of Portland, Maine, whose reports are frequently quoted by the lodge, numbered the Masons of the country at 579,826 in 1884. Less than ten years ago they were over 600,000. Let us keep watch of this thermometer of lodgery and pray that it may continue to fall and not cease.

—Elder S. Knapp of Joliet, Ill., faced the keen winds of last week to the Cynosure office to secure a number of copies of the Bernard number of the paper, which he regards one of the best. He was acquainted with David Bernard who once preached in his pulpit.

—Rev. H. Woodsmall, agent of the Baptist Missionary Society, has just removed to Memphis from Iuka, Miss. This change was the result of a request from the West Tennessee Baptist convention, requesting the society at New York to permit this change of headquarters. The Memphis pastors appreciate Bro. Woodsmall's labors, and wish to have him nearer them.

—Bro. Loggan, the Kansas agent, writing from Whiting, Jackson county, Jan. 5th, says that on the previous Sabbath evening he spoke to a large audience in the Baptist church at that place, but a severe snow storm with high wind prevented a meeting on the next evening. He gave six lectures and preached four times in December. He has lately sent in a large list of subscribers for the Cynosure.

—The sound and sensible advice of Rev. Halleck Floyd respecting the national church congress, confirms the opinion we have for some time held. Steps are being taken by the delegates already appointed to secure: 1, a representation from every ecclesiastical body which is in sympathy with our testimony against secret societies; and 2, the co-operation, assistance and advice of representative men in the leading denominations which have no such testimony. The time, the place, and the topics for discussion will have to be decided upon later.

—Bro. Countee, of the Tabernacle Baptist church, was out to an evening meeting, for the first time since he was shot, to hear the address of Pres. J. Blanchard in his church on Monday evening the 11th inst. This address as printed in the Memphis Appeal will appear in the next Cynosure.

—The New York Witness prints a very able letter from Bro. Countee, giving a succinct history of the lodge war in Memphis from its beginning July 18th, last. The parsonage for which many of the Cynosure readers have contributed is yet unfinished, lacking doors, windows and plastering.

—In our church news will be found a list of the meetings to be held by Mr. Moody in the South during the next two months. A glance will show how important and valuable would be a testimony such as the evangelist gave lately at Altoona, Pa. It would powerfully influence thousands of colored people to forsake the sin of lodgery for a whole-hearted consecration and service for Christ.

—Thanks to Rev. C. Bender, of Fenton, Ill., for the information that the Rock River conference of the United Brethren church appointed delegates at its meeting in Dover, Ill., last September. Himself and Rev. E. D. Palmer were named and will be most cordially welcomed in the convention.

—The Times of Champaign, Ill., published last Saturday a letter from Bro. Dissette replying calmly and forcibly to the editorial croakings of another paper of the city which is managed by a Knight Templar Mason. Bro. Dissette is yet working prudently in a more private way to sow the good seed of truth in that city. The Times is in good humor because one of its editors has just got a government clerkship worth $2,000 a year in Washington. May its favorable disposition continue.

—The Band of Hope connected with the Chicago Christian Association mustered some fifty bright-eyed children, boys and girls, white and colored, for their sleigh-ride. During their exercises in Carpenter Hall, Bro. Houck, who has been assisting the N. C. A. more or less for some years, made them a little speech in which he gave them some good instruction from his experience in the Masonic lodge.

—The Memphis Daily Appeal, the leading journal of that city, published last week Wednesday the address of Pres. J. Blanchard in the Tabernacle Baptist church on the lodge. In an editorial note it says:

"The Rev. Dr. Blanchard of Illinois spoke again in the Tabernacle last night on the evils of secret societies. A report of his first lecture at the same place, on the same subject, appears in another column. The doctor is right in part. The secret society business has become a craze with the colored people, and one by which they often become the victims of designing knaves."

Such an opinion from so influential a source must have a good effect in Memphis, and be of more real aid for Bro. Countee and his co-workers in turning back the tide of opposition and abuse than several ordinary meetings.

—The Interior, of this city, has so happy a note on the prisoners' friend, W. D. A. Matthews, whose work in supplying the States prisons with good reading is well known through all the land, that it is good to repeat here: "Brother Matthews, of Onarga, Illinois,—the one-armed good-litrature missionary,and his good wife,do not make a luxurious living, but on the whole, they have a better time of it than many who do. They do not wear fine clothes, but what they do wear are warm and clean. If they do not have much of a table variety, they bring cheerfulness and contentment to it. In addition to his really very large work of collecting and distributing good litrature in prisons, alms-houses and among the poor, Brother Matthews and his wife have always some waif of a child, or two or three of them, under their care. A month or so ago he came into the Interior office, leading a little cast-away about four years old, who had a widely-parted hare-lip, and wished to get him into the Presbyterian Hospital for an operation. We gave him a letter to Dr. Stehman. On the day before New Year he came back with the little boy, the lip so nearly perfect, so smooth, and free from scar that nobody seeing the child would suspect that anything had been wrong with it. So fine an operation would be regarded cheap at a large sum of money by parents having means and solicitous for the beauty of their child. The little fellow was afraid of the editor-folk, but Matthews kissed away the tears and carried him away on his one arm—God bless both. He will now find the waif a home, and then gather in another. No wonder Mr. and Mrs. Matthews, though poor people, have happy lives."

THE HOME.

GOOD LORD, DELIVER US.

From all the toils of evil men,
From words unkind and hearts untrue,
From secret griefs which may have been,
From cherished guilt of every hue—
Deliver us, good Lord,
According to thy word.

From all the leprosy of sin,
That inward fretting, deep and dread,
That loathsome plague which spreads within,
And living, counts us with the dead—
Deliver us, good Lord,
According to thy word.

From wandering feet which slip and slide
Far from the blessed paths of peace,
From every ill which may betide,
From all that stays our sure increase—
Deliver us, good Lord,
According to thy word.

From setting any alien god
Within the shrine which is thine own,
From scattering incense far abroad
Which should be offered at thy throne—
Deliver us, good Lord,
According to thy word.

From all assaults of death and hell—
All base allegiance with the foe—
Beguilings which we see full well,
And subtle snares we may not know—
Deliver us, good Lord,
According to thy word.

From all half-hearted fealty,
Oh! gracious Father, Helper, Friend,
From all ingratitude to thee,
Who lovest thine own unto the end—
Deliver us, good Lord,
According to thy word.

By thy divine and perfect grace,
The love which makes us one with God,
By the compassion in thy face—
Deliver us, good Lord.

By all the lame thy hand has healed,
By all the suffering ones restored,
By all the blinded eyes unsealed—
Deliver us, good Lord.

By every heavy drop of blood
For our redemption once outpoured,
By every hour on shameful rood—
Deliver us, good Lord.

By every throb of mortal pain,
By every trembling nerve and cord,
By all thy loss—our dearest gain—
Deliver us, good Lord.

Since thou for us didst deign to die,
O Son of Mary, Son of God,
Then by thy last expiring cry—
Deliver us, good Lord.

CHURCH FESTIVITIES.

Sometimes wagons and trains are loaded down so heavily that they are compelled to unload. The church needs to do a great deal of unloading. The Lord of Hosts is crying out, "Loose thyself from the bands of thy neck, O, captive daughter of Zion." She has gone into captivity to the world. The devil's locomotives run her machinery. Her fuel and steam supplied through these ungodly church festivals.

Oh, what shameful trickery and nonsense the churches resort to, to raise funds to remove the indebtedness of some church, or to secure an organ. For instance, money-safes in the shape of jugs are carried to the church, a nickel dropped in. Then they must pay from twenty-five to fifty cents, for the privilege of breaking the jug and securing the nickel.

Each lady is weighed and sold for two cents a pound. A person drawing a ticket with a lady's name who weighs one hundred and twenty pounds must pay $2.40 for a supper.

A fishing pond is constructed behind a screen, and men will pay ten cents, "just for the fun of it," to fish up some old cast off slouch hat, or an old pair of socks, and other things too ridiculous to mention.

In some corner the pastor or class leader stands auctioneering off some India rubber dolls; while a group of ungodly men laugh over the obscene language, on the plea of the pastor and church, "we must get up something to amuse our young folks;" another group are buying in a pound wrapper, for twenty-five cents, what proves to be nothing more, perhaps, than a pound of salt, sand, sawdust, or a bunch of old rags.

Others are cramming their stomachs, trying to get the worth of their money; boys throwing bones, cakes, candies, and pop corn at each other's heads; making such a litter on the floor, and defiling the house of God in such a manner, as to cause the vilest sinner to denounce such abominations.

The answer of a Mohammedan priest illustrates their policy. "A hog (which is a very vile thing in the eyes of a Mohammedan) once entered a Mosque. The people were horrified. What was to be done? The ingenuity of the priest was equal to the emergency. He told the people that the temple was so holy that the moment the hog entered the door, it became holy while in there, but became as vile as ever when it passed out." They say, "The church is a religious institution. These things are gotten up to support the church. There's no harm in them; some of our bishops give it their sanction, the thing's holy because carried on for holy purposes." They rob Peter to pay Paul. Do evil that good may come. Call light darkness, and darkness light, while the eternal woe of God hangs over their guilty souls.

The God of our Bible can carry on his church, without selling lemonade, pea-nuts, dime lunches, or cakes, or getting up an oyster, mush and milk, or pop corn supper. He can do "exceeding abundantly, above all we ask or think" on this line. Hallelujah! Away with such sacrilegious shams, such contemptible indirection, such silly, selfish devices in the name of Christ!—Vanguard.

A SERMON ON DANCING.

THIRTY REASONS WHY DANCING IS WICKED.

The Baltimore American some time since said: At the Second Christian church, corner Dolphin and Etting streets, the Rev. D. R. Wilkins preached yesterday on dancing. After reading for a text Judges 21: 20, 21, he said that in the days of such men of God as Wycliffe, Tindale, Coverdale, Cranmer, Bede, Huss, Ridley, Luther and others, the question with the Christian was not, "How much can I be like the world and be saved?" or "How near can I come to being lost and escape?" "How can I best serve my Master?" was the burden of his heart. But now Christianity has grown both popular and fashionable, and, therefore, not a few Christians are continually asking the question, "What harm is there in dancing? I read in the Bible of people dancing who were good people. What harm can it be?" I believe it is a great evil, and is doing more to demoralize the church and society than the Christian mothers who are training their children for the ball-room have any idea; and while I see no reason why Christians should engage in dancing, I see many why they should not.

1. It is nowhere commended in the Bible.
2. Although engaged in by men and women of God at times under the old dispensation, it was never sought as a pleasure as now, but was one of the ways they praised God in the time of victory.
3. The sexes did not dance together as now.
4. The New Testament tells of but one case of dancing, and that in purpose is more like the dancing nowadays than any dancing in the whole Bible. This dancing, which was engaged in by the daughter of one of the wicked women of the Roman empire, resulted in the death of John the Baptist.
5. Dancing is not done in the name of the Lord. Paul says do all things in the name of the Lord.
6. Dancing is revelling, and Paul says they who do such things shall not inherit the kingdom.
7. It is heathenistic. The less of civilization a nation has, the more dancing.
8. It leads to expensive and gorgeous dress.
9. It unfits the mind for reflection.
10. It leads to the violation of the laws of health, among which is the great loss of sleep and too much exercise.
11. It keeps people up all night who are too delicate to sit up with the sick or dying for one hour.
12. The ministers of the Gospel cannot engage in it without doing serious damage to the religion of Christ.
13. Our Saviour did not dance.
14. The apostles and early Christians did not dance.
14. Dancing is of ill repute.
16. No one dying sends for a dancing master to comfort him.
17. No good dancer wants it placed on his tombstone when dead that "he was an expert dancer."
18. No one dances in memory of a departed friend.
19. It creates or fosters a love for the fatal cup.
20. It tolerates a freedom between the sexes, both immodest and often resulting perniciously.
21. Hundreds of blasted characters can date the first step of their ruin to their first visit to the ball-room.
22. It creates jealousy between man and wife, between lover and lover.
23. It requires no brains to be a dancing-master.
24. It weakens a person morally.
25. It weakens his influence for good.
26. It is a useless art.
27. No Christian can attend balls and keep unspotted from the world.
28. We cannot let our light shine at the ball-room.
29. Dancing is not a healthful exercise.
30. We are to glorify God in our bodies and spirits. Can we do it by dancing?

TRAINING FOR THE THEATER.

A few days ago we heard an ardent Methodist mother describe the way in which she dressed her little boy of seven, who was to take part, with other children, in a public representation of an "Old Folks' Concert," for the benefit of the church. She became quite eloquent as she pictured antiquated garments of various colors, and the way in which she contrived to fashion a wig for her darling's head. She furthermore gave her listeners an animated account of the dress and appearance of all the other little boys and girls, what a charming tableau they formed on the stage, how admirably her little darling conducted the performance, waving his baton like an experienced director, and how the people applauded with delight. The whole performance took place in the church, before a crowded audience. We could not help asking her how she could explain her denunciation of theater performances, and the strong language used by their pastor and all his people against the same, in the face of such a performance by her own child, dressed by her own hand, and trained for a public exhibition.

Is it not strange that churches, Sunday schools and homes should cultivate and applaud the dramatic instincts of children, and afterwards look surprised and horrified when they take to the stage, while others crowd to see them?—The Lutheran.

SKATING RINKS.

Keep out of the skating rinks. I could mention a number of cities—four at least—where I have labored, and found the same sad lamentation from the lips of mothers and fathers, who would say to me, "I wish you would talk to my daughter;" "I wish you would talk to my boys; I have said all that I can to keep them from going to such places, but they will go."

I have heard from the lips of three physicians the statement that a large proportion of the girls from twelve to sixteen years old who attend these rinks have, as a result, blasted lives before them. Many a heart-broken mother would give all she ever possessed could she place her daughters and her sons where they were before they attended the rink. People may call skating rinks places of innocent amusement, and perhaps they might be made so, but they are not. I consider them, next to intemperance, the greatest curse of our land to the young.

I was at a home for the fallen the other day, and the matron told me that the skating rinks were the greatest curse to the city and to the young, and that the majority of young girls under her charge were girls who were once pure and good, but had been allowed to attend the rinks and now see their folly when it is too late. The following from the Minneapolis Tribune will give some idea of what men in authority think of these things:

"The rapidly shortening days are bringing us nearer the season when an effort will be made to revive the skating-rink craze; and in view of the fact, the following statement made by the chief of police of Coney Island, N. Y., is worth noticing: 'My private books,' so says Captain McKane, 'will substantiate the fact that nine out of ten of the girls between the ages of fourteen and sixteen arrested by my officers on the island late at night, during the past summer, have upon private questioning by me, dated their fall from the time when they commenced to frequent skating rinks. This is no exaggeration,' he continues. 'I used to think, when I read of clergymen denouncing the rinks for the immorality that was bred there, that the rinks were harmless, and that those gentlemen were inclined to sensationalism. Now, from the stories told me by these young girls right here in my private office, I can appreciate the truth of their remarks, and realize the danger that surrounds the young female in such resorts. I esteem this fact of such importance that I think it ought to be known.'" Keep out of these death traps.—Mrs. H. L. Hastings in Safeguard.

HE DID NOT THINK.

Down in the fire-room of a big steamer that was lying recently at the wharf in New York, a young man was told to do a certain piece of work in connection with the pumps. There were two pumps close together in the room, one was for feeding the boiler, the other to use in case the ship should take fire. This latter one was capable of throwing a volume of water as large as a man's body.

The young man, who had been employed on the ship for three years, and had always proved himself efficient and reliable, was the only person left in charge of the fire and engine rooms. After the order was given to attend to the work necessary for the engine pump, he removed the cap from the fire pump. In a moment he discovered his error, but the force of water was so great that he could not replace the cap on the pump. Without a word he ran to the deck, jumped ashore, and took the cars for his home in another State. The water soon filled the hold of the vessel, and in spite of every effort the steamer sunk. Thousands of dollars of damage was done to the engine and furniture of the cabin and state-rooms, and the vessel was prevented from sailing on the usual date, thus causing another loss to the owners, and great inconvenience to the public.

What do you suppose was the man's answer to the questions as to the cause of the accident? "I did not think."

You see, he had not learned, when a little boy, to give his whole attention to the work in hand. "Whatsoever thy hand findeth to do, do with all thy might." And to do with all the power of which a man or woman is capable, it is necessary to learn to give full attention when a child, whether it be work or play; if it is worth doing at all, it is worthy of the whole attention. Never make "I did not think" an excuse for a stupid action. It is the part of wisdom to think.—The Christian Union.

HEARING WITH THE EYES.

Sixty years ago a baby was born in Connecticut; a beautiful, bright boy, with a hundred beguiling ways, and very dear to the heart of his father. But, after a few months, a cloud came over the household. Something was wrong with the child. He was so wide awake and quick in many ways that at first his loving friends could not believe that he was deaf.

"There! didn't you see him look and laugh when I called his name?" they said to each other. "He has such a wise little head that he gets busy thinking and doesn't always notice what is going on. He is only absent-minded."

There came a day, however, when even the hoping father gave up hope. Somewhere in the delicate harp of hearing there was a missing chord, but a very loud noise close in his ears made a faint vibration, and the father tried to persuade himself that by this obscure and deadened road he might, with great pains, be taught to speak. But the child drew back and put his hands to his ears in such evident distress that this hope, too, failed. Then the father, who was a devout Christian Friend, withdrew to the solitude of communion with the Spirit, pleading that his spirit might be taught to teach his child how to talk. One day, as he held the boy on his knee, his own fatherly heart overflowing with love and pity, he said, tenderly, again and again, "Papa's little boy." The little one looked earnestly at his lips and repeated, "Pa—pa—pa." In that moment the father believed he had the answer to his prayer. And from that hour he began the efforts to teach the boy lip-reading, which were so successful that today no one would guess in talking to him, by his manner in listening or replying, that this man was born deaf and dumb.

When the baby had grown to be a boy, and the boy was already almost a man, two men were riding together in the cars, and one, who was connected with the public schools in one of the New England States, said to the other that he had heard of a certain boy, deaf from his birth, who had been taught by his father to speak. The other replied, "That boy is a neighbor of mine. Come home with me and you shall see him."

Accordingly he went. The good Quaker was in the house, but his son was not.

"It is true," said he, "my son can hear with his eyes; and here he comes. Step to the door with me."

As they stood there together, the father motioned to the son to stop where he was, two hundred yards away in the path, and began to talk in a whisper, his son replying aloud. The stranger looked on in amazement and hardly able to believe this was not by a previous understanding. "Ask him," said he, "if he has ever been a-whalin'?" The father repeated the question with his lips.

"No," answered the son, "I've never been a-whalin'."

The stranger was convinced, and the marvelous story went abroad. Soon after, the Hon. Horace Mann came to see the talking mute, and offered him a free education. But the youth was delicate in constitution, and thought open air exercise better for his health, so he declined this generosity, and today is a farmer raising small fruits for market in an Eastern city.

We heard him tell the story of his life a few evenings ago, and also heard him read, with perfect modulation and feeling and emphasis, the 35th chapter of Isaiah. When he came to the verses: "Then the eyes of the blind shall be opened, and the ears of the deaf shall be unstopped; then shall the tongue of the dumb sing," it seemed like a prophetic foreshadowing of his own experience.

The beneficent work which began in the pitying love of a father, has gone on and is consolidated in a school for the congenital deaf. A sort of pictorial alphabet has been invented, by which the position of the lips and tongue is shown; and so any word, whether understood or not, can be correctly pronounced by even a child.

Among the unfortunates in this school is a boy who was sent, when six years old, by the Poor Commissioners from some country town. The child's father had died a drunkard, his mother was in jail, and he was a confirmed thief. A gentleman sleeping in the house heard, one night, a noise under his bed. He looked, and found this poor little wretch picking the pockets of his clothes.

Was ever a more hopeless case? Ever a life more ruined from its beginning? The son of criminals, deaf and dumb, and with no moral sense, inherited or taught.

It is six years since then. This boy to-day is as honest and conscientious, and as good a boy as can be. He has a fair education already for his age, and can read even the shadow of his teacher's lips thrown upon a wall.

So much of the marring of this earth has been done by the hand of man, thank God, we can see in work such as this, how much he is doing, also, towards the mending of it.—Congregationalist.

TEMPERANCE.

THE RILEY MEMORIAL.

The veteran temperance lecturer of Rochester, N. Y., whose tall form towered among the young men at the Chicago convention of the American party in June, 1884, like a snow capped peak among the foothills, has added to a long life of usefulness a crowning gift to the reform which has for so many years called forth his eloquence and devotion. General A. W. Riley will not be forgotten by those who attended that convention. His portrait and a biographical sketch appeared about the same time in the Cynosure. The Rochester Morning Herald of Saturday, Jan. 9th, contains the following account of a magnificent donation by General Riley to the W. C. T. U. of that city. May the old hero live to see his munificence rewarded in the overthrow of the drink traffic in our loved America.

[Erom the Herald.]

General A. W. Riley of this city has signified his readiness to make a donation to the Women's Christian Temperance Union of this city through its representative Rev. J. D. Requa. General Riley has sent the following communication to Mr. Requa:

"A MEMORIAL GIFT from General A. W. Riley of the city of Rochester, N. Y. to the Woman's Christian Temperance Union of the same place.

"This gift is for the advancement of the cause of temperance in Monroe county, N. Y., and also at large, as in the judgment of the said Woman's Temperance Union will best accomplish the desired work. It is a donation of 135 building lots, comprising eight acres of land. This property is situated about half a mile east of the city line and the East Rochester round house; and is a quarter of a mile west of the Brighton station on the Central railroad, at which several trains stop daily. The street cars now run on Culver park within three-quarters of a mile of the plat, and it is in contemplation to run them to Brighton village and near the property herein named. The land above described is under a lease of five years which will expire April 1, 1887. Otherwise it is free from all incumbrance.

"I, A. W. Riley, hereby hold myself in readiness to convey the said property to the said Woman's Christian Temperance Union by a deed of trust, with the priviso that only the income from rentals or interest shall be used, for the purpose named, for ten years. After that time the said Woman's Christian Temperance Union shall have sole control of the same.

"I, A. W. Riley, will also provide that parts or all of the said property may be sold or leased, as the said Woman's Christian Temperance Union may deem best, to secure the largest revenue from the same for the purpose above named."

This is but one of the many evidences General Riley has given of the sincerity of his interest in the temperance movement. The estimated value of this gift is $10,000. General Riley is one of the few survivors of early workers in the temperance movement. He began his labors for this reform fifty-nine years ago, and has in his time been considered one of the ablest advocates of temperance. He was associated in his work with E. C. Delevan of Albany, William E. Dodge, of New York, and other prominent temperance advocates. At present he holds the position of vice-president of the New York state temperance society. The office of president of that association has been tendered him on more than one occasion, but he has always declined accepting it. In forwarding the interests of the temperance reform movement General Riley has traveled thousands of miles and has made 8,000 addresses on the temperance question. During the many years which he gave to this work his travels extended from California to Plymouth Rock, and from Quebec to New Orleans. He passed two years in Europe and made 400 addresses there. We must not fail to mention another fact, that must afford especial comfort now to the old chieftain in his age and retirement. Six thousand drinking men took the pledge by means of the medals he had prepared. General Riley was not a hired agent of any society, but paid his own expenses.

General Riley is vigorous and hearty despite his advanced years. He has fully recovered from his recent illness and bids fair to outlive many of his younger friends in the movement.

MAD DOGS AND MAD MEN.

Where one person in this country dies of hydrophobia, a hundred or more die by tobacco poison—in the use of cigars, cigarettes, or the pipe. In smoking, death does not occur as speedily as in the case of hydrophobia. The bite of a mad dog does not always result in death; neither does indulgence in smoking or chewing. But, in both cases, there is damage to health and danger of life. Tobacco smoking is undoubtedly a poisonous, and therefore, a dangerous practice, and like, in its results, to the use of intoxicating drinks, which are also poisonous. Some constitutions can bear more tobacco poison or alcoholic poison than others. We admit that, in some cases, poisonous liquids, drugs and minerals may be properly used as a medicine, but, in ninety-nine cases out of a hundred, no one can safely indulge in the use of cigars or of intoxicating drinks. All are more or less harmful, and if immoderately used will surely result in an early death. If moderately used the damage will be sure but less apparent. The bite of a mad dog is a frightful matter anywhere, and there are probably a hundred deaths caused thereby, yearly, in this country. If one man dies of hydrophobia, a whole community is greatly excited and scared. "Run for your life!" "Load your gun!" "Kill all the dogs!" is then the loud and immediate cry in all directions. But not a ripple is made, nor hardly a word is uttered, if ten thousand men and women die in a year of delirium tremens, or a thousand die of tobacco poison. It is fashionable to drink and to smoke; and hence, thousands of young men begin very early to indulge in these practices, with scarcely a thought of the risks and dangers of such indulgence. Pale faces, yellow skins, bloated bodies, restless nights, loss of appetite, heart disease, and poor health generally, do not seem to frighten them in the least. They will send for medicine and the doctor, but will not stop tampering with poison. They will drink and smoke, smoke and drink, day and night, year in and year out. That is the fashion, and that is law, no matter what the consequences are, "I'll take the risks," is the answer to all entreaties of friends to stop. If you should see a mad dog in the street you would run for your life, as we have before said, to get out of his way. If you see a man drunk in the gutter, you simply say: "Poor fellow! I pity him. His friends ought to take care of him," etc. If you hear of the death of a man by cancer, which was caused by smoking, you are at first startled, but never stop a day yourself the beastly practice of smoking. A hundred thousand deaths, at least, are caused every year by indulgence in drinking and smoking; and those who are trying to stay its dreadful results are called bigots and other worse names. While we flee from mad dogs, malaria, small pox, and typhoid fever, let us wake up and banish forever such senseless and dangerous indulgences as liquor drinking and smoking. People are beginning to wake up on this subject. Congress is talking about temperance, and physicians are speaking plainly about smoking. Tobacco is more dangerous in its direct and indirect effects on human life than would be the letting loose of all the mad dogs in the nation. Alcoholic drinks destroy more lives yearly among us than do hydrophobia, small pox, and all sorts of fever combined. These dangerous and deathly practices should be stopped everywhere if possible. Life-saving on the ocean is now regarded as a proper theme for discussion in Congress and elsewhere.

Why should not life-saving on land be also considered? As to the shameful drinking and smoking practices in the halls of Congress, it is high time that both were by law suppressed. Let us have pure air, clear heads and a healthful example in the Capitol and at the White House. While we do well to attend to mad dogs and prevent infectious diseases, let us not forget or fail to check the immense, the untold loss of life caused by a worse madness in the shameful indulgences we have named.—Independent.

LITERATURE.

SONGS FOR THE TIMES. Over two hundred choice and spirit-stirring songs, odes, hymns, etc., dedicated to Humanity, to Temperance, Prohibition, and to happy Homes against the Crime and Misery-breeding Saloons. By Geo. W. Clark. Pp. 142. Price, by mail, 35 cents. Published by the author, 238 Second St., Detroit, Mich.

This new edition of the Reform Song Book, published by our "Liberty Singer," is embellished with a fine portrait of the author from the engraving house of Blomgren Bros. of this city. The venerable author has so sung his way to the hearts of the supporters of our reform east and west at our conventions that this last book hardly needs a commendation from the Cynosure. The pages of the first song book published several years ago especially devoted to the lodge have been turned over to the National Christian Association, and form a small reform songster of lively and entertaining music. Their place has been given to a choice selection of home music, many new and some old favorites, which give perhaps a more popular character to the book. A little investment in these books and brief practice would help many temperance and literary societies to give a new interest to their meetings. They will bear a trial.

The Missionary Review opens its first number for 1886 with an article on the latest and in some respects the most interesting mission field—the Congo. Many particulars are given which awaken the prayer and zeal of the church for the nations in this vast interior region of the Dark Continent. Wm. Taylor and his devoted faith missionaries have already opened stations for nearly 400 miles in the Congo region. The hindrance of expensive missionary church buildings to the work of Christ in India, "Women and Foreign Missions," "Appeals to Disciples everywhere," "Authority of Mission Secretaries," letters, foreign missionary reports of the Presbyterian denominatsons and Lutherans in the United States make up the bulk ot this excellent number.

Vick's Floral Guide for 1886, the pioneer seed annual of America, comes to us this year a real gem, not a dry list of hard botanical names, but over thirty pages of reading matter, among which are articles on roses, house plants, cheap greenhouse, onion culture, mushrooms, manures, young gardeners, and very interesting reading, followed by about 150 pages containing illustrations, descriptions and prices of seemingly everything the heart could desire in the line of seeds, plants, bulbs, potatoes, etc. It is a mystery how this firm can afford to publish, and really give away, this beautiful work of nearly 200 pages of finest paper, with hundreds of illustrations and two fine colored plates, all enclosed in an elegant cover. Any one desiring goods in this line cannot do better than send 10 cents for the Floral Guide, to James Vick, seedsman, Rochester, N. Y. Deduct the 10 cents from first order sent for seeds.

The remarkable letter written by Lincoln to Grant just before the opening of the Wilderness campaign, closing with the words, "And now, with a brave army, and a just cause, may God sustain you," is in the possession of Gen. Badeau, and has been reproduced in fac-simile for the February Century, to accompany Gen. Grant's article, "Preparing for the Wilderness Campaign." Gen. Badeau states that Gen. Grant was "always careless about his papers, and private or semi-official ones were often thrust into his pockets, where they remained for months. In some such way Mr. Lincoln's beautiful God-speed was mislaid. Gen. Grant had forgotten its existence, until, in 1866, I came across it in my researches for my history of his campaigns. He was so pleased at the discovery, or recovery, that he gave me the original letter at the time."

—A Chinese princess, who is said to have been converted to Christianity, observes the Sabbath with all her family, and has destroyed all her Buddhist books and relics.

—The total contributions of the forty churches of the New York Presbytery, with their 19,619 communicants, during the past year were $848,442.71, of which $88,149 was for home and $85,742 for foreign missions, $442,025 for congregational and $167,238 for miscellaneous purposes.

THE CHURCHES.

—Mr. Moody opened his meetings on Sabbath in his old church on Chicago avenue. He was greeted with a great audience of 2,500, and spoke with his old energy, to which the enthusiasm of the congregation happily responded.

—The Record of Christian Work announces the following as the programme of Messrs. Moody and Sankey's meetings, following the Christian Convention held in Cleveland, Ohio, last week: Chicago, Jan. 17–25; Knoxville, Tenn., Feb. 2, 3 and 4; Memphis, Tenn., Feb. 5–7, New Orleans, Feb. 9–21, inclusive; in the second week there will be a Christian Convention of three days; Houston, Texas, Feb. 26–28; Mobile, Ala., March 2,3,4; Oxford, Miss., March 6–7; Selma, Ala., March 9–14; Atlanta, Ga., March 16–18; Savannah, Ga., March 21–23; Jacksonville, Fla., 26–28; Charleston, S. C., March 30 to April 4; Columbia, S. C., April 5–7; Norfolk, Va., April 9–11; Lynchburg, Va., April 13–15; Charlotte, Va., April 16–18. "We feel sure," says the Record, "that Christians all over the country will follow them with prayer for the blessing of God upon them in this important campaign. It is the winter season, and men will have time to give to their meetings. Probably tens of thousands of people will listen to their voices for the first time, and may we not look for the gathering of thousands upon thousands into the church, and the quickening of all the churches, where these meetings have representatives.

—Charles Herald, one of the sweetest of our Gospel singers, and for four years chorister of the Chicago Avenue church in this city, has lately gone to Dakota to enter business.

—Mr. Sankey is not assisting Mr. Moody in his meetings this week in this city. His health is poor, and he has lately borne the heavy grief of burying his oldest son.

—The Gospel meetings held at Quincy, Ill., by D. W. Potter, a Chicago lay evangelist and business man, resulted in the conversion of some 425 persons.

—Sam Jones, the Southern evangelist, is now in Cincinnati.

—Major Whittle, the beloved elder of the Moody church, Chicago, with his singing companion, McGranahan, are now holding meetings in Atchison, Kansas. They have more calls in that State than in their power to attend. At Lawrence, during November, some 350 to 400 converts were reported and like blessed results followed their visits to Wichita, Leavenworth and Topeka.

—The Chapin Home for friendless native women has been opened at Ahmednagar, India, by the mission of the American Board. The poor women are taught to cut and make native garments and to act as nurses and servants, by which they support themselves. They are also taught to read and write and have daily Christian instruction.

—Few people know how much the Presbyterian church has done and is doing for our American Indians. Our own branch of the church alone has sent first and last 400 missionaries to the Indians, and about $550,000 of Presbyterian money have been expended in their behalf, and as much more has been appropriated by the government to assist the schools which have been carried on by our missionary teachers.

—A St. Louis despatch, Jan. 3, says: "Jut Jun, a Chinese laundryman, professed Christianity to-day and was taken into the Pilgrim Congregational church. Five other Chinamen witnessed the ceremony. Jun wore his Chinese clothes and pigtail."

—English colporteurs in Persia are meeting with success in distributing the Bible in the Persian language. Even Mohammedans are pleased with Bibles offered them in their own tongue.

—An elderly couple recently died in Indianapolis from suffocation by coal gas because, it is said, they declined to do any work on the Sabbath, and hence could not adjust a fallen stove-pipe.

—The third anniversary of the Jerry McAuley Cremome Mission in New York was recently held. Mrs. McAuley, widow of "Jerry," is said to carry on his work with great earnestness and wisdom.

—The practical work being done by the Central W. C. T. U. of Chicago is shown by their having in successful operation two free kindergartens, two industrial schools, one Sabbath-school, a nightly Gospel meeting, and two day nurseries, where each month between 400 and 500 children of working women are cared for.

—A wonderful revival work has been carried on in Alexis, Ill., under the auspices of the W. C. T. U., led by Mrs. A. M. Palmer, the national evangelist. Merchants, lawyers, and leading busiuess men signed the pledge, and the Presbyterian church received over sixty additional new members through her efforts.

—Miss Frances E. Willard, President of the National Woman's Christian Temperance Union, has accepted, with Mrs. Dr. J. H. Kellogg, of Battle Creek, Mich., the care of a new department, among the forty and more pertaining to that society. Its object is the promotion of social purity and co-operation with the White Cross Army, recently organized in England by the Bishop of Durham, and in America by the Rev. Dr. Decosta, of New York. Thousands of leaflets and circulars are now being sent out from Chicago to the W. C. T. U. in all the States instructing them how to work for a better public sentiment and laws that will protect women and girls. Superintendents are to be appointed at once in each State and local union.

—The number of names voluntarily placed on the convert's roll at Bethany church, Philadelphia, during the last three mouths amounted to five hundred and thirty.

—Arrangements have been made in Syracuse, N. Y., for a business-men's prayer meeting, to be held daily from 11:45 A. M. to 12:15 P. M., in the chapel of the first Presbyterian church.

—One of the results of the meetings lately held in Birmingham, Ala., was the reception of 100 members into the Baptist church, and the pastor thinks that at least fifty more will follow.

—Rev. J. A. Ward was arrested and imprisoned for about an hour or so at Clinton, Iowa, for street preaching. His incarceration aroused general indignation, and the city council rescinded the anti-salvation army law under which the arrest had been made.

—The Indian Witness says that the enterprising Chinese are monopolizing most that is worth having in Siam. At least a third of the half a million population of Bangkok are Chinese. They own most of the farms, junks, and ships, and are in every department of industry. American Presbyterians and Baptists have missions to Siam.

—The Methodist Woman's Missionary Society in India, having collected nearly $35,000 for the purpose, have started a newspaper designed especially for the Zenana ladies. It is issued fortnightly from their press at Lucknow in the Urdi and Hindi languages, and it is proposed to start a similar paper in Calcutta in the Bengali language.

—The Rev. E. P. Hammond is now holding evangelistic meetings in London. During three weeks' services held in Dr. Sinclair Patterson's church, 500 professed conversion.

—The Free Church of Scotland numbers 1,035 separate congregations, with a membership of 324,000, and 221,501 teachers and scholars in Sabbath schools. The United Presbyterian church of Scotland has 557 congregations, a membership of 179,891, and 103,578 teachers and scholars in Sabbath schools.

—In St. Louis, Mo., there is much religious interest reported in the churches. On Sunday night, December 20, a union service in Dr. Brooks' church was attended by not less than 3,000 persons, who packed both the auditorium and the lecture-room, while perhaps nearly an equal number were unable to gain an entrance.

—The number of communicants in connection with the various evangelical missions in China is now reported at 26,287, of whom 10,541 are credited to American societies, 10,044 to British, and 1,700 to Continental. The Presbyterian Board stands at the head of the list, with 3,777; the English Presbyterian Board comes next, with 3,105; and the London society is third, with 2,924. The Presbyterian Board has the greatest number of native helpers—213. The China Inland has the largest force of missionaries—113. There are in all 554 missionaries, including male and female, and 1,450 native helpers.

—When the missionaries of the American Board went to Oroomiah, fifty years ago, the language of the people—which is modern Syriac—had not been reduced to writing. Not a single woman and very few of the men could real the manuscripts in ancient Syriac which were used by the Nestorian priests. Vast progress has been made since that day, and the whole Bible in Syriac has been made accessible to the people, At the recent semi-centennial celebration, about eight hundred Nestorian women being present, in response to a request that all among them who could read should rise, full three-fourths of them rose to their feet.

Some are discouraged because of their lack of success in obtaining subscribers after all their labor; would it not be a good plan to put one of Thurlow Weed's letters into every house, and after awhile try again for the Cynosure? The Weed pamphlet will be furnished you free for this purpose, on application, stating how many are wanted.

W. B. Stoddard, Robt. Loggan, Mrs. L. Andrew, John A Gordon, E. C. Spencer, Mrs. A. Augustine, G. J. Shoemaker, Joel T. Buckley, and others, have sent in good lists of subscribers which we trust is the earnest of many more to follow.

BETWEEN TWO OPINIONS!

GOOD WORDS FROM THE PRESS.

The Interior, Chicago.

"Between Two Opinions," by E. E. Flagg, is an anti-Masonic, anti-liquor, woman-suffrage, honest-brotherhood book, from the press of the "National Christian Association," Chicago.

The Free Methodist, Chicago.

"Between Two Opinions" is a story, its incidents vouched for as facts, which presents a powerful argument on these questions and must attract thousands of readers among our thinking and observant people. The plot of the story is neither startling nor novel, but it develops a wonderful strength in following the experiences of people in the common, everyday walks of life.

Christian Instructor, Philadelphia.

There are important questions pressing upon American politics to-day; two of them are prohibition and the labor question as connected with the secret unions of workingmen. This work is an expose of the twin evils, secret societies and the saloons. The truths are given in the form of a story; not startling, but thrilling experiences of home life that are vouched for as facts. The evidences presented of the impossibility of reaching the saloon keeper so long as he and the officers of the law are sworn brothers in the den of some secret society, are conclusive enough to awaken the most careless and obtuse member of society. It is a valuable book for the masses to read.

Sandy Lake, Pa., News.

This is, religiously, morally and mechanically a beautiful book. It is a volume of 386 pages, the first issued by the National Christian Association, Chicago, written by Miss E. E. Flagg, of Wellesley, Mass., author of several volumes, one of which received the prize offered by the well-known publishers of juvenile literature, D. Lothrop & Co., Boston. Like "Uncle Tom's Cabin," it has been extensively read as a serial; and those who have read it in parts will wish to read it as a whole. We predict for it an extensive sale.

The Standard, Chicago.

It is written in the interests of reform, more especially temperance and Anti-masonry. The title of the story suggests the special aim of it, which is to protest against all "halting between two opinions;" in other words, is a plea for radicalism. The story is vigorously written, and will interest even readers who do not altogether believe in its doctrine.

Birmingham, Iowa, Free Press.

It differs from the popular story, "The Bread-winners" of a year ago. It greatly differs from that book in that it is written from the Christian standpoint, and its beautiful and touching descriptions of home life and home duties and heroic self-denyings will waken a responsive echo in every heart, that has not by dissipation lost the taste for the pure joys of home.

Law and Order, Boston.

The book takes high ground for prohibition of the liquor curse, for woman's ballot for home protection, and for a better and more honest brotherhood than is forced by their obligations upon the members of secret orders. It is, therefore, a valuable book for several large classes of American readers.

Berea, Kentucky, Evangelist.

The object of the volume is to illustrate the practical workings of Secret Societies, and especially to show how the Lodge upholds the saloon, and this very important design is wrought out with much skill, clearness and power. By reading it temperance people may learn much about the difficulties in the way of prohibition. Though in some sense fiction, still the book is hardly that, since the incidents are, without exception, matters of fact. Our friends will be bettered by reading it. Give it to the children; it may save them from much evil.

The Religious Telescope.

The author, Miss Flagg, is a brilliant writer. The stirring questions in American politics are undoubtedly prohibition and the labor movement as championed by the secret unions of working men, which direct the strikes that with more and more frequency occur in our cities. "Between Two Opinions" is a story, its incidents vouched for as facts, which presents a powerful argument on these questions, and must attract thousands of readers among our thinking people.

The Pacific, San Francisco.

It is a story intended to do service against the saloons, and in favor of Womans' Christian Temperance work, and especially against the secret orders—Freemasons, Odd-fellows, the Knights of Labor, etc. No reflecting man can doubt that any combination of picked classes and individuals is liable to great abuse. It is obvious, also, that secret orders are specially capable of being used in a selfish and unprincipled way. Whether because of this liability the method of reform should be one that would exterminate such orders, is a question. But it must do good to have books written which show the excesses and dangers to which these societies are exposed; for our civilization is honey-combed with them, and in many places citizens, who really don't care for them, appear to be obliged to join a half dozen of them for fear of losing some business.

FARM NOTES.

CARE OF ANIMALS IN WINTER.

The American Humane Association offers the following suggestions relative to fowls, horses and cattle to persons having these in charge, in the northern latitudes, during the winter months.

Do not compel domestic fowls to roost in trees Aside from danger of being captured by owls and other enemies, the swaying of the branches upon which they are sitting will prevent them from getting rest; while in the severely cold weather, thus exposed, feet and combs are frozen and the bird is so benumbed as to make it impossible for it to be of much profit on the farm. Securely sheltered from wind and storm, and allowed to sit on a broad roost, feet are thus kept warm, refreshing rest is obtained and the fowl is much stronger, healthier and more profitable to its owner.

Do not clip horses during the winter months. With the same propriety we might cut the hair from a dog or shear a sheep at this season of the year. The argument in behalf of the practice is that the horse in perspiration will dry more quickly if the hair is short If the animal is thoroughly blanketed and kept in a sheltered or warm place, after being driven, no danger results from perspiration, whatever the length of hair; while the horse that has been deprived of its coat in the winter time suffers perpetually while being exposed to the cold.

It is a cruelty inflicted upon beautiful carriage horses for the purpose of style. Blessed is the ordinary work-horse, in the winter time, for, however much it may perspire, it is allowed to carry its full growth of hair during the cold weather.

Do not leave cattle to stand shivering, while extremities often freeze, in the snow storms and severe winds of winter, when a little time would suffice to construct of boards, rails or poles, a support upon and around which may be placed hay, straw or weeds, thus making a shelter that may comfortably protect them. Cattle kept in fairly warm condition throughout the winter will, as milkers, give a larger and better yield of milk, and as beeves will take on flesh much more rapidly than if left exposed to inclement weather.

Aside from a question of humanity, the more attention and care that is bestowed upon animals, with a view to comfort, the more will they be of service and a source of profit to their owners.

FARM HINTS FOR JANUARY.

Of course, before you take your vacation, the farm harness will be oiled and repaired, the wagons, and sleighs, and buggies and carriages, carefully examined, and the nuts tightened. There will be a place for everything, and everything in its place—forks, rakes, hoes, shovels, spades, chains, slevises, whiffle-trees, plows, cultivators, horserake, mower, binder, roller, harrows, farm drill, garden drill, garden line, corn marker—I am afraid my corn marker is sticking on the fence but I have no expectation of taking a vacation, unless we may conclude that that is the proper place for it.

Of course you will get the harrow teeth sharpened, and the wood-work saturated with crude petroleum. The manure will be all drawn out and piled in the field. You will get everything ready for the lambs, and the pens will be made comfortable for the early spring pigs. You will have a plenty of troughs and racks. Hoops will be tightened on barrels. New leathers will be put on pumps. Pruning will be done. Dead trees will be cut down and worked up. Dead branches of shade trees will be removed, and wherever shade trees, or trees on the lawn are too thick, they will be thinned out. Fences, gates and bars, will be in perfect order. All the pig pens, cow stables, hen house, cellars and sheep sheds, will have two coats of whitewash, and some of them three. The potatoes in the cellar will be sorted over, the decayed ones removed, and those intended for use, put by themselves. There will be no broken panes of glass; no windows loose in the frames; the doors, the locks and the bolts will all work smoothly. The garret will be overhauled. Perhaps you will say this is woman's work. At any rate, you will see that they have a good bench for the wash tubs.—Joseph Harris, in American Agriculturist.

Professor W. Brown, of Ontario, told some things cattle say on the feed question, based upon experiments during ten years. It is not advisable to grind any grain fine; it is even dangerous. If fed course the animal will masticate it more thoroughly and thus digest it better. If of good quality barley fattens well and makes nice beef, but costs high. Uncooked food for any stock is undoubedly best and cheapest. Grain fed with roots is an advantage; maugolds are better than turnips for fattening but cost a trifle more. Give all stock, except milch cows, enough roots so they will drink but little water. Farmers in Ontario raise about seventeen acres of roots to every 100 of cultivated or cleared land. It is always safe to feed to any animal one pound of grain to each hundred of live weight. Though he has never seen it he does not deny that there may be such a thing as "good sweet ensilage." He has put all kinds of forage crops into the silo, but when fed to milch cows the butter was "off color" and inferior; the milk also was of poor quality.

INIMITABLE SUMMER RESORT.

The largest majority of health or pleasure-seeking tourists that have not the requisite time and wealth to visit the mountain resorts of Colorado or the cool lake retreats of Northern Wisconsin and Minnesota, long for a resort that will combine the benefits of easy access, pure air and enough natural attraction to entertain and invigorate the spirit. Origon, Ogle county, Illinois, possesses the combination in the greatest degree; On the Burlington route, but 99 miles from Chicago, and reached from that point twice per day in less than four hours, with good and ample hosteiries; numbers of springs gushing forth pure and health-giving water; the beautiful Rock river; towering hills and massive rocks, one can well imagine that c l the popular and interesting resorts of the continent have been merged together to be enjoyed at this delightful place. LUCILLE VERNON.

Cloth.....75 cents.

THIS is a pleasant surprise in many ways. The author is Rev. W. T. Meloy, of the United Presbyterian Church of Chicago, and the book is published by the Board of Publication of his denomination. It is a love story, not "fascinating," but with so much of genial interest that the reader is in no danger of laying it down unfinished. * * * The moral purpose of the book is to describe and vindicate Christian character, in its more heroic aspects, and it is a success. We congratulate the author and the United Presbyterian Board of Publication on this literary lily of the valley.—The Interior.

"LUCILLE VERNON" is evidently not an ideal sketch, but the fictitious names used represent to a great extent real men and women of flesh and blood. The characters of many of them are by no means attractive, but are perfect counterparts of querulous, obstinate and parsimonious professors who are thorns in the flesh of many a pastor in all the churches. But as in all the churches, there were also good and true men and women at Lansington, who upheld and encouraged the pastor. * * * In its author will be recognized the worthy pastor of the First United Presbyterian Church of Chicago, and a welcome contributor to these columns.—United Presbyterian.

The heroine, who becomes the bride of the pastor of the church at Lansington, is a wonderful exemplification of how a woman who is a true wife and help-meet may throw her life and energies into the great work of saving souls; aiding, by gentle words and sympathy, wise counsel and brave endurance, the husband having charge of a congregation where the Demon of Misrule held full sway. We follow with interest the history of the wife and husband through their hours of despondency and discouragement to the happy ending, where religion, harmony and peace have gained the ascendency and the good man and wife find their reward.—Pittsburgh Daily Telegraph.

The Coming Conflict.

A NEW AND STRANGE STORY BASED ON STARTLING FACTS, VIVIDLY PORTRAYING A MYSTERIOUS AND DANGEROUS POWER AT WORK IN THE GOVERNMENT, THE CHURCH, AND THE HOME.

"All will agree that this is a powerfully written story."—Evangelist, (Chicago, Ills.)

"A book which we trust may have a wide circulation."—National Baptist, (Philadelphia.)

"So intensely interesting did I find it that it was hard to pause until the last sentence was read. This work places the author high among the writers of fiction."—W. W. Barr, D. D. in Christian Instructor, (Philadelphia.)

"Unless we are greatly mistaken, the work will do more to awaken the American church and people to the evils of Freemasonry than any other book recently published."—Evangelical Repository.

"The book will create a sensation in Masonic circles, and evoke criticism of a most relentless character. The courage of the author in attacking such a rock-rooted bulwark as Freemasonry is something to admire, Fanatic though he be."—Nebraska Watchman.

"Light is needed on this subject and needed badly, and we welcome this contribution to the literature of anti-secretism, and cordially commend it to the favorable attention of our readers."—United Presbyterian, (Pittsburgh.)

"A charming work, fit to be classed with 'Uncle Tom's Cabin;' it is indeed less a work of fiction. The volume is as valuable as a work of reference as it is agreeable, truthful and useful. Our young folks will not leave the book, if they begin it, till they 'see how it turns out.'"—Cynosure, Chicago, Ills.)

IN BRIEF.

A lot of coins, comprising English shillings, sixpences, and coppers were found in Jumbo's stomach.

The Georgia Legislature passed a bill Thursday to levy a prohibitory tax on the game of bass ball.

Mr. W. W. Worthington, foreman of the work of improving the court-house yard in Lafayette, Ind., had occasion to break in pieces a huge slab of limestone from the quarries at Greensburg, in Southern Indiana. The piece of stone was about 14 inches thick. and in the heart of it was imbedded part of a huge crawfish lobster, the vertebræ and bones corresponding precisely to those of that well-known animal of the crustacean variety. The specimen obtained measured 18 inches in length, and was evidently but about two-thirds of the entire animal. It has been sent to the geological department of Purdue University.

Some startling statistics on city expenditures have just been published by the Council of Municipal Reform in New York. The Council has obtained from forty-three principal cities of this country, and from the three principal cities of Europe—London, Paris, and Berlin, exact figures of public expenditures in each for 1884, and these show the cost of government in New York is three times as great as the average cost in foreign cities. In comparison with other American cities New York shows fearful extravagance. The cost per capita in New York in 1884 was $36 65; in Brooklyn it was $10 88; in Albany, $13 39; in Chicago, $16 18; in Cincinnati, $14 52; in Philadelphia, $16.09, and in St. Louis, $13 99. In every branch of city affairs New York pays more than double what Brooklyn does for the same service, and yet many of the larger cities are run at far less expense than Brooklyn.

TRANSMITTING ELECTRICAL POWER.—A very remarkable advance toward the solution of the problem of bringing electricity into more extensive use as a motive power has just been made in France by M. Deprez. His experiments have been going on for a long time under the patronage of the Rothschilds, who have furnished the means for prosecuting them, and, it is said, have expended, up to the present time, no less a sum than eight hundred thousand francs ($160,000). It is not often that an inventor finds such munificent patrons, and M. Deprez must have impressed them very strongly with the belief in his ultimate success to have induced them to advance him so large a sum of money. The problem M. Deprez set himself to solve was how to transmit electrical power over long distances, with low tension, and with the smallest loss of power at the terminus of the wire. What he has accomplished thus far is this: From eighty horse power generated by dynamos at Paris he has transmitted, over a single wire, forty-horse power to Creil, a distance of about forty miles from Paris, without overheating the wire. He has done this in the presence of railroad experts and other interested persons, and in the paper read by him before the French Academy of Sciences he proposed to submit his process to further tests in the presence of a committee appointed by that body. The thickness of the wire through which the power is transmitted is not stated in the French journals that have reached us. The suggestion that the power of electricity would be transmitted from the point where it was generated, and used to drive mills and factories many miles away, is not a new one, but the practicability of the thing was never before demonstrated so clearly for such a distance, or even by such a comparatively small loss of force, considering the distance, as in this experimental test by M. Deprez. Nevertheless, for general work and in all places, the difficulty of cost over steam has yet to be overcome.—Daily Paper.

ALL-NIGHT INHALATION!

"A positive revolution in the treatment of Air-Passage Diseases of the Nose, Throat, and Lungs, and, for the purpose designed, as valuable a discovery as vaccination."

THE PILLOW-INHALER.

A Speedy, Positive and Permanent Cure for Catarrh, Bronchitis, Asthma, and Incipient Consumption.

It is a hair pillow, with reservoirs of evaporating liquid, the fumes or vapor of which is inhaled all night long, whilst sleeping as usual, and without any discomfort. It is used only at night, and is perfectly safe to the most delicate. There is no stomach-dosing, douching or snuffing; but just as a smoky lamp will leave a deposit on a whitened wall so the PILLOW-INHALER, for say eight hours at a time, spreads a powerful healing balm or salve on the inflamed inner coating of the diseased air-surfaces, from the nostrils to the bottom of the lungs, and hence into the blood. Old-fashioned inhalation, through a tube, for a few minutes a day, sometimes cured. Think of eight hours constant action, on the same principle, but intensified a hundred-fold! There are no pipes or tubes. The medicine is breathed in, not swallowed, and goes right to the diseased parts.

CATARRH. BRONCHITIS. CONSUMPTION.

HON. E. L. HEDDEN, Collector of the Port of New York, says: "I take pleasure in stating that the PILLOW-INHALER has been of the greatest relief, and I believe of permanent benefit, to my wife, who has been a great sufferer from Bronchial and Catarrhal Troubles, accompanied with distressing Asthma. I recommend its use to all persons afflicted with such maladies."

E. L. HEDDEN, 38 West 49th St., New York.

MR. H. G. TEELE, 50 Bryan Block, Chicago, Ill., says: "I suffered fifteen years from a severe case of Catarrh; coughed incessantly day and night. I bought a PILLOW-INHALER, and since using it my cough is gone; my lungs are no longer weak and sore, and I am in better health than I have been for years."

During the six years of its existence the PILLOW-INHALER has wrought cures of Catarrh, Bronchitis, Asthma, and Consumption, that have been more like miracles than the usual treatment of disease. It is not expensive, and is within the reach of every one. Send for Explanatory Pamphlet and Testimonials, or call.

Laura S. Haviland is a quiet, gentle, unassuming Quaker woman, 76 years of age, yet vigorous, who has had a remarkable career of usefulness, and has now given to the world a remarkable history of her "Life Work" as a teacher, at an early day, of the colored refugees in Canada and in Michigan, and in other States, as a traveler down South in the guise of a "berry picker," helping out into freedom many slaves; as a nurse and preacher to the sufferers in hospitals during the war; and with Gov. St. John and Flizabeth Comstock, relieving the destitute and suffering refugees in Kansas, etc.

The farmers nearly all replied, inclosing the amount stipulated, but of course received no answer.

MISCELLANEOUS.

THROAT WEAKNESS.

Clergymen, Teachers, Singers, Lawyers, Public Speakers, and all who have occasion to use their vocal powers more than ordinarily, will find the little treatise entitled "CHRONIC SORE THROAT" very useful. If those who are troubled with hoarseness after speaking or singing will read this book any follow its instructions they will be greatly benefited and relieved. Dr. Shuldham, of England, the author, has himself a reputation as an elocutionist of no mean powers, and he writes on the human vocal economy with the double experience of the physician and reader; especially is this experience noticeable in the Chapter on THE ART OF BREATHING, for it is on the proper modes of inspiration and expiration that the whole secret of managing the voice without causing any undue strain to the throat organs depends. Nor can we speak less emphatically in praise of the Chapter on THE HYGIENE OF THE VOICE, in which Dr. Shuldham lays down what in the way of solids and fluids a public speaker or singer should take, so as to avoid on the one hand throat irritation, and on the other any derangement of the stomach, which must react unfavorably on the whole system.

"Dr. Shuldham has given information and suggestions which will be of priceless value to every public speaker."—Interior. "The chapter on the art of breathing, the inspiration and expiration, without unduly straining the throat and vocal cords will be found a good study for all public speakers."—Inter Ocean.

Senator Wilson of Iowa has introduced a bill in Congress, which is already reported back favorably from the committee on Postoffices, prohibiting the mailing of newspapers and other publications containing lottery advertisements. The States have with great unanimity acted for the suppression of the lottery business. Louisiana alone permits it, but has limited its life to 1895. Vermont and Delaware permit such lotteries as are authorized by their own laws but denounce those of other States. This bill should quickly become a law and be so well enforced as to suppress the lotteries entirely. They now have a large support throughout the Union and few daily papers can resist the request to print for them backed by plenty of cash. Gen. Beauregard, whose name has for some time been associated with the Louisiana lotteries has now, we hope, found a better means of support in writing sketches of the war for the magazines.

The first suit of the Chicago Reform Alliance against liquor-selling on the Sabbath has failed completely, unless the gaining of some experience will help future efforts to a better fate. The Sunday theater is next door to the saloon and is hardly less damaging to morals. Music and Drama, a Chicago paper devoted to the theater, makes some statements that show how easy might be the task of closing these places. It says: "The Law and Order League in Cincinnati are trying to close the theaters on Sunday. That is one of the many reforms Chicago wants, and every respectable manager here wants it as well. The trouble is, to close Sunday theaters requires a combined and united effort on the part of proprietors and managers. Mr. Hooley, Mr. McVicker, Mr. Hamlin, Mr. Henderson and Mr. Shelby would be only too glad to 'shut down' on Sunday performances, but as long as other houses keep open and make money, they argue—not unreasonably—they can't close. To outsiders it may seem an easy matter, but so great is the competition for attractions, and so evident is it that the best attractions will go where they make the most money, which as a rule is at theaters which keep open oftenest, that the manager who does not open his house on Sunday is placed at a commercial disadvantage." In Cincinnati the effort for a quiet Sabbath happily succeeded better. The Law and Order League last Saturday succeeded in obtaining written and oral agreements from all the theater managers to give no more Sunday performances, the league promising to turn its attention immediately to the closing of concert-saloons on the Lord's day.

A Chinese murder case is being tried in St Louis which deserves to be carefully followed, and the Cynosure readers shall have the benefit of our investigations. A man named Johnson was murdered it seems by assassins hired by the Chinese Freemasons or "Highbinders." The examination of the Masonic witnesses brought out some facts respecting this Chinese lodge which we must not lose. The decision of the judge establishing the authority of the Christian oath in his court we can only find room for this week. The dispatches say: "In opening the case the court room very nearly became converted into a combined joss-house, a temple of Confucius, and a monastery of Buddha. The lawyers of the defense insisted upon swearing the Chinamen by the burning of the joss-sticks and paper incense perfume with the breath of Gautama Buddha, while the prosecution wanted them to swear over the bleeding head of an American rooster and the breaking of saucers and a compounded imprecation of oriental thunderbolts and Christian oaths. The court was for awhile bewildered, and, after consulting with the official interpreter for a moment or two, finally overruled and discarded all the heathen rites, saying: 'This is a Christian country and a civilized court, and if these heathen don't like our ways of doing business here they know what they can do. In the future give them the regular oath of this court.'"

William H. Vanderbilt's millions have increased, it is reported, to three hundred and five since his will has been published and his property listed. Some $600,000 was given to benevolent societies, six millions each to the eight children and the rest divided between the two oldest sons. It is remarkable to note the hand of God in this matter. The father lived to accumulate, as his father, the old Commodore, had before him. But the bulk of his immense wealth has come to a man who has not only the time, but also the disposition to make a wise and wide distribution of it for the benefit of the poor. Cornelius, the eldest of the sons, by overwork, so undermined his health that his physicians ordered him to suspend all severe labor, and he is now leading, so far as possible to one in his circumstances, a quiet life. He is said to be associated with more charitable and religious bodies than any other man in New York, and is scrupulously attentive to all the interests of the charities with which he is connected. Whenever there is a meeting of any one of the religious or charitable boards to which he belongs, there he is sure to be found, suggesting plans, offering ideas for the better carrying out of the business, or poring over reports which others would pass over to subordinates. His brother George says that he is now providing means to find work and a home for all the pauper emigrants that are sent to this country, and who would otherwise be sent back by our government. No person coming to America, he hopes, need be deprived of an opportunity to get a living. Another plan is a fund for prosecuting, gratis, all cases against saloons that come under the civil damage law, which, in New York, enables any person damaged by the sale of intoxicants to recover the loss from either the bar tender, the owner of the saloon, or of the building. Not ten suits have been tried under the law, because of the poverty of the sufferers, or the dislike of the lawyers; but if it is known that such a fund is behind them drunkard's families will make a revolution in the liquor traffic. The law even unused has been a terror to the trade, and the liquor societies have repeatedly struggled for its repeal, but the rural members of the Legislature stand firm for it.

Mr. Moody in his powerful sermon to men on the Ten Commandments last Wednesday evening, told of his own experience in Glasgow. Having a long distance to go to fill an appointment, friends ordered a horse from a stable near. The owners sent back a refusal, with word that Mr. Moody had better not preach in Glasgow if he had to drive four miles through the Fourth Commandment to do so. Such an answer creates a natural surprise with us, but not so with the Scotch. Edinburgh has an act forbidding forever the running of horse-cars on the Lord's day, and in Glasgow they have but lately begun and then only because the city authorities were accidently outwitted in granting the franchise. A tourist writes of this greatest city of Scotland:

"The first Sabbath I spent in Glasgow I saw a milk cart about 6 o'clock in the morning halting at each gate, and without bell or shout leaving milk, and that was the only horse or vehicle of any kind that I saw for the entire day. Nor was my observation limited to one part of the city. I attended a large and aristocratic church, but did not see one carriage at the church gate. In the twilight I took a long walk to attend a street service among the poor. I saw no business traffic of any kind, nor any pleasure riding. All liquor saloons are closed by law on the Sabbath. To assure myself that the day was not exceptional, I remarked my observation to a pastor. He replied 'Oh, yes, that is our way. All go to church.' Nobody goes pleasure-riding. Occasionally some invalid will ride to church. At church hour the streets are thronged with people, and all on their way to worship. Services are at 11 and 2, and a full house each time. Some have a second service at a twilight hour."

SCRIPTURES OPPOSED TO SECRET SOCIETIES.

BY MRS. H. E. HAYDEN.

The testimony of the Saviour himself is sufficient to keep every Christian out of every lodge in the world if they would only see the light. When questioned by the high priest he said, "I spake openly to the world; I ever taught in the synagogue and in the temple whither the Jews always resort, and in secret have I said nothing." John 18–20. Again he says in Matt. 24: 23–26, "If any man shall say unto you, Behold, he is in the secret chamber, believe it not." Here Jesus refers directly to the heathenish secret societies of his day, and if these idolaters who worshipped Baal or the sun in their secret chambers had have heard him utter that sentence they would have understood very well what he meant; and perhaps they would have been as angry as some lodgemen are now when anything is said derogatory of the lodge which they prize so highly. Jesus says secret chambers; lodges do not meet on the first floor. And he says he is not there. Then have his followers any right to go where he says he is not? And from all the written prayers of all the lodges he is excluded. A lady who once belonged to the grange told me that she left it because she found there was no Christ in the written prayer. From such Christless institution may the Lord deliver his people.

Again the Saviour says in John 30: 19–21: "And this is the condemnation, that light has come into the world, and men love darkness rather than light because their deeds are evil. But he that doeth truth cometh to the light, that his deeds may be made manifest that they are wrought in God." Here we have the strongest testimony of the Son of God that every secret society has some evil or wickedness that it intends to conceal.

Selfishness and the love of money are the root of all such societies. God says in Is. 29: 15, "Woe unto them that seek deep to hide their counsel from the Lord, and they say, who seeth us? and who knoweth us?" The Saviour answers those questions when he says. "For nothing is secret that shall not be made manifest, neither anything hid that shall not be known and come abroad." Luke 8: 17. The words of the Saviour are proving true. The ceremonies of the secret societies are being published. The murders committed by them have come and must come to light. The people are beginning to learn that justice is perverted in our courts through the influence of secret societies; and the churches are waking up to the fact that they are destroying the spirituality of the children of God. The Lord says in Is. 45: 19, "I have not spoken in secret, in a dark place of the earth. I, the Lord, speak righteousness, I declare things that are right." And the prophet Isaiah says, "Hear ye this: I have not spoken in secret from the beginning; and now the Lord God and his Spirit hath sent me. Is. 48: 16. Paul says in Eph. 5: 11,12, "And have no fellowship with the unfruitful works of darkness, but rather reprove them: for it is a shame even to speak of those things which are done in secret." Here Paul like the Saviour refers directly to the ceremonies of the idolatrous secret societies of his day. And he commands the church of Christ to have no fellowship with them. And further, they should reprove them, and expose the evils connected with them.

All through the Bible we have the united testimony of God the father, of Jesus the Saviour, of prophets and apostles against the works of secrecy and darkness. Paul says, "Be ye not unequally yoked together with unbelievers, for what fellowship hath righteousness with unrighteousness? and what communion hath light with darkness? and what concord hath Christ with Belial? or what part hath he that believeth with an infidel? and what agreement hath the temple of God with idols? for ye are the temple of the living God: as God hath said, I will dwell in them and walk in them, and I will be their God and they shall be my people. Wherefore come out from among them and be ye separate saith the Lord, and I will receive you and be a Father unto you and ye shall by my sons and daughters saith the Lord Almighty." 2 Cor. 6: 14 and 18 inclusive. If there is any place in the world where Christians can be yoked together with unbelievers it is in secret societies. If he does not have a part with infidels in them, it would be hard to tell where he does. And when he goes through with some of the ceremonies of Masonry which are patterned after the ceremonies of the secret societies in which the Babylonians and Egyptians worshiped the sun, does he not try to make the temple of God agree with idols?

The apostle James says, "Ye adulterers and adulteresses, know ye not that the friendship of the world is enmity with God? Whosoever, therefore, will be a friend of the world is the enemy of God." James 4: 4. Hear it! Hear that declaration of God's Word ye Christians who are spending both time and money in worldly societies. The above text has no reference at all to natural adultery, but it refers alone to improper intercourse and communion with the world. Christ says, "Ye are the light of the world. A city that is set on a hill cannot be hid." Does a man set his light on a hill when he hides it away in some lodge room? Again Jesus says, "Let your light so shine before men that they may see your good works and glorify your Father which is in heaven." Matt. 5: 14–16. Does a man let his light shine before the world when he goes into a lodge and the door is shut? Paul says in Phil. 2: 15, "That ye may be blameless and harmless, the sons of God, without rebuke, in the midst of a crooked and perverse nation, among whom ye shine as lights in the world." Can a Christian be blameless and harmless when he joins some lodge and causes grief in the heart of every wholly sanctified child of God? The Bible says, "Thou shalt not forswear thyself." But every man does forswear himself when he promises in the ante-room of a lodge not to tell anything relating to secret ceremonies not yet revealed to him. The prophet Ezekiel says, "Then said he unto me, son of man, hast thou seen what the ancients of the house of Israel do in the dark, every man in the chamber of his imagery? For they say the Lord seeth us not: the Lord hath forsaken the earth." Ezek. 8: 12. In this verse we are taught that the leaders of the Israelitish church did participate in the abominable ceremonies of the Babylonish secret societies, that were worshipers of the sun. Just so to-day; many bishops and elders, deacons and class-leaders of our land go into the Masonic lodge and participate in its heathenish ceremonies. And one would suppose by the horrid, murderous oaths that they dare take, and the blasphemous ceremonies they dare go through with, that they thought the Lord had forsaken the earth. At the time that God spoke thus to Ezekiel, he and many of the Jews were captives in the land of Babylon for this very idolatry mixed with the Jewish religion. And what the curse of God may be upon the churches of our land for similar sins we cannot tell. Ezekiel further says, "And he brought me into the inner court of the Lord's house, and, behold, at the door of the temple of the Lord, between the porch and the altar, were about five and twenty men with their backs towards the temple of the Lord, and their faces towards the east: and they worshiped the sun towards the east." Ezek. 8: 16. That is just what every Christian does who goes into a Masonic lodge. He virtually turns his back upon the church of Christ, and his face towards the east in the attitude of a worshiper of the sun. Every intelligent Mason knows that every Masonic lodge is supposed to face the east.

A short time ago I was conversing with a man who professed to be a Lutheran. He said he had once been a member of the Sons of Temperance, and he now belonged to the Graud Army of the Republic. But he had never joined the Masons. I stated to him the awful death of William Morgau at the hands of Masons. I said he died a martyr to his country, for he learned that the Southern lodges were plotting treason against our government. "Well," said he, "Morgau knew that the penalty for revealing the secrets was death, didn't he? Then if he took the oath he should expect to suffer the penalty." We see by this circumstance what a baneful influence even the minor secret societies may have upon the heart and conscience. Even murder is approved of if it is done in defence of the oath of some lodge. By such associations often a mau's reason and judgment are so warped that it seems as though he had not a particle of common sense left. He comes to think that his oath to such a society is of such wouderful importance that it is paramount to the law of the land or the law of God. Every Christian should adopt the language of Jacob in reference to his wicked sons: "O my soul, come not thou into their secret, and unto their assembly, mine honor, be not thou united." Gen. 42: 6. In Lev. 5: 4, 5, a man is commanded to "break every wicked oath."

THE MEMPHIS ADDRESS.

[From the Memphis Daily Appeal, Jan. 13.]

The following paper on the bearing of secret societies on the colored people and on the destiny of the United States was read by the Rev. J. Blanchard, of Illinois, in the Tabernacle Baptist church, Monday night, before a very large audience:

SECRET AND OATH-BOUND SOCIETIES.

The secret lodge system, in all its varities, is, morally and almost literally, one. The secret leagues which murdered Cavendish and Burke, at Phœnix Park, Dublin, Ireland; the socialists who undertook to dynamite the Parliament Houses in London; the would-be assassins of the Emperor William and the Czar; and, in our own country, the lodge that murdered Morgan, and all its children—Kuklux, Knights, White Leaguers, and the motly and many-hued lodges, temples, posts, councils, divisions, orders, etc.—are all alike in many particulars.

1. They all rely on secrecy to attract members, and, at the door, swear or pledge them to secrecy, before they know what they are to conceal, thus forswearing every one in contempt of the word, "Thou shalt not forswear thyself."

2. Alike they have creeds, altars, chaplains, liturgies and solemn ceremonies, regalia, etc., and as they are cosmopolitans, taking in everybody, those who love Christ and those who hate him, they are all opposition religions, or religions without Christ.

3. They all alike profess benevolent objects and ends, as humanity, temperance, companionship, redress of grievances, charity and the elevation of man.

4. And they are all more or less modeled after Masonry, their modern mother and type.

5. As a rule, too, all are pledged or sworn to obey unknown superiors. When O'Donnell shot Carey, the informant of the Phœnix Park murders, whom he had followed quarter way round the globe, while Carey wallowed in his blood on the deck, his murderer came forward and said to Mrs. Carey, "Madam, I didn't do it! I was to do it or lose my own life." He had sworn to obey his superiors.

A popular book, the "Philosophic History of Freemasonry," written, published and read by Masons, says: "The analysis of one secret order is the analysis of every one, for they are all fashioned after the same idea!" The lodges, little and large, are one moral and religious force in the community. The little lodges, Immaculates, Wise Men, and the whole host of queer named secret colored orders, as well as the Grand Army, enlisted by politicians, as Gen. John A. Logan, after the fighting was done—all these have rings in their noses, and are led by invisible hands. Gen. Logan himself was taking the higher degrees of Masonry, which kept him from the funeral of Vice-President Hendricks. The Masons, too, have the huge temples, costing from thousands to $1,500,000, like that in Philadelphia. And from the veiled recesses of those temples they detach from their higher grades scholars to run the college secret societies, soldiers to run the Grand Army posts, preachers to run conferences, presbyteries, synods and associations, and farmers to run the granges. They join all parties, for they mean to control all so as to put Masons into office, or men like Mr. Jefferson Davis, who will subserve the purposes of the lodge.

Such is this vast secret confederacy, or conspiracy, against the world of outsiders, not local, like slavery, but extending around the globe. Let us now examine its bearings on our freedmen and their descendents, and on the destiny of the United States. And, as in our late civil war, though differing in sentiment and motives among themselves, these soldiers were known by the uniform they wore, whatever their battalion or brigade. So all are lodge-men who wear the livery of the lodge, whatever name their secret order bears. As in slavery, they all follow their mother, and their mother is Masonry. Let us pause a moment to consider the nature of this mother.

In the Congressional burying ground at Washington, the most conspicuous monument was for years that of the Hon. Wm. Wirt, while Clay, Calhoun and Webster have each but a lump of box-shaped coarse marble or white sandstone. This William Wirt, the lawyer who tried Aaron Burr for Mr. Jefferson was a Southern slaveholder and one of the handsomest men and ablest lawyers the country has produced, and himself a Mason (see Kennedy's "Life of Wirt"). He said of Masonry that if the Morgan revelations were true, which he did not doubt, Masonry was the enemy of civil society, "like the Inquisition in Spain, or the Society of the Black Hand in Germany." At that time, I need not stop to say, all the Northern statesmen denounced the secret lodges.

Webster said "their oaths should be prohibited by law;" John Quincy Adams said their mysteries were "execrable," and Seward said, "The Masonic fraternity tramples upon our rights, detests the administration of justice, and bids defiance to every government which it cannot control." A small volume might be filled with similar quotations.

"But," one will say, "if Masonry, flanked by its thousand drill schools and recruiting orders, is so thoroughly intrenched around the globe, what is the use of assailing it?" The answer is, the lodges are weak and vulnerable. Fifty years ago 1,500 lodges went down before popular discussion, and 45,000 Masons left their lodges to return to them no more. It would have left the whole country forever had not slavery sheltered it, and it, in its turn, sheltered its shelter. But its destruction is just as certain as the words of Christ. For God has not planted it, and Christ said, "Every plant which my father hath not planted shall be rooted up."

Since slavery fell the colored population have rushed into secret societies. A candid pastor of a Baptist church of 600 or 700 members, in Richmond, Ky., said to me the other day, "I know that these secret orders are destructive to the churches. But my people were rushing into them and leaving me alone. I saw I must choose one, and I chose the Odd-fellows." This is but a specimen of what is going on all over the South. There are eighty-two colored lodges in Louisville, Ky. There are forty-two secret orders of both colors in Knoxville, Tenn., to twenty-nine churches—thirteen more lodges than there are churches. In the city of Memphis the proportion is much the same, far more lodges than churches, but only part of the lodges are put in the directory. For instance, I do not find the Immaculates and other widespread orders in this State. Of course where the grand object is concealment and no dividends ever declared, or reports given to the Legislature, which charters these bodies, it is impossible to give exact numbers. But the newspapers, and what we daily see, with the statistics which creep from their veiled recesses, show us that there is to-day a perfect craze for secret societies among the colored people, and they pay their dues to lodges as punctually as gamblers pay their debts of honor. I give a few specimens from different cities:

1. A well-appearing colored man came by our headquarters, 215 Four and One-half street, northwest, in Washington, D. C. He had caught two strings of fish, one of which he sold to me for ten cents. He had joined two secret societies—the Fishermen of Galilee, and the Immaculates, I think. He had paid $10 to one and $15 to the other for initiation—$25 to get ready to be taxed—and he was selling perch which he had caught in the Potomac at ten cents a string.

2. Mrs. Rev. George More, who was the pianist of the Jubilee Singers, told me that while at Fisk University she knew capable colored men who worked hard to pay their dues in five or six secret societies, and at the end of the month had not a peuny left for their church or wife and children.

3. The Rev. Mr. Harris, pastor of the Congregational church in Jackson, Miss., under the American Missionary Association, in a public address the other day, said a member of his congregation, whose whole visible property would not have sold for $25, came to him for aid to raise $64 for a uniform, cap and plume, gauntlets and a sword. He was captain of a secret society.

4. The young man who shaves me here in Memphis has paid about $60 dollars into secret societies.

5. And the sensible and industrious man who built our fires this morning, in fourteen years had paid over $300 for these unfruitful works of darkness which God commands us not to to fellowship.

There are 800,000 colored Baptists in the South and as many, or more, Methodists, Presbyterians, Disciples, Catholics, etc., who have joined these secret orders and are now taxed by them. If we allow, say one in seven of the colored population, we have 1,000,000 members of colored secret societies, which is doubtless less than the truth; and if that 1,000,000 have paid $20 each into these dark treasuries, they have paid $20,000,000 for having their eyes bandaged, their intellects befooled, their moral senses blunted and their morals debased by these lodges. The presumption is, the colored people have paid to secret societies, since the war, $40,000,000 or $50,000,000. The Peabody and Slater funds for education in the South, white and colored, amount to $9,000,000, and the principal churches in the North are raising money to educate the colored people. If, now, this dark taxation business can be stopped the blacks can educate themselves and have enough left to buy out the distilleries, saloons and breweries of the North and set up their owners in an honest business, with something left to support the paupers which the Northern whisky mills are making. In Tennessee twenty-seven persons in every hundred can neither write a ballot nor read one when written for them. In South Carolina there are forty-eight illiterates in every hundred, while the other Southern States rank between them. How many schools have these swarming secret orders set up? How many teachers supported? To ask such questions is to answer them. None! Not a single one! Would it not be wise to remove these secret orders by candid, fair, Christian discussion, and turn the earnings which now swell their coffers to higher and better uses? But if money wasted and minds darkened were the only evils to be remedied by stopping these secret mills, they were comparatively light. They put young men ou the plan of taking secret advantages of their neighbors. They will get social advantages, and so outstrip outsiders. But the man who stands on the plan of taking secret advantages has only to travel that road far enough to become a villian. And then, when the lodge is dissolved and late in the night the young men are turned out into the street, they see but two doors open and lights burning. The one is the saloon, and the other the house that stands beyond it, whose guests are in the depths of hell.

"Oh, but the lodges do good. They help their poor and bury people so nicely." The answer is,the lodge do not help the poor. They help their members, whether they be rich or poor, and if dues stop because their members become poor, they are dropped for non-payment of dues; and they take all precautions to keep the poor out of the lodges. As to burial, Christ and John the Baptist had but few follow them to their graves. Let me be buried like them, rather than be followed to my last rest by the members of a secret lodge, assembled for show.

"Well, but Washington was a Mason." The answer is, Washington was not a Mason; as that mau is not a Methodist who has not entered a Methodist church but once or twice in thirty years!

The colored people now cast a million of votes, and thus hold the key of the White House at Washington; and these lodges are the workshops of their politics, and the principle of the lodge is the most abject submission on the part of members, and despotism on the part of the lodge-rulers. It was this that made Washington insist on dissolving the Cincinnati. He knew that men who practice despotism by night will not long support freedom by day. It was this that made Washington in his farewell address warn Americans against what detracts sanctity from the oath. The infiltration of heathen oaths and worships by Solomon broke down the United States of the Jews, and the same causes will break down ours, unless God in mercy interpose. Our court houses are sinking into popular contempt because people are finding out that their cases are not decided in the court house, but in the lodge. No country could endure with conflicting oaths, part secret and part open in its court house any more than a country can endure "part slave and part free," and no man can rise to-day in an American court house and be sure he is not addressing a forsworn court and jury. Let, then, these orders be taken to the American people in a fair and open discussion—above all, let us take our case to God in prayer, as we did under the proclamation of Lincoln, and the God who answered Elijah will again answer and save us.

THE SERMON.

A DISCOURSE BY D. L. MOODY.

[At the opening of the meetings in Chicago Avenue Church, Chicago, Jan. 17, as reported in the Inter Ocean.]

I want to call your attention this morning to these words in the eighth verse of the fourteenth chapter of Mark: "She hath done what she could;" and Jesus said these words, and when God speaks you want to listen, for oue word that the Lord says is worth a ton of other words. God is going to speak to us. Let us hear what he is going to say. He will have your whole attention or none. He does not want any other service. He wants your heart-worship. You cannot serve him with the word of the mouth. If he cannot have your heart, he will have nothing. This is the offering which he wishes us to take to him.

GOLD AND SILVER

and precious stones are all to be given to him; but if a man has not got gold, let him bring silver. If he has neither gold nor siver let him give brass, and if he gives it willingly it is just as acceptable in his sight. It is said that in the kingdom of heaven the streets are paved with gold, transparent gold. Gold is of no value there. But God knows how man sets his heart upon gold, and, therefore, he asks them for it, but if he has neither gold nor silver, what he does have to give if given with the heart, is just as acceptable to him, and so are blue and purple and fine linen and goat's hair all equally acceptable when equally given with the heart. Some cannot get the others, and so they give goat's hair. We don't value them very highly. Go on some of the back streets and you will see goat's hair by the hundred. They are not, therefore, considered worth much. So you see everyone can have a hand in building the temple of the Lord. Now it is a great mistake for some rich men to build a church all by themselves and let all come there. It would be better if all of you paid something towards its building. Let each one, however poor he or she may be, pay what they can. If you have not gold and silver, bring pennies. If you have not them, give your best services. God wants yourselves; and when God gets yourselves he gets all there is. So the little child's tiny gift is just as acceptable as that of him who brings the large sum of gold, if he only give it as the offering of his heart. So it is with and precious stones and goat's hair. God says to us: "Let men make the sanctuary that I may dwell among them." All helped then to build it. And so God helped them and was in their midst, and he is just the same to-day as he was then. There is no trouble about the kingdom being built up, but you have got a false idea in your hearts if you think that a few rich men must do all the work. About nineteen persons out of every tweuty are trying to get excused. You say "I have not got the gifts, or talents, or goat's hairs to do it with." But even a boy can bring a few goat's hairs. It is the heart that God is looking after. He wants hearts. Now you will find that for 6,000 years God has been working for you. He said he wanted each of you. He wants you all to work for him. If you have nothing upon your back give him of your labor. The lamb was slain for you. It was God's offering. By his gift we become strong. When we are weak we become strong if we accept his gift, because God's strength is worth more than a ton of electric power, for this Gospel that he preaches is a superuatural Gospel, and needs supernatural power to preach it. Why we hear some people say that if such a man had what good could he not do? But a tramp, if he give his heart to God and his works, might be worth more than a ton of these men of culture. It is his brilliant intellect that has cut out the work for us to do. I believe that John Bunyan did more than all the lords of England toward the religious awakening of the world. Now, if we waut to succeed we must do as he did. God passes by some great theologian, some wise philosopher. The Lord passes by these and takes for his instruments some ignorant persons and makes them mighty in good-doing, and this is what God wants to do with all of us. That is what the Lord wants each of you to do. He picks out the foolish things, the weak things, the despised things, and the things that are not, that no flesh may glory in its own eye. You will fiud if you read the history of the world that during these six thousand years God has been taking up the debased things, the despised things, the foolish things , as his instruments. And the world has taken these six thousand years to learn it. Some one a few years ago said to me. "What is that in thine hand?" I read the meaning of his question, and I have always been glad that I did. God chose Moses to do his work, and Moses thought the Lord had made a mistake. Most of you people think the Lord has made a mistake when you are asked to do something for him. Some one says to you, 'I wish you would go down and see Mrs. Smith." You answer, or some one else." You know that, don't you? (laughter.) It is a fact. Now, the cry of the church to-day is, "Don't send me. Seud somebody else." So, in the same way Moses thought God had made a mistake when he told him to go and deliver his brethren out of Egypt. He said, "Why, I am slow of speech. If I go down there I can do nothing at all," and so he went on excusing himself. "What is that in thine haud?" He went and cut the first stick he came across. He had that for six months—perhaps a year—but the Lord said, "With that you shall deliver the children of Israel." And there could be nothing more despised than that stick. They asked Moses, "Where are you going?" He answered, "I am going down into Egypt." "What is there going on down there?" "I don't know. I have not been there for forty years." "Your old associates have passed off. You won't know anybody there." "Well, I am going down there to take my countrymen, and bring them up here." "Do you think the king will let you do that?" "Well, I guess I do." "Don't you know that the wealth of the Egyptians is in their slaves?" "Yes." "Well, how are you going to do it?" "I expect to do it with this rod."

"PLEASE SEND THE DEACON'S WIFE,

Did you ever hear of anything more absurd than that? going down with a thing like that to the mightiest king in the earth, and they said it was out of the question; that the children of Israel could never be delivered in that way. You remember that kind of talk among yourselves some years ago when it was in this country. The idea was made fun of. But Moses went on. The king scouted his idea. Then Moses, with that little despised stick, brought on the plague of frogs in Egypt, and so one plague came after another upon the land of Egypt. They could not help stepping on a frog. The King said, when threatened, "What do I care for frogs, if your God is a god of the frogs!" But Moses said, "There is a good many of them." And the king found out there were a good many, and he called upon Moses to take them out of Egypt. The frogs had brought him to terms. But the king went back on his promises; and don't you remember how he brought on Egypt one plague after another, with the waviug of that stick, until the king cried to Moses; "Take your women and children and get out," and he got out. That little despised stick, which he had cut for a shepherd's crook, perhaps, and which he had iu his hand when God spoke to him was worth more than all the oratory that was ever marshaled together on the face of the earth. But Pharaoh came after him. But Moses waved his rod and the mighty host passed through the sea dry-shod, while the Egyptian army perished. And wheu his people were ready to perish in the desert he struck a rock with his wand aud a crystal stream came out. And here is a lesson for you. Who can say that it was the old dried stick that did the work? Who can say that it was Moses that did the work? No

IT WAS GOD HIMSELF

that did the work. The stick was his instrument. Then it was worth more than all the armies in the world. Moses was good for nothing without that. It was God's help. Well, it is a good thing to have, is it not? At that time God gave men power to cast out devils. That is what we want now. We want the same kind of power, and we can have it if we go and seek for it to God. Look on through the Scriptures agaiu and you see everywhere God's hand take hold of these humble instruments for workiug his will. You want a silver instrument, a gold instrument. But God's ways are not your ways. God makes his wheels in his own way. You can see people laughing at you when you talk this way to them. You can see them in the cities trying to starve out such humble instruments. But I hope the Lord will teach me how to use such humble instruments. Look again in the Scriptures. There is some one being sent to work by the Lord. He has not good apparel upon him, nor a polished air about him. It must be a mistake again. But he takes the jaw bone of an ass and smites a thousand men on the hip and thigh. Now, if you believe the Scriptures when they say a thousand men put to rout ten thousand, with the help of God, men can be

CONVERTED ON THAT BELIEF.

My dear friends, I heard a Scotchman make this remark: "There is not a man but whom I could use." Now you know that there is a good deal of difference between men. I believe that God can use me in the shape I am in. I believe that. But God can take any man and use him in some way if he is willing to be used. Look at Gideon. That was a contemptible, a foolish thing that he tried to do, was it not? A man going out with a handful of men to beat an army of 35,000 men. I have no doubt the spies he sent out to see the strength of the enemy told Gideon that the enemy had 135,000 men. Gideon told the Lord what the spies said, and the Lord spoke to Gideon, and told him to proclaim that any man who was afraid might go back into the rear to his wife and mother and babes, and a great number drew out of the line, and left poor Gideon only 1,000 men. And so it is with congregations nowadays. And I think we can have a like sifting in the church, and we would have ten, nay a hundred, times better and more results for it. In every congregation you can point out ten out of every twelve men who will throw cold water on anything good you propose. If you propose a work to them they will say that you should be cautious. "It will be a bad thing to do so." My personal knowledge of Christianity has been in the defense. We have been instead of advancing. We have been on the defensive long enough: and these men who are on the defensive had better get back into the rear. Throw them out, and say to the rest, "Go forward, men." And I think we want men who will rise and go forward, and put these people on the defense in the rear, where they properly belong. Speaking about the men of Gideon, the rest said that the enemy looked like giants, and they as grasshoppers. I venture to say that many of us would have done the same thing. Go over on to the other side, and they probably say that they look like grasshoppers as compared with the men on our side. And as it always is, Gideon's men filled with fears, made them see giants. That is the truth. Now, faith never wants a spy. Faith does not need them. Gideon made that mistake. It was done on account of the weakness of the heart. His deeds must be judged by the heart. Faith never sends out any spies. The heart gives power enough without any spies. It does not need them.

Now you say you have not got any talents. My friend, have you God? Look at the Bible. Think of what the jaw-bone of an ass did; what a dried stick did in the hands of faith. If God can use them,

CAN NOT HE USE YOU?

A smooth stone, a jaw-bone, a dried stick, all tell the same story. If God can use them he can use you. There is no trouble in it. There is no doubt about it. This lesson is constantly coming out in the Scriptures. It is constantly coming out in the history of the present day. It been the the same for 6,000 years. Every Sunday morning it is repeated. The Bible is full of instances of the power of faith in humble hands.

But every man can have a hand in doing God's work if he will be satisfied to take what is in his hand to do it with. But I tell you God has put more handle in man for doing good than any man ever dreamed of. This daughter here has just used her handle. She has no earthly heir, so she helps a poor family. And so I think we have got to have more sermons with the hands and feet. People have got the false idea that this world has to be saved by sermons. There are many people in this city who can preach sermons that will save people with their hands. With kindness you can have a hand in saving souls. Even if we give no more than a cup of cold water we may be the means of saving a soul; of starting a thought that will live forever. And if you have got only don't hide it. Go and use it. Think of the lesson told by the story of the loaves. The more pieces there were broken off the loaf the more of it there was. God is not going to give you talents unless you use them.

And here is another thought: that hundreds of people are prevented from working because they have only a little to give. A little act will sometimes speak louder than forty sermons. I have a little boy in Massachusetts. A week ago I happened to be at home. He wanted to know if he could not wash in the wash-room for ten weeks and earn a dollar a week so as to earn $10 to help another boy in the same school that he was. I must confess that that was a good thing. He wanted to do a benefit to the other boy. Well, that was a good thing; that was a very good sermon. Did he want to wash these ten weeks for himself for $10! No, but to do good to a poor boy. Now that is the kind of sermon we want. It is that kind of sermon that touches the human heart. I venture to say that the little mites given in this world put more into the tresury of the Lord, and that these mites do more good than the gifts of any millionaire that ever lived. So it has ever been. You know that there is no monument of granite or brass or bronze that will stand out and tell its story as long as the deed of Mary. She never thought of her monument, but her monument

WILL FOREVER STAND.

She had not wealth, nor culture, nor the power of public spirit, but her deed lives. Christ said: "wherever my Gospel is preached this shall be told of her." And Mary of Bethlehem is better known to-day than any other name in the history of the world. Her story has been translated into 350 different languages. It is going to the very utmost parts of the earth, and is going to go until the end of time. And I think that the greatest eulogy was paid to Mary of Bethlehem that was ever paid to mortal being. I would rather have that than other wealth.

Do your good deeds with your own hand. It will aid you. Go and do what you can. Don't wait until you can do some great thing. Do anything that your hand can find to do. I believe that if every one in this house to-day would go down deep into our hearts and promise not to let pass a single opportunity of doing something for the kingdom of heaven we would save thousands of souls by next Sunday. If you have not got influence over some one person you are strange beings. Your circle of acquaintances may be large or small. That young man leaning up against the post there has got a circle whom he can influence, and whom Mr. Goss cannot influence. He knows a man that Mr. Goss has not an influence over such as he has. We want to bring our influence to bear upon our own circles, and if you have not got a circle there is something rotten in your character. It is a skeleton. You have not got a real living Jesus Christ. If you had you would have an influence over somebody. And so may God help each one of us this morning, and make us say, "Here take my heart; take me; take what I have got to give; take my hand's work, and use me. If it is only a dry stick, take what I have, and I will give them to thy service." Never call anything too little. You cannot tell the results of the gift.

THAT YOU HAVE INFLUENCE OVER

I do not believe that there was a woman who did as much good as Mrs. Wesley, if she never did anything more than training those two boys of hers. I do not know that that fact has ever been mentioned. She would have been unknown excepting through those two children. Just a little while she has been gone, and now there are 110,000 Methodist ministers that are preaching her Gospel. Twenty-five millions of people will hear the Gospel from their lips to-day. Think of that. She held on to her work of training her boys. Think of the stream that that mother started.

Sabbath-school teachers, you may go into the school and there may be in it that may become a Wesley or a Whitfield. You cannot tell. He may go out and ask the nations of the earth to bow down to God. It is a good thing to turn even one single person to God.

General Charles H. Howard, brother of O. O. Howard of the U. S. regular army, and long well-known as the editor and publisher of the Advance, in this city, has lately, with Mr. J. W. Wilson, purchased the Farm, Field and Stockman, of this city, and begun to issue that popular farm journal every week. Their enterprise is meeting a great success as the rapid increase of their subscription list testifies. Our farmer friends will do well to send for a sample copy of this paper.

—In the State of Illinois, fifty-one years ago there were 200 Baptist churches, with 2,500 communicants; now there are 955 churches, 76,040 communicants, and 685 pastors. Last year there were fifty-two missionaries doing service within the precincts of the State, under the auspices of the State Mission Board.

—The sale of Bibles, religious books and magazines through the colporteurs of Mr. Spurgeon's church amounted during the past year to nearly $45,000. Seventy-eight men were employed in the work, and fifteen hundred towns and villages were visited.

WASHINGTON LETTER.

DEAR CYNOSURE:—The sudden death of the daughter of Secretary Bayard on the day that she was to have assisted at the President's reception, cast a gloom over the gayeties of the hour. She was buried on the 19th, at the Old Swede's Church in Wilmington, Del. There were no funeral ceremonies in this city.

Recently an order has been posted that visitors at the White House are prohibited from smoking in any of the rooms. The order has led to a protest from some of the sovereign people who claim the right to smoke on their own premises, and hold that the President's house is public property. If any additional evidence were needed to show the benumbing effects of the tobacco habit on the moral sensibilities of those who are its victims, this disregard of the rights of others would be sufficient. The people will hardly be ready, as has been suggested, to build another White House for the benefit of the smokers, and the President's wishes will be respected.

Not so with the determination of Republican Senators to know the President's reasons for dismissals and appointments to office; whatever may be his private reasons as a public servant, he is bound to give them that the Senate may act intelligently in their confirmations. With this concession all the appointments against which no positive objection can be made, will be confirmed.

The admission of the Dakota Senators to the floor of the Senate and their interviews with the President in which he expressed himself much enlightened by a fuller knowledge of the facts, and declared that he would act quite independently of political considerations, will go far to secure the final admission of that Territory as a State. It is preferred to offset its political effect by the admission of Montana, which is supposed to be Democratic in politics. This reminds one of the old slave regime when each free State coming into the union had to be counterbalanced by a slave State, and so it went on until California turned the scale in favor of freedom. Such political bargaining and trickery will result as disastrously to the party that employs it as did that of the slave power in the days of its dominion, to the system of human bondage. Dakota and Montana should come in if at all on their several merits.

The speech of Mr. Manderson in the Senate on the increase of the standing army, in which he says that it was the want of an efficient national force that caused Hull's surrender and the capture of this city by 3,500 men, will do something to arouse the military spirit. But every thoughtful mind will observe that the nations that have the largest standing armies have, besides the oppressive taxation necessary for their support, suffered most from war, and often had as humiliating defeats as that of Detroit and of Blandensburg. What nation has had greater armies than France? and yet the memories of Moscow, of Waterloo and Sedan, are anything but pleasant to the patriotic Frenchman. It is greatly to be hoped that our dependence for national defence will be the moderation and justice of our demands, rather than in a standing army that is quite as likely to be the engine of oppression as the shield of defence.

The passage of the Presidential succession bill will give quiet to the public mind in an important measure. Doubtless it has imperfections, but it is substantially just, and meets the emergency. Mr. Bayard would make a capable President in case of the death of Mr. Cleveland.

Rev. Dr. Newman, the special religious adviser of General Grant, is now back in the city, stopping with Senator Stanford. He is expected to preach in his former pulpit in the Metropolitan M. E. church, and may become its pastor.

The gift of Judge Ord of twenty-five acres of land on Rock creek (which forms the former boundary between this city and Georgetown) for a public park, will be highly appreciated. It is expected to make it a place for bathing, and a zoological garden. The land was purchased of the late Mrs. Myra Gaines to give to the city. H. H. HINMAN.

REFORM NEWS.

ONWARD STILL IN OHIO.

NORTHWOOD, Jan. 22, 1886.

DEAR CYNOSURE:—This finds me at the home of Mr. T. C. Speer, a gentleman who has been a reader of the Cynosure for the last seventeen years. He says, "You can put me down as a life subscriber." Leaving Piqua, from where I last wrote, I went some four miles through the sleet and rain to a little town called Lockington. Here I found a United Breth ren society still upholding the principles for which it was founded. Rev. William Dillon, of the Conservator, was a former pastor here. I am told that Rev. Mr. Harvey, the present pastor, is a very devoted man. There are quite a number of the Rasor family living here. Mr. J. D. Rasor made me very welcome at his home. Mrs. Rasor, widow of the late Jacob Rasor, known to many as a zealous worker against the powers of darkness, is still living, and reads the Cynosure with interest.

On Sabbath morning at Sidney, I spoke in the U. P. church from Matt. 27: 17. In the evening I was invited to occupy part of the time at the young people's meeting. The Lord was with us. Rev. Sharp has a good congregation. The church seems to be in a prosperous condition. Some $10,000, I am told, has been pledged toward the erection of a new house of worship.

Monday afternoon found me at the home of Rev. John D. Elliott of Zanesfield. He is pastor of the Friends church at this place. Found upon calling on the citizens here that there were yet many "who had not bowed the knee to Baal." A young man, Mr. A. T. Fawcett, was very glad to learn of our work. He had been repeatedly solicited to join the Odd-fellows and had partially concluded to do so. The main thing that hindered him was the associations he would have to form, some of the hardest cases in town being members of this lodge. He thanked me for my call; subscribed for the Cynosure, and assured me that he should not join.

At Huntsville I found ample preparations had been made for the lecture. Our friend, Mr. W. W. Templeton, had the notice well circulated. He received me cordially at his home and assisted much in our work, as he has "all the friends that have traveled this way before." Last evening I had the pleasure of addressing a good audience in the large Reformed Presbyterian church here. I believe there was not a single member of a secret society present. Many came from a distance, among whom I may mention, Mr. Wm. Crawford of Bellecentre, Mr. J. T. Mitchell Rushsylvania, and Mr. A. R. Elliott of Bellefontaine. These brethren are upholding the banner of reform in their respective stations.

Many of our friends here look at the secret society men as sort of cannibals, and accordingly feed their agent well. Milk and honey seems to be in abundance in this land. But we are not yet overburdened with money. The city hall in Rushsylvania has been procured for me to speak in on Saturday evening. Expect to spend a short time in Harden county, then working eastward, stop at Iberia, Ontario, Savannah, Mansfield, etc., lecturing where the way opens.

ANOTHER MEMPHIS REPORT.

MEMPHIS, Jan. 22, 1886.

Editor Christian Cynosure:

DEAR BRO:—We are yet by the grace of God in the land of the living, battling against the foe. Last Friday brought Bro. Blanchard, your senior editor, to the office of the Living Way. I put down my composing stick and hastened to greet him. Prof. A. J. Steele, of the Lemoyne Institute, accompanied him. After a few words of greeting a meeting was arranged for the venerable brother at the Tabernacle Baptist church, of which I am pastor, for Sunday at 7:30 P. M., and as Bro. Brinkley could not be present on Sunday, a second was arranged for Monday night. The weather was very cold and so Sunday there were very few out. You know we are not used to the thermometer dropping so close to zero in this country, hence the audience was slender. But Bro. Blanchard was there on time and God helped him while he made an excellent talk from Matt. 6:10: "Thy kingdom come." The subject was "The Relation of the Secret Lodge System to the Kingdom of Christ." He said the secret lodge system was: 1st, opposed to the constitution of Christ's kingdom; 2nd, to the government of that kingdom; 3rd; to the laws of that kingdom; and 4th, to the kingship of Christ. These points the venerable Doctor handled in such a way as to arraign the secret lodge in the most effectual manner I have ever seen or heard. He went into the lodge preparation room, and held the candidate in his semi-nude condition up to the gaze of all present.

Two or three leading Masons were in the audience and they took the medicine very nicely; but Monday the elements were ablaze. The children of Belial gathered on the corners and in the saloon and they were bitter in their denunciations of Dr. Blanchard, and some swore vengeance on me, and avowed their purpose of breaking up the meeting on Monday night. Many persons called to see me on Monday and advised me to stay indoors that night. Bro. Brinkley became apprehensive, and I was compelled, reluctantly, to stay at home. There was no fear of Bro. Blanchard being interferred with, but they feared my safety in returning home. Thank God, the meeting passed off quietly, and the lecture was published in the Daily Appeal of Wednesday last, and will appear in the Living Way of next week, the 21st.

On Tuesday I received the following:

MR. COUNTEE:—You are determined to keep up your fight against our orders in your church, and now you have sent for some poor old white man to come here, who has been no doubt put out, to help you fight. And we intend to hurn your church down and you too. So take warning. We mean business. You are a traitor.

We intend to pay no attention to this bluff: we understand them.

On Wednesday Bro. Brinkley and I took dinner with the Doctor and talked matters over generally. We pray God to help us and send us help to wage war on this great evil. It is a costly warfare: we did not count the cost, but it is all right.

The finances of the church have fallen off over $75 per month for the last six months, and we closed last year's work $500 in debt on incidental expenses. "Thank God it is no more," said our oldest deacon, "for he will help us pay the bill and get out of debt." Our house lingers. We expect to be in it by the time this reaches you, but it is unfinished. Pray that the Holy Spirit may make us valiant in this work. Yours in battle array for the truth,

R. N. COUNTEE.

MISSION WORK IN NEW HAMPSHIRE.

Since my last report I have labored in New Market, Lee, Northwood, Barnstead, Strafford, Rochester, Goffstown, Weare, Deering, Hillsboro, Henniker, Hopkinton and Webster, with very encouraging results. Visiting from house to house, conversing and praying with the poor, the aged and the sick, and distributing hundreds of religious tracts, though monotonous to the reader, is a much needed and blessed work. I spent one Sabbath with the brethren at South Barnstead, and another at North Weare, where I commenced to preach twenty-two years ago, and another at Cantoocook, my native village. The Lord owned his word on each occasion but especially the last. I spent a Sabbath evening with the brethren at Webster, and the Lord was specially present.

I tarried one night with my brother, Elder C. H. Kimball, pastor of the First Baptist church, Manchester, and with him attended a meeting of the Salvation Army. In a city abounding with church buildings largely unoccupied, these salvation people are compelled to rent a third loft for their worship. But the glory of God is in their midst, their hearts are filled with praise; they can rejoice in tribulation (persecution); and sinners are turning to the Lord. It was my privilege to become acquainted with the New Hampshire Saul of Tarsus, Cyrus Sulloway, a lawyer, and trophy of the Salvation Army. Of gigantic stature, of noble personal appearance, of rare culture, of great eloquence, he has after middle life experienced the grace of God. He was not "smoked out." He came out clear as a crystal. He has experienced what our holiness friends call "full salvation." He kneels among the rude and illiterate salvationists, humble as a child. He is as happy as any of them. Like the rest, he obtained mercy by faith in Jesus Christ, confessing and forsaking his sins. The narration of his personal experience and his defense of the Gospel was impressive and powerful beyond expression. Though given for the benefit of a few score in a third loft, it was worthy of a cathedral thronged with listening thousands. If Cyrus Sulloway walks in the light, God will have a great work for him to do in his church. He is already a stalwart worker in the Lord's vineyard. The meetings of the Salvationists are very orderly and quiet enough.

By invitation, I lectured at Strafford Bow Lake in the Free Baptist meeting-house, on the relation of secret societies to the Christian church. It was one of the most successful and pleasant lectures I have ever given on that subject. I had lectured there before, and a very favorable change in public sentiment was evident. An indiscreet Freemason and a mad granger helped me quite a good deal. During my journey I took special pains to investigate the oft-repeated slander that nearly all the ministers are Freemasons. I conversed with twenty ministers. Two are Freemasons. One a seceder from Masonry, but loosely connected with the grange and Good Templars. Two more are moderate Good Templars. The remaining fifteen belong to no secret society. Nearly all expressed very positive convictions that secret societies are a serious hindrance to the Gospel. One pastor asked a deacon to take charge of a prayer meeting as he was obliged to be away. The deacon replied, "I cannot because I must attend the grange that evening." In two small villages I found the churches permanently closed, with abundant proof that the lodge had sucked out their life. In one the members of the flourishing Good Templar lodge were making preparation for a "social dance."

In another village I found the pastor, beloved by the church, just packing up his baggage at the beck of the society (lodge ruled). It would appear now that in country parishes the grange and the Good Templars are doing more mischief than the Masons and Odd-fellows. I secured about 180 subscribers for the Christian Witness and other religious papers. I take this opportunity to return thanks to God who kept me in peace and in health during my journey, and to many kind friends whose names are in the book of life, who ministered to my temporal wants.

S. C. KIMBALL.

CALL TO PRAYER AND FASTING.

COLUMBUS, Miss., Jan. 17, 1886.

EDITOR CYNOSURE:—A minister visited me some time since, and said in conversation, "I have learned that you are the first seceding Mason of the South; but I expected to see more of you and I supposed that you were a man of some property, and behold! you are a small man and a poor man." I replied, "Out of the mouth of babes and sucklings thou hast perfected praise."

He seemed to rejoice in my work against secret societies, and I insisted that he help in this good work. He talked for a time in a strain partly conservative and partly timid and fearful, and at length asked, "What will I do when the lodge cuts off my bread and butter?"

From this conversation I did not expect much from him in the way of reform, or that he would ever speak against secret orders; but I have since learned that in less than twelve months from that time he was speaking in public against them, ably and powerfully. There is hope for a man after he gets out of the Slough of Despond.

Many, many, are in the same state of mind as he, and would do good work speaking and strewing tracts, calling upon the Lord for his blessings upon their labors, if there were a better understanding and union of effort among those who see the need of reform.

Giving time for all to know, let it be understood that we set apart the first day of March for fasting and prayer, and enter afresh on the reform work and continue until the last secret order is blotted out of the United States. Let those who have not been working begin, and those who have redouble their efforts. Let all the Christian workers in the South use their influence and power in this anti-secret work. Let word be sent to John P. St. John that the officers of the lodges are selling whisky, and the bad Masons and Odd-fellows commending, upholding, and protecting them, and when good men vote down the saloons wicked lodge men make schemes to run them still or have substitutes. Let Mr. St. John begin to lecture against secret orders and show that the liquor traffic is made and protected by them, and he will then strike at the root. Let the sisters of the W. C. T. U. speak out against secret orders. Let them lay to heart the truth that these societies are enemies to "God, and home, and native land," and they will soon see that the secret power has been their greatest persecutor and the opposer of prohibition, and that it and the liquor traffic must be removed at the same time. They are united as the links of a chain. Will not the President of the United States speak out also. He could not wish that if he were to die the man who expected to take his place would be off on that day taking degrees in Masonry that he might thereby be enabled to serve himself off the funds of office and rob the people of justice. Let the papers publish to the world with faithfulness what must be the consequences if secret orders continue to rule in our nation. Let all the preachers sound the alarm from the pulpit against this terrible foe of the church and good government, organized secretism. Let the missionary societies, which yield a vast influence, labor that they may trust in the Lord for their means and be able to control their own funds, and encourage all their workers to oppose secret orders among other evils. Will the lodge then dare to say, "What will they do for bread?" God has already said, "Trust in the Lord and do good, so shalt thou dwell in the land and verily thou shalt be fed," and "He that walketh righteously and speaketh uprightly; he that despiseth the gain of oppression; that shaketh his hands from holding of bribes; that stoppeth his ears from hearing of blood, and shutteth his eyes from seeing evil; he shall dwell on high, his place of defense shall be the munitions of rocks: bread shall be given him, his waters shall be sure."

"STAND UP FOR JESUS."

WORCESTER, Mass.

This expression, spoken by the young, heroic Christian Tyng many years ago, as an immortal signature to his name and fame, often comes afresh to cheer and comfort the young or weary disciple of this day. How blessed the assurance that there is one thing we may do without sorrow or regret Amid the multiplied sins and follies of an apostate world, there is one thing that points out the way to success, felicity and an eternal heaven—"Stand up for Jesus." Surely this is worth the price demanded. "If any man serve me let him follow me, and where I am there shall also my servant be." "If any man serve me him will my Father honor."

This is the view which I take of the Christian Cynosure: It has stood up "for Jesus", in the midst of much opposition, with heroic courage and patience. I love the paper for its fidelity to the principles now stated. I love its co-workers and martyr-like men and women who are taught by the Spirit to see and perceive the "Depths of Satan" in the secret lodge systems. These modern delusions or anti-Christs from the infernal world, these oath-bound, Christ-rejecting profane-swearing societies have, I fear, put out the light of many professed Christians. These deluded men have wormed themselves into our churches and infused them with their heathenish doctrines and insidious poison that is slowly killing out the vital forces of a true and spiritual life.

Surely this is not the effect of "standing up for Jesus," but it is standing against Jesus. "Whosoever is not with me is agsinst me," said the Master. "But," says the lodge-man, "We do not pretend to be a Christian society. Our religion is world-wide, embracing all orders and nationalities; and as for religion, it has no more respect for the Christian than any other, however false." Not being with Christ they are, according to the divine interpreter, against Christ.

Dear brethren of the Cynosure, our work is not yet done. Let us stand firm for Christ and him alone as "one with the Father." Let us often think of the precious promise: "Be thou faithful unto death and I will give thee a crown of life."

WM. J. WHITE.

FROM AN OCCASIONAL LECTURER.

I do not lecture on the subject of secretism very often, but am willing to do so occasionally when there is opportunity. I recently gave an address on Odd-fellowship in reply to an address in favor of the order. Prohibition is taking the lead in reform work in this vicinity, and I gave some talks on that subject just before election. I have been a reader of the Cynosure for several years, and am well pleased with its general tone, but I protest against the insertion of such advertisements as the "Broom Brigade" as a method of raising money for the support of churches. I think such things are entirely inconsistent with the spirit of the Gospel of Christ, and should not receive the sanction of reformatory papers and associations. Such methods may be a success financially, but not spiritually, for when an appeal for funds is made to the heart on the merits of the cause, the influence is elevating; but degrading when the appeal is made to our love of money.

EDWIN BARNETSON.

NOTE.—The advertisement was inserted on the order of the advertising agent, and its character was not noticed for a week or two. When it was seen to be an arrangement for a church frolic to catch money, it was immediately taken out. The Cynosure agrees with Bro. Barnetson on that subject.

WEST VIRGINIA NOTES.

FORT SPRING, W. Va., Jan. 11, 1886.

The copy of the exposition of the grange sent me from your office is substantially correct, so far as I have examined it. Before I had the opportunity to read it through it fell into the hands of grangers, and I have not seen it since. The grange organization is rapidly dying out in Greenbrier and Monroe counties, West Virginia. The master of the subordinate grange in this vicinity became convinced of the evils of a secret society which teaches a false religion, and he quit attending the meetings; they have not had a meeting for several months and they will never again organize for work. Quite a number of granges in these two counties have ceased to exist. The grange co-operative stores, with one exception, have closed out. Rev. A. M. Chappell, of Ronceverte, W. Va., denounced secret societies in his Thanksgiving sermon. JOHN W. CLAYPOOL.

THE G. A. R. IN THE SOLDIER'S HOME.

NATIONAL SOLDIER'S HOME, MILWAUKEE, WIS., Jan. 12, 1886.

EDITOR CYNOSURE:

I am with you heart and soul in condemning lodges of all kinds. They have here in this Home a post of the G. A. R. It would make a man of tender feeling grieved if he would but watch their movements. All they seem to be after is money and whisky. I have seen some of the boys die in the hospital that belonged to the G. A. R., and the first thing these good comrades will do is to get their badges or money. Last spring a soldier came here from Pennsylvania. He was a member of the G. A. R. He was taken sick and went to the hospital, and died in a few days. He had money and wished to be sent to his friends East, but they gobbled his money up, and the poor fellow is lying up in the timber near the Soldier's Home.

PITH AND POINT.

NO COLD WAVE IN THIS.

It [the Cynosure] is, in an unusual degree, awaking the leaders to serious thought and hopeful reflection, the result of which can only better their material, social, and Christian condition in an eminent degree. Unquestionably, your journal has a mission in this age and country, and right heroically it is fulfilling it. Secretism has nothing in me.—S. T. CLANTON, New Orleans.

LODGE BEFORE WIFE.

In Corning, N. Y., Snook, a high Mason, died last spring, and his wife could not find out whether she had any property or not. The Masons came with three carriages, and interred him in Masonic order. Not long ago an ex-Mason learned that two of the Masons came with a bill of $70 for funeral expenses. Mr. Snook worked in the machine shop and got large wages, and did not squander his money. The people think he was worth $6,000 or $8,000. He paid into the lodge perhaps for forty years, and his good wife in that time served 43,800 meals for him, and if she asked him a question about his affairs she was bluffed off. This is Masonic charity.—A. ANDRE, Fedrow, O.

LESSON VI, Feb. 7, 1886.—The Fiery Furnace. Dan. 3: 16-28.

GOLDEN TEXT.—Our God whom we serve is able to deliver us from the burning fiery furnace.—Dan. 3: 17.

Open the Bible and read the lesson.]

COMMENTS ON THE LESSON BY E. E. FLAGG.

1. The test of loyalty, vs. 16-18. Homage is what Satan required of Christ; it is what he has always required in some shape or other of Christ's true followers. But usually he is satisfied with worship paid by proxy. That colossal golden image on the plains of Dura was in itself simply a statue of gold—nothing more. There is properly but one false god, Satan; and idols, whether of gold or brass, or merely an idea taking no tangible form, represent him. Worship paid to them is worship paid to Satan. It is on this principle that St. Paul, while stoutly affirming that an idol is nothing at all, yet calls idol feasts the table of devils, and warns all converts against any participation therein. So while few have been called to make such a test of their loyalty as did these Hebrew children, Nebuchadnezzar's demand is a type of that homage which the "god of this world" always seeks from Christians. The lodge beast, the modern anti-Christ is represented in Revelations as receiving all his power from the dragon. And though few Masons realize who they are actually worshiping, their worship is just as truly paid to Satan as that of any poor African savage praying to his fetish. "Our God whom we serve is able to deliver us, but if not"—the deepest depth of faith is sounded in their wonderful answer—"if God leave our bodies to perish, he is still the Father of our spirits. Thou, O tyrant, canst not touch our souls. Death, rather than deny Jehovah." Among the throngs who paid their devotions to the image were probably many different nationalities, representatives of various forms of pagan belief, but no martyrs. The Jewish religion alone required exclusive homage to one only living and true God. They could worship the image and not be false to their own tutelary deities. "None will be passionately attached to any religion who thinks that others are just as good," shrewdly observes Madame Swetchine. Certainly not enough to die for it. And it may well be questioned whether, should a great persecution arise for Christ's sake, "the noble army of martyrs" would be likely to receive any recruits from the Masonic lodge, which practically teaches that all religions are alike.

2. The deliverance, vs. 19-25. As safe as if the fiery billows were a cooling fountain, the three young Hebrews walked in the midst of the furnace—but not alone. One walks beside them whom even the pagan king recognizes as the Son of God. No Christian will shrink from the fiery furnace of trial and persecution when he realizes the fullness of the divine promise, "Surely I will go with thee." The less cross-bearing, the less sense of his personal presence, and the less frequent the testimony of others that we have been with Jesus.

LIGHT FROM THE WORD.

What promise may have been in the minds of these three Hebrew youth? Isa. 43: 2. What is the true martyr spirit? Job 13: 15. Why is persecution such a poor weapon? Matt. 10: 28.

From Peloubet's Notes.

"The golden image." The image was doubtless an idol of Bel-Merodach, the chief divinity of the Babylonians. One of the first of Nebuchadnezzar's own titles is, "He who pays homage to Merodach." Keil thinks that the statue was a symbol of the world-power established by Nebuchadnezzar, so that falling down before it was a manifestation of reverence not only to the world-power, but also to its gods.

"The inauguration day." Religion in antiquity was strictly a matter of state, disloyalty to the gods appointed for public worship being held covert disloyalty to the monarch who commanded homage to be paid them. Hence it was proclaimed that all should prostrate themselves when the outburst of triumphal music announced the proper moment; refusal to do so being threatened with the terrible punishment of being burnt to death in a fiery furnace.—Geikie.

"We are not careful to answer thee." There was no need, (1) Because their actions had answered him before. (2) Their minds were made up, and nothing could change them. (3) Remonstrance or argument with the king would be in vain. They did not expect to change him. Therefore, they were not anxious about the result.

"But if not." If God should not see fit to save them from the furnace. They add this "if not" to show they did not presume to tie God to this deliverance absolutely; for God knows how to deliver, and sometimes to suffer his saints to glorify him by suffering. They were resolved to venture suffering rather than sinning, and leave the cause to God.—Pool.

The saving them from this sinful compliance was as great a miracle in the kingdom of grace as the saving them out of the fiery furnace was in the kingdom of nature.—Henry.

"We will not serve thy gods." Henry suggests how the tempter may have tried to persuade them to yield. (1) Because they were not asked to give up their God, but only to worship an idol for once. (2) They could keep their true religion in secret. (3) It was only one act, not a life-time of sin. (3) The king had absolute power. (4) He had been their benefactor. (5) He was their rightful ruler. (6) The tide was so strong. (7) Their fathers had often worshiped idols. (8) If they saved their lives, how much good they might do for their people; while, otherwise, heathen rulers would take their places.

"Heat the furnace one seven times more." The increased heat and the proportionate fury of the flame typified increased homage to the "god of fire," a supreme God of the Babylonians, whose majesty and divinity were impugned by the rebellious contempt of the "three children."—Cook.

"The burning fiery furnace." This furnace seems to have been constructed for the purpose of smelting ore. Remains of such furnaces built by the Romans have been discovered in several places. They resemble a lime-kiln, being banked around with earth, and having an opening at the top through which the material to be melted was introduced (ver. 23), and a door on one side, beneath, out of which the ashes and slag were raked.—Todd. The victims were cast into the furnace through the opening in the top, while they were seen by the king through the door on the side, and through this also they came forth.

"The form of the fourth is like the Son of God." As the article is wanting in the sacred text, it is more correct to read "a son of the gods" (as in Rev. Ver.), i. e., one of the race of the gods, called in ver. 28 an angel, or one of the lesser gods sent as a messenger from heaven. Only a divine being, the king knew, could live thus in the fire himself, or preserve others there. Of course he knew nothing of the true Son of God which came into the world, but was only an unconscious prophet. No doubt in reality it was the Son of God, who, as "the angel of the Lord" at various times appeared to the Old Testament saints.

It is implied that the fourth form was no vision seen by Nebuchadnezzar alone, but a visible angel seen by him and by his officers as well.

"Blessed be the God of Shadrach." Though the heathen king is convinced of the power and greatness of the God of the Jews, it will be observed that the proclamation put forth is only a decree of punishment against those who calumniate him. It does not declare him God alone, and the other gods mere idols.—Rawlinson.

Note the marks of divinity Nebuchadnezzar sees in this transaction. (1) Delivered his servants from the fiery furnace; (2) changed the king's word, compelling even Nebuchadnezzar to revoke his commands; and (3) implanted such strong principles in the heart of his followers that they yielded their bodies to the fire rather than disobey God.

Golden images. There are still erected golden images, before which the world commands us to bow down and worship,—success, pleasures, money, a popular religion, palatable doctrines, an easy, lax morality. And the fiery furnace, into which those who refuse to worship are cast, burns with persecution, unpopularity, social ostracism, ridicule and reproaches.

"COME OUT OF HER, MY PEOPLE."

BY S. HART.

The Christian and the infidel
Mohammedan and Jew,
The Union soldier scalper
And the Arab, too,
The manufacturer of rum
And vender of the same,
The gambler and the tippler,—
All meet on one "grand" plane.

"Low twelve" finds guarded door
And lodge high up in air;
They "meet upon the level
And part upon the square."

And thus Masonic votaries
Join in a common cause
Against our blessed Saviour
And his most holy laws.

But how His Gospel heralds
Can stay with such a set
Is food for much reflection
And cause for much regret.

Two candidates the lodge will run
For just the same position;
One may be a whiskyite,
The other prohibition

And oft the Anti-mason
And W. C. T. U.
Are thus led into working
And voting for this crew.

But let an Anti-mason run
'Gainst even a vile lodge sinner;
The chances are just ten to one
The lodge will be the winner.

In both the parties it's entrenched—
Republican and Democrat—
And prohibition has two powers,
Lodge and liquor, to combat.

And thus in nearly every case
It is the lodge that wins,
And Christians are partakers
Of other people's sins.

"Come out of her, my people!
Partake not of her sin,
Receive not of her plagues—"
Come out ere these begin.

AMERICAN PLATFORM.

ADOPTED AT CHICAGO, JUNE 20, 1884

Viewing with deep concern the corrupt and unsettled condition of American politics, and witnessing with alarm the fearful prevalence of caste and clannisbness by which our citizens are being arrayed in hostile bands, working secretly to compass political ends, a method directly and powerfully tending to increase corruption, to destroy mutual confidence, and basten disruption and bloodshed; and having no hope of adequate remedy for these evils from existing parties, and believing the foundation of a party based upon the fundamental principles of the Declaration of American Independence, botb inevitable and indispensable:

We, therefore, a portion of the American people, believing with our fathers that we have our rights and liberties, not from men or parties, but from God; believing in the Christian marriage, and not in Mormonism; believing in the religious democracy of the New Testament, and not in the despotism of the lodge; believing, also, with our Scotch and English ancestors, that civil government, though ordained in God, is "founded in nature, not in grace," and, therefore, that all have equal civil rights; while we abhor the idea of enforcing religion or controlling conscience by human laws and penalties as calculated to make hypocrites, not Christians, and savoring of the days of priestism, the fagot and the stake, we at the same time as firmly believe that atheism and priestcraft are twins and both alike foes to human liberty and welfare. We further most firmly believe that a government without God has none but lynch power, and is destitute of all legitimate authority to maintain civil order, to swear a witness, to try a criminal, to hang a murderer, to imprison a thief; and while we consider government without God as a mere usurpation, we regard all religions and worships invented by men, and so having no higher than human origin, as mere swindling impositions and cheats. We believe in peace and in national arbitration as a means of perpetuating it; yet we as profoundly believe that the bravery and blood of our soldiers have bought us the peace which we enjoy, and we honor the memories of the dead and will be just to the claims of the living; and we take up and prolong the strain raised by the women of this country: "For God, and home, and native land," and trust that this beautiful and patriotic motto will soon be not only echoed by their voices, but sustained by their votes.

We, therefore, solemnly adopt and present the following, as containing a brief synopsis of the principles of our government, by which we intend to be governed in casting our votes. We bold:

1. That ours is a Christian and not a heathen nation, and that the God of the Christian Scriptures is the author of civil government.

2. That the Bible should be associated with books of science and literature in all our educational institutions.

3. That God requires, and man needs a Sabbath.

4. We demand the prohibition of the importation, manufacture, and sale of intoxicating drinks.

5. We hold that the charters of all secret lodges granted by our Federal and State Legislatures should be withdrawn, and their oaths prohibited by law.

6. We are opposed to putting prison labor or depreciated contract labor from foreign countries in competition with free labor to benefit manufacturers, corporations or speculators.

7. We are in favor of a revision and enforcement of the laws concerning patents and inventions; for the prevention and punishment of frauds either upon inventors or the general public.

8. We hold to and will vote for woman suffrage.

9. That the civil equality secured to all American citizens by Articles 13, 14 and 15 of our amended National Constitution should be preserved inviolate, and the same equality should be extended to Indians and Chinamen.

10. That international differences should be settled by arbitration.

11. That land and other monopolies should be discouraged.

12. That the general government should furnish the people with an ample and sound currency

13. That it should be the settled policy of the government to reduce tariffs and taxes as rapidly as the necessities of revenue and vested business interests will allow.

14. That polygamy should be immediately suppressed by law, and that the Republican party is censurable for the long neglect of its duty in respect to this evil.

15. And, finally, we demand for the American people the abolition of electoral colleges, and a direct vote for President and Vice President of the United States.

NOTES BY THE WAY.

Politics is holding its breath: rather inflating its lungs for a deadly grapple, and long and loud clamor. In Kentucky, Tennessee, Mississippi and Louisiana prohibition is pushing steadily to the front, and the argument is so overwhelmingly in its favor that the liquor men will not meet it fair and square, but tender false issues, or forge new and useless ones; flee to sanctury, and hide under altars, secret altars, where they hope to escape the public eye. This will keep the two old parties teatering like children playing up and down on opposite ends of a board. We must have a new party to "go fall upon" the liquor men where they are—behind their secret altars.

JOHN QUINCY ADAMS, while Secretary of State, joined Dr. Daniel Baker's little Presbyterian church, "And," says his pastor, "Mr. Adams never failed to be in his pew on Sabbath afternoon whatever might be the weather, and was a most attentive hearer."—(Life of Daniel Baker, p. 107–9.)

At one time he lent the church twelve hundred dollars. The pastor wishing to buy himself a house, Mr. Adams loaned him the whole purchase money, and afterward bought the same house when the pastor was called to Beaufort, S. C. His example drew to the same church Andrew Jackson, Secretary Crawford and Judge Southard. This was our only outspoken Anti-masonic President.

The election of Cleveland instead of Blaine, saying nothing of their merits, seems to have been directed of God for the good of this nation. Conversing with Southern men by hundreds will convince any one they were honest. Stone-blinded by slavery, shrinking from abject poverty, deceved by Northern palterings and jugglings, especially pulpit potterings, they fought with terrific valor with no national hope of final success, and were whipped. The triumph of their Democratic party has soothed and given them hope, and half reconciled them to negro suffrage. Judge —— said to the writer in Memphis, "We like the negroes better than the whites. They do what we would never have done. While I was in the Confederate army, my negroes took care of my house and family, and I found all right when I got home."

There are two colored pastors of large churches in Nashville, who are said, on what seems reliable authority, to be living with mistresses in shameless prodigacy. When one of these great churches applied for a pastor, their bishop replied, "I have a man who would fill your pulpit, but he runs with other women than his wife. If you can cure him of that he will suit you." And they took that man! When the priests "lay with the women about the tabernacle." the fire of God soon fell on them.

EDITORIAL CORRESPONDENCE.

LEAVING MEMPHIS.

NATCHEZ, Miss., Jan. 15, 1886.

DEAR CYNOSURE:—I left Memphis weak and worn after sundry important interviews, of which I give only the results.

1. The lodges are represented in all four schools which I have visited, viz., Berea, Knoxville, Nashville and Memphis. In two of them the head of the faculties have joined the G. A. R., though neither of them have one word to say in its defence, and one has already troubled the head-center by his protests. They were willing and glad that I should argue to their students against the whole secret family. I spoke in Memphis three times, once in Bro. Imes's Congregational church and twice in Bro. Countee's (Tabernacle Baptist). I canvassed with all possible care the criticisms made on this brother. Some said, "He is timid." But I felt the bullet lodged between his scalp and his skull, and learned that he received a letter while I was there declaring that he was getting me to screen him, but that his house and himself should be laid in ashes. He may be prudent in such a state without being "timid." Both Bro. Imes and Prof. Steele assure me that after sifting the charges of his enemies thoroughly, there was positively no proof of any moral obliquity against him. He is very different from Prof. Steele. We owe to his influence and high standing in Memphis the insertion of a report of my speech in the leading Memphis paper. But the editor who inserted it is a high adhering Mason. Gentle means never did and never will drive out the false worships from the churches where they have obtained a lodgment. I cannot learn that there is any such rule as Wheaton has in any of the schools and churches here!

Bro. Countee followed my speech in his church with nearly these words:

"Brethren: This is the first evening I have been out since last October, when I received the shot which I shall doubtless carry in my head to my grave. But I wish all to understand that I do not recede from the ground I have taken. Some of our church still belong to both lodge and church. But our church has by vote declared against belonging to the two, and in Baptist churches a majority must govern discipline. You must either come out of the lodges, all of them, or YOU MUST LEAVE THIS CHURCH!" with more to like effect.

The result in my mind is a deliberate conviction that Countee and his paper, the Living Way, must be sustained at whatever sacrifice. Brinkley and Countee are regular Baptists, and there are 800,000 such in the South. If they had, say, ten thousand paying subscribers, those colored Baptists can be reached, and Prof. Woodsmall takes a just and moderate view when he writes, "If the leaders of the 800,000 colored Baptists in the South are reached and enlightened, it will revolutionize the United States.

"THE LIVING WAY"

has sunk more than half its subscribers by this discussion. It is an able paper, well worth its price now. One article, "The Black and Gray Wolves' Congress," is worth all the paper costs. Give them 10,000 subscribers and they can put more work on it. Brethren Capwell and Britten are wise men, and they should at once attend to this important matter. The brave Bro. Callender and Elder Barlow will stand firm with them. The paper could be afforded at $1.00 to clubs of twenty with the cash. Memphis is centrally located, is a fine city with strong reform elements. Brethren, please plan and execute. This matter does not brook delay. If Countee is burnt out, the Tennnessee governor must be appealed to and the building replaced.

DOWN THE RIVER.

I came down here to Natchez yesterday and night. Hon. John R. Lynch is in Washington. He is respected by the best and most enlightened colored Christians. I hope to see him in Washington. From Memphis here I have been in a new world. The road is flanked by fields of cotton, some of which is not picked; and, excepting the towns, the cabins are the lowest style of human abodes. Back in the interior, average land can be bought for $10 or $15 per acre; good cows from twenty to thirty, and common, from ten to twelve dollars.

Thus far I can declare I love these Southern people. I have talked incessantly in the cars all the way, and have found but one person, an ignorant boy, who "would like to own a few niggers." There was more "Fourth of July" feeling in the South than in the North, and they never would have fired on "The Flag," but for leaders sworn and drilled in secret lodges.

PRESBYTERIAN CHURCH SOUTH.

ON STEAMER CITY OF NATCHEZ, Jan. 15.—Last night I attended a prohibition prayer meeting in the large lecture room of Dr. Stratton's church. The cold storm made the attendance small. A Methodist preacher led the meeting which was a union meeting for the city. He spoke pointedly; said he "believed slavery fell in answer to prayer; and God could and would destroy the liquor traffic if we used the same means." This astonished me in Natchez, where the old feeling is strong. I was delighted to see prohibition prayed for in the church of

DR. STRATTON.

He has been pastor forty-two years, and is beloved by every one I have heard speak of him. It is the more significant that prohibition prayer meetings should be held in his church, because at Knoxville, Nashville and Memphis, Tenn., I could not learn that one of the pastors of the "Church South" had spoken or acted against the saloon. Dr. Stratton, whom I saw at the General Assembly at Saratoga two years ago, is strongly in favor of reunion with the North, though Dr. Palmer and the Southern Presbyterian press are opposed to it.

At the Foster House where I stopped in Natchez, I met the only and I survived that. The house is well kept and ably managed by three daughters of a slave-holder of the old style. Their father and brothers died in the war; their father's wealth vanished; and it is not wonderful that they should be "unreconstructed." But they are noble women, and if, as I hope they may, they get to heaven, they will see things in a clearer light. I advise Northern travellers to stop at the Foster House.

THE TRINE-AMERICAN EXPOSITION.

I spent yesterday in the two vast buildings of the North, Central and Southern Exposition and am disappointed on the favorable side. Its vastness may be judged from the fact that the main building covers thirty-three acres of land! There is always a depression when Congress takes hold of the currency, and the silver quarrel kept up by the mine-gamblers who wish to keep up the price of silver by forcing Congress to coin more than the people need, and stack the surplus in the vaults of the U. S. Treasury, and the perennial quarrel about the tariff, in which Democrats and Republicans are on both sides, while the latter claim a monopoly of its "thunder,"—these wranglings make "hard times," and so the Southern masses are neglecting the great National Exposition here.

THE THINGS EXPOSED.

You enter the first building, called Government Building, and the vast area is apportioned off to the States. You naturally start for ILLINOIS, in great letters, and are stopped on the way by the Indiana department. The gentlemanly commissioner shows you through aisles lined on either side with corn, larger and more beautiful than you knew of; wheat, oats, barley, millet, clover, herds-grass, taller and heavier than you have ever seen; with coal in heaps and fruits of all sorts as Eve did when she was married; and arts, fine and mechanical, till you fear you will not reach Illinois: which at last, however, you come bluff up to at the "Primitive Farm." This is a Lilliputian edition of a pioneer's farm on the prairie, but in the edge of the timber. A small runlet is pouring over a real pile of rocks into a little bayou which circles the farm. The ground, trees, brush and water are real, but the men and girls are effigies or well-made facsimile puppets. A rural couple sit on a log fishing, but turn from their tackle to look at a girl down a little below who has missed a bite, and her hook has caught in the clothes of a young fellow standing a rod behind her; so after all she has caught a fish. Back from the bayou a man is ploughing with a good yoke of oxen, done to the life: in short, a page of the Cynosure could be filled with this miniature primitive farm and not tire. The rest of Illinois is done up like Indiana, but needed the Indiana commissioner to set it off. Arkansas excels all the States in its show of fruits. New Hampshire, besides plenty of cotton machinery, granite and marble, shows a red mother fox lying amid her playful cubs, half grown, all in their own skins, and all so fresh and life-like, that if you ever hunted foxes in the Green Mountains, the group would bring tears to your eyes.

In the midst of this vast arena of earth's wonders, I came pat upon a near neighbor, Mr. Lacey, whose Irish heart swelled at the meeting. So, wearied with long walking, I leaned on his arm and he went through with me. His business (paiuting) had domesticated him and made him on familiar terms with many whom we met. We came upon an Illinois wagon, sold five miles from Wheaton, at Lombard. I have travelled one thousand miles to learn what my near neighbors are doing. The wheels are made light, of car-wheel iron; of course the tires never fall off or need resetting. The body is furnished with side pieces, which, gauged wide, make a neat, strong hay-body; and turned another way, make just the thing for picking 60 or 70 bushels of corn. Another Yankee, born in the South-west, explained his Texas stump puller, by which one man and a pair of horses have taken out 200 stumps in a day, from one to three feet thick.

But we must hasten to Dr. Fitzgartner, who runs the exhibition of

CENTRAL AMERICA.

But two of the five little republics, Honduras and Guatemala, are here on exhibition- A thousand strange woods, of strange beauty; minerals without number and some without names known to us; specimens of English written by the little, keen, black-eyed, olive-skinned children. These done, you come to

"WORK OF THE INDIANS."

Specimens of needle-work, cloth manufacture, etc., including shawls which the Prince of Cashmere never excelled; and these beautiful shawl fabrics woven on a little log-loom with a simple shuttle, and so colored as put "the varied hues of evening to the blush," these and weird, strange-looking pottery, are the objects you meet in the Central American exposition.

We wandered amid the world's products till the shadows began to fall, when, weary and faint, my good genius and neighbor Lacey took me to an Irish restaurant, where a niee little woman gave us a good dinner with thoughts of

"Erin mavourneen: Erin go bragh," and fervent wishes that the death of Ireland's curses, whiskey, priestism and secret orders, may yet make Ireland the

"Sweetest isle of the ocean."

I have an "unlimited pass" and may visit the great exposition again.

THE CHURCH CONFERENCE IN THE SOUTH.

NEW ORLEANS, JAN. 20, 1886:—To-day I have seen Dr. Henry M. Smith, of the South Western Presbyterian, and pastor of the Third Presbyterian church here. He is a courteous, Christian gentleman and conducts an able paper. I stated to him at large our desire for a "National Congress of churches to consider the nature of the secret lodge system and the attitude Christians should hold toward it."

The subject was new to him, and he said on a subject so vast he should wish to express no opinion till he had thoroughly considered it. He cited an adage: "Do the next thing first." "And," said he, "we have Romanism here which by substituting its priesthood for Christ's 'unchanging priesthood,' undermines Christian morality; and we wish to avail ourselves of Masonic opposition to papacy."

I replied that "Masonry sustains to papacy the relation which the drill-school sustains to the army, and the road to the overthrow of papacy lies through the grave-yard of the lodge! The opposition between them is one of rivalship; at the same trade of salvation by ceremonies and not by Christ."

Dr. Smith said, "The point you make is the one I deeply feel, and have felt, the omitting or excluding of Christ by the lodge." Dr. Smith thanked me for calling, asked me to call again and to exchange the Cynosure with his paper, and, as I consented, put the Cynosure on his list.

Dr. Palmer was visiting the sick. I left my card and a copy of the Memphis Appeal containing the report of my speech in the Tabernacle Baptist church; and will try and see him to-morrow. Returning to my lodgings I found a note from Pres. Hitchcock, of Straight University, inviting me to address the students to-morrow morning at 8:40. This done and and Dr. Palmer visited, I think I must leave for Florida, though Dr. Smith urged me to see other universities here, and if I had weeks they could be agreeably employed and profitably. But all these points will be carried by a National Congress of churches, called by such men as Herrick Johnson, W. C. Gray, Pres. Fairchild, of Kentucky; Dr. William Johnston, of Iowa; Dr. Increase N. Tarbox and Dr. A. A. Miner, endorsed by letter from Joseph Cook, and the cordial co-operation of hundreds of thousands of Scandinavian and German Lutherans, and strongly backed by Wesleyans, United Brethren, Reformed and United Presbyterians and and others, who are fully committed, body and soul, to the cause.

There is still a deficiency of prayer. We "do wrestle not with flesh and blood," and men cannot pravail against the disembodied spiritual "principalities and powers" that run the secret lodges. Prayer is our first need; labor next. If we had a hundred young men like the one who has sent in hundreds of subscribers, the American press would follow our lead. Such papers as the Memphis Appeal owned and conducted by Masons, are not willing to sell themselves, hoodwinked and hampered, to a set of contemptible lodges whose theory reverses the Constitution and Declaration or Independence, and the New Testament on which those two documents are based. Pray and work for subscribers.

NEW ORLEANS, JAN. 21.—On the huge steamer City of Natchez a young Dane, who was a doctor on his way to cure people in Jacksonville, Florida, was an admirable specimen of a EUROPEAN INFIDEL SOCIALIST.

Florid in complexion from a discrete use of pure St. Louis ale (he drank only the pure); courteous and agreeable and young, owner of "a small property" in California,—he was traveling to Florida via the Gulf, and was altogether an agreeable young man. His father is in Denmark, a doctor and materialist, and this son follows his footsteps.

"What makes your father an infidel? The Scandinavians are generally Christians."

"My father objects to Christianity because it upholds the present state of society. Europe was overrun by freebooters and robbers, who settled themselves as dukes and lords, and the present holders of the lands had their titles from them and the masses are toiling for them in hunger and ignorance, and Christianity upholds them."

"Doubtless there are bishops and priests who are corrupt and selfish courtiers; but how does that prove Christianity false?"

"I do not believe there is a God or a hereafter. God would not allow such oppression and hunger of the laboring masses. My mother taught me Christianity, but I could not accept it."

"Rejecting Christianity, God, and hereafter, what do you propose in their place?"

"Nothiug."

"Well, are you sure 'Nothing' would do better than Christianity for the masses?"

"I do not, cannot believe God would allow the toiling masses to starve and suffer, that property-holders may live in luxury and splendor. I should like to believe Christianity but my reason rejects it. The Bible and Confucius have many good things, but neither of them commands my belief."

"You believe in Christ?"

"As a man, and very good man, I do."

"Well, then, let us see what you can and do believe. You believe that he was the illegitimate son of a seduced peasant girl, destitute, poorer than foxes or birds; that without school-learning he has taught the world all it believes of morality and religion; for there is not a foot of free soil, or a quarter section run out on the globe outside of his principles. That young Hebrew peasant, who was murdered 1800 years ago at thirty-three years of age, has, by his simple word, displaced all the gods that men then worshiped, Jupiter, Mars, Diana, and the rest; these have no worshipers now. Two-thirds of the entire world are now ruled by professed believers in Christ. 'The Lord's Prayer' was said last night, probably, by more children than in any night before. And all this has been brought about by 'Nothing,' or by 'Nature,' which practically is the same thing; for who made 'nature?' And you insult this Christ by saying he 'was a great and good man,' when he said he had got 'all power in heaven and earth,' and so was the worst kind of an impostor, unless he was 'The Son of God,' as he said he was!

"And, as to the 'toiling starving masses,' you saw that saloon-keeper get on the cars, followed by a wife and several nice children. He was raving and threatening to 'kill! kill!' while his sweet little girl put her hand on him saying 'Dear papa, don't! Please papa, don't!' He got off at Harrison, Miss., followed by his weeping family, to sell whisky down in Louisiana. He said to me, 'You are a preacher. You preach for money, and I sell whisky for the same.' The neat and well-dressed children of that man were clothed by the money of the 'toiling masses' whose children are in rags. These 'toiling masses' drink NINE HUNDRED MILLIONS of liquor every year while their bread costs one-fifth or sixth as much! One only needs to travel here to see what is starving the 'toiling masses.' And as for God, those who worship him have built the bread-mills which you are talking of blowing up with dynamite for the good of 'the toiling masses;' and while you believe the most monstrous absurdities, you cannot believe in Christ!"

My young fellow-traveller listened respectfully to what I said, looked thoughtful, but made not a word of reply.

There are revivals in the Episcopal churches here under the English evaugelist, Aitken, and under a revivalist among the blacks. J. B.

THE MOODY MISSION.

The eight day's Gospel meeting or mission held in Chicago by the evangelist Moody, closed last Sabbath in the Chicago Avenue church, better known by Mr. Moody's name. From the first the meeting was full and this was expected, so a division was made providing for a women's meeting in the afternoon and a men's meeting in the evening, thus reaching nearly double the number of people. The themes of his different discourses were familiar: The love of God, Assurance of Faith, The Ten Commandments, The Marriage Feast, The Prodigal Son, "Come," etc. Nor could there be seen any change in the manner of presenting them. There was the same earnest rush of words with their ends clipped. Neither grammar nor language are allowed to stand in the way of getting at the hearts of the people. There was no loss of the old power to move the heart and melt to tears, nor to arouse unbounded and spontaneous enthusiasm, as was seen in the crowded Farwell Hall when the evangelist spoke to the busiuess men of the city on the evangelization of Chicago. Mr. Moody made more of the song service than heretofore. Over half an hour was giveu to it, and he personally assisted the leader with urgent ejaculations, and varying a chorus between floor and gallery, sometimes in the women's meetings producing a wonderful effect. The inquiry meetings grew in every way to the end. Over 150 men responded to the eall Friday night to eome aside with the evangelist and pray with him for conversion. Although the thermometer registered 20 degrees below zero that evening, the audience was none the less. As many women came to the inquiry room at times. No reckoning or estimate was attempted of the converts, nor did it seem to be desired, but the effect of these meetings will be felt all through the city. As one of the dailies said, the great tabernacle meetings of 1876 raised the moral condition of Chicago wonderfully more than any one had been able to calculate, and frequent visits from the evangelist should, therefore, be welcomed by all classes.

THE JEFF DAVIS CASE SETTLED.—The denial of his Masoury by the ex-confederate leader published last week has refreshed the memory of Deacon O. M. Brown, one of the old citizens of Oberlin and among the most reliable of men, who met, just at the close of the war, a wealthy slave holder, master of Oglethorp lodge near Andersonville prison pen, Georgia, who told him in good faith that Jeff Davis was a Freemason, and that he had met him frequently in the lodge and at Masonic gatherings. This important fact has been given to the Associated Press and we request our readers to mark the daily papers and send word to this office if they see the above statement in print. It was difficult to find room for Bro. Brown's letter this week. It will be well worth all the expectation of our readers, as there are other facts about Andersonville of the greatest importance. A letter of more significance and value to our cause we have not printed for years.

—Secretary Stoddard went to Iowa last week Wednesday, to assist Bro. Hawley in the county convention at Winfield, Henry county. Bro. M. N. Butler accompanied him part way returning home to Missouri, after a profitable conference with Wisconsin brethren.

—The Band of Hope connected with the Chicago Christian Association wishes to acknowledge with thanks the receipt of $2. from a friend in the city who has long and often experienced how blessed it is to aid worthy and needy objects.

—Bro. Dissette's letters last week were encouraging. He is yet in Champaign, scattering tracts and other documents. He has himself published a small sheet, explaining his work and position with reference to local matters, which is a forcible document and seems to be accomplishing as much, perhaps, as a lecture. He has frequent evidences that his zeal and self-denial are not in vain, and that the sympathy of many people in the city is with him. He writes that he is able to hold the fort aloue. Let all pray that he may have Divine wisdom and power through the Holy Spirit to gain a victory for the truth in that city.

—Rev. W. W. Knipple in the Christian Conservator of Dayton, suggests that even if the members of the United Brethren church who are true to its principles should vote down the proposed new constitution by a strong majority, that would bring about no settlement of the case, since the men who lead the "liberal" party would not cease their efforts until the church is divided.

—Letters from Bro. Dissette received just as we are getting ready for the press state that the Presbyterian pastor and his people are cousidering whether or no they will open their church for a lecture. The Times, the leading paper of the city, shows also a generous and friendly spirit; and there are other indications also that his visit to Champaign is not in vain.

—The Norwegian Lutheran pastors of Chicago, Welo, Juul, Mikkelson, and others to the number of twelve are proposing a discussion of the seeret orders one evening in a week for several weeks. The time and place of this interestiug meeting will be hereafter announced, and the Cynosure will endeavor to give a translation of the discussion.

—Bro. Hawley, the Iowa agent, gave three lectures in the Swedish Lutheran church at Swedesburg, Iowa, beginning Jan. 18th. He was last week engaged in organizing the Henry County Association.

Vick's Illustrated Monthly for January is bound in a superb cover with the annual Floral Guide regularly issued by this long-standing and reliable firm. "Skillful Cultivation" is the editorial topie, and the eontributors discuss onion and mushroom growing and a score of other matters every one is glad to see who loves the fruits and flowers of the garden. A good beginning for the campaigu of summer is to get this Guide and study its pages carefully.

THE HOME.

"EVEN AS HE IS PURE."

Most holy Son of God!
Who this dark world hath trod,
The stainless One, the soul of purity!
We full of guilt and sin,
So dark and foul within,
Would come in humble penitence to thee.

Low, in the very dust,
Yet still with clinging trust
We cast ourselves at thy most blessed feet;
O cleanse away our guilt!
Do with us as thou wilt;
But make us for thy holy service meet.

Only the pure in heart
Shall see thee as thou art,
How shall we, then, the heavenly vision see?
Thy blood, thy blood alone,
Can for our sin atone,
And make us white and pure, and like to thee.

Search us thyself, O Lord!
The candle of thy Word
Flash through the secret places of our soul;
Unveiled before thine eyes,
The hidden thoughts that rise,
Thou, thou alone, canst cleanse and make us whole.

O make us white as snow,
Bright with the roseate glow
Of heavenly love, that wondrous love of thine;
For thee alone to live,
To thee ourselves we give,
Our Great Redeemer, spotless Lamb Divine.

THE HOLY SPIRIT FOR SERVICE.

The gift of the Holy Spirit for service is distinct and separate entirely from conversion. The ministers will bear me out when I state that nine-tenths of the church members cannot perform any work because they are not qualified. Indeed, so true is this that their pastors will not allow them to talk to anxious souls, for fear of their doing more harm than good. Some have been members of a church for more than twenty years, and yet they do more to retard the cause of Christ than anything I know of. We have to ask for this blessing, to knock for it, and search and find out why it does not come. If we regard iniquity in our hearts, if we have some hidden sin, God is not going to give it to us, and if we don't get it, it is as well to stop short and ask the question whey he does not give it. It is not because God is not willing or able, not because he does not want to give it—for we all know that he is always ready to impart it—but because there is something wrong with us. We are not as "an empty vessel"—we are not ready to receive the blessing, and it does not come.

How much do you suppose those early Christians would have accomplished had they gone out preaching before the power came? The rank and file of this world needs this re-inforcement of the Holy Spirit just as much as the preachers. A woman with ten children to take care of, needs it just as much as anybody. A man harrassed with business needs it; there is not a child on earth but needs it. I would rather have one drop of God's power than all the wisdom of the world; one drop of his power is worth all the wisdom and intellectual strength of this earth.

I believe this gift for service is the thing that the church has mislaid. Hundreds and thousands come into the church without even seeking this power. A great many say they have the blessing because they received it ten years ago. They live on that, and seem to forget that there is such a thing as losing it. How many men can you remember who did mighty work ten or fifteen years ago, who have none of the power now? Men must have fresh supplies. We do not get enough of Christ at once to carry us through life. The manna came down fresh every day for the Israelites; and the reason we have so many starved Christians, is because they live on stale manna. We are leaky vessels, and lose the power. Hundreds of men lose the power without knowing it, and they go on with their forms of preaching; and are astonished at their want of success. A minister came to me one day and asked, "How can I keep free and not be trammelled when I attempt to preach?" "If," I replied, "a man is filled with the Holy Ghost, he is not trammelled—he has perfect freedom." When a man is filled with God, he don't care about public opinion; he is simply a mouth-piece to deliver God's message.

I believe that for every work we have to do for God we should get new power. The strength God gave me for Chicago won't do for Boston. When a man is thirsty he wants water, so when Christians are thirsty they want the Holy Spirit above everything else. A man came to me the other day and said his pastor was troubled about somethiug, aud was in great distress.

"Well," said I, "let him alone, he is all right; he is thirsty, and goiug to get filled new."

Stephen was filled with the Holy Ghost, and no man could resist his wisdom; Paul aud Barnabas were filled with the Holy Ghost, and many people were added to the church; the disciples were filled with the Holy Spirit, and great multitudes believed. There will be great multitudes believiug everywhere if we get filled with the Holy Ghost. My friends, shall we seek this power? Let it be a solemn question between you and God. How many want this power? Shall we just stand before God and ask him for this blessing? Let us send up one united prayer that God will empty us of everything contrary to his will, and fill us to-day with the Holy Ghost, that we may be like Barnabas aud Stephen, and the holy Christians that lived in days gone by. —D. L. Moody.

POWER, THE GIFT OF GOD.

It is one of the recognized truths of Christianity, that the power iu which it abides and by which it works, is of God and not of man. In the ordinary work of life man holds in his will all power. By his genius he lays hold of and controls the forces of nature, and compels them into his service. He does not ask God to endow with steam power or electrical power, he did not wait on God for the gift of the fulcrum, the screw, or the lever. These devices and mechanical forces he discovered, and uses at will. But in preaching the Gospel and doing other spiritual work for God, or even in maintaining his own spiritual life, he is dependeut "upon power from on high." Neither can this be obtained by any effort of his own; he waits for it and receives it. It is the gift of God. We are kept in dependence of God at this point. "Power belongeth to God." (Psalms 62: 11.) "Without me," said Christ, "ye can do nothing." By this he meant that whatever their natural ability might be, whatever favorable circumstances might surround them, however energetic their efforts, unless they were endowed with "power from on high," they were powerless in themselves to do the work which he commanded them. Hence, they tarried at Jerusalem, not that they were to get at Jerusalem further revelation of the truth, but that they were to be clothed and furnished with power to make the truth of the Gospel which they already possessed efficient.

Without doubt we are as dependent on this heavenly gift as the first disciples were. The lack of results in much of our work may arise from our overlooking it as a truth, practically neglecting it and doing our work without it. Having the Gospel, and believing it to be true, we attempted to rely upon the truth alone to do the work of convicting and converting men. In preaching these truths we rightly enough bring to bear the help of logic and oratory, and may throw into our address whatever of enthusiasm and earnestness we may be possessed of. Good as these natural powers are, and lawful as it is to use them, they do not take the place of "power from on high." The "Lo, I am with you always," is the promise of power near at hand, whenever we undertake the work of the Lord. But if that power is not sought and appropriated, it does not avail us. The Christian worker or preacher who does not lay hold upon this divine gift to do his work is as sure to fail in his work as the sinner is sure to fail in getting to God, who neglects or ignores Christ as "the Way."

Moreover, it is not true that power is given to us once for all. We learn from the Acts, that, again and again, after the first baptism of power, which the apostles and disciples received on the day of Pentecost, they sought it afresh and received it afresh. The power with which we wrought for God to-day, will not serve our need in the work of to-morrow.

The power of the Holy Ghost for service is a different gift from the Holy Ghost the indwelling Comforter. At least, if it is not a new coming of the Holy Ghost upon us it is a new application of his power, given us for use in service. A father might give to his son a letter of credit with which to travel around the world on business for him; but if, instead of again and again drawing on his credit, he should seek to "work his way," he would be practically as poor as if he had no letter of credit. God has given us power by giving us the Holy Ghost to dwell in us; but if, instead of using that power, we neglect him and seek to discharge our commission by means of our own natural abilities, we are practically destitute of the only power that would avail us, though as a matter of fact, we are possessed of all power. It would be as though an engineer on a train of ears, instead of opening the throttle valve of his eugine, and letting on the steam stored up in the boiler, should get down from his cab and seek to push or pull the traiu by mere human strength. Even if he should call upou all the train men, or the passengers, to assist him, it would not avail. Their combined strength would not be sufficient for the work.

We are aware that all this is so well known and theoretically accepted by every Christian worker, that it may seem needless to speak of it. But we are so prone to forget or neglect the truth on this point, that we need to be constantly reminded of it. The smallness of the results which follow our preaching and personal efforts to win men to Christ makes us fear that we cannot say of the greater part of our work, "The Lord was with us, and worked mightily."

The temptatiou to fall back upon natural ability is very great, and it is only by constantly exercising ourselves iu godliness that our bow may abide in streugth. Especially is this true iu the smaller and more ordinary offices in Christian service. We may earuestly seek power from on high with which to preach a sermon; but we attempt to conduct a prayer meeting, without being careful to tarry before God until we are endued with power for that service. To address a multitude with success, we assume, needs power from God; but to make a pastoral call or to speak to a single soul by the wayside, does not need such a spiritual supplement.

The endowment of power is also essential for the private Christian in his life and work as it is for the minister in his; and yet we have reason to believe that not a few of God's people ignore the truth almost entirely. Our Lord himself did no work, however small in connection with his ministry, except by "the finger of God." That is, he constantly relied upon the presence of the Holy Ghost with which to discharge his ministry. If this was so of him, how much more it is meet that we should wait upon God before attempting even the smallest service for him!—Independent.

DID NOT KNOW IT WAS IN THE BIBLE.

A well-to-do deacon in Connecticut was one morning accosted by his pastor, who said, "Poor Widow Green's wood is out. Can you take her a eord?" "Well," answered the deacon, "I have the wood and I have the team; but who is to pay me for it?" The pastor, somewhat vexed, replied, "I will pay you for it, on condition that you read the first three verses of Psalm 12, before you go to bed to-night." The deacon consented, delivered the wood, and at night opened the Word of God and read: "Blessed is he that considereth the poor: the Lord will deliver him in time of trouble. The Lord will preserve him and keep him alive, and he shall be blest upon the earth; and Thou wilt not deliver him unto the will of his enemies. The Lord will strengthen him upon the bed of languishing; Thou wilt make his bed iu sickness." A few days after the pastor met him again. "How much do I owe you, deacon, for that cord of wood?" "Oh," said the now enlightened man, "do not speak of payment; I did not know those promises were in the Bible. I would not take money for supplying the old widow's wants.—Sel.

IMPRISONED IN AN ICEBERG.

"Sail ahoy!" came a shrill hail from the foretop of the trim bark "Laughing Polly," as it bowled along in the latitude and near vicinity of the South Shetland Islands.

"Where away?" answered a tall man with a tremendous voice, who was pacing up aud down the quarter-deck, muffled in a great pea-jacket.

"Dead ahead!" came the voice of the lookout, who was the captain's son. He had taken the watch so as to be the first to sight land after the long run to the south.

The captain swung himself into the rigging, gave a glance at the supposed vessel, and then dropped to the deck again with a loud laugh. "Your ship is an iceberg," he called out. "A pretty sailor-man you are," he added, "not to tell an iceberg from a whaler."

"I can see her spars," shouted back the boy, who would not ackuowledge his mistake; and indeed the nearer they approached, the more the object appeared like a vessel on the same course as themselves. It seemed a veritable ship, careening slightly in the brisk breeze. There were the white topsails, with the shadows on them distinctly visible, and Ned—for that was our look-out's name—almost thought he made out a pennant at her mizzen-peak. So remarkable was the sight that the sailors all gathered in a group forward, and watched the strange sail. But on getting within a mile of it, they plainly discerned that it was an iceberg of enormous dimensions, and which even, at that distance, seemed to tower above them. Its resemblance to a ship was quickly lost, and it loomed up a great mountain of blue ice, momentarily changing its shape and color.

The captain had just given orders to shift the course of the vessel, when a cry of astonishment rose from the crew, who were still watching the distant berg. The captain and mate rushed forward, and saw the cause of the excitement. The ice-mountain had changed its position, and instead of being upright was heeling over. Faster it moved, until finally, fairly overbalanced, it fell over in the water with a mighty crash, hurling into the air great waves three times as high as their mast-head, and sending out huge rollers on either side, while vast blocks of ice seemed to break off and float away.

"It's gone," shouted Ned, excitedly.

"No, it isn't," said his father. "Just keep your eyes on it."

The words were hardly spoken by the captain before a still more remarkable phenomenon occurred; the iceberg appeared gradually rising from the sea, slowly resuming its original shape, like an island of ice being forced above the surface by some invisible power. Slowly but perceptibly it rose, until the astonished sailors saw the gigantic berg, almost as large as before, rocking and oscillating, again upright upon the surface.

In the meantime a series of waves from the scene of action had reached them, and Ned was nearly thrown from the foretopgallant-top, where he was still clinging. The ship pitched so violently that it seemed almost as if they had experienced a series of tidal waves.

"It's only an upset," said the captain, as Ned rejoined him on deck. "You see, one of these great bergs floats about until it gets top-heavy, which is occasioued by the lower portion, a thousand or fifteen hundred feet below, striking, perhaps, a warm current that melts it away, until finally the exposed portion overbalances the base, and over it goes with a thundering crash, as we have seen."

"I had no idea as large a berg as that could tip over," said the young sailor.

"I have seen larger ones than that roll," replied the captain. "There seems to be no limit to their size. An iceberg was observed some years ago, not four hundred miles from here, that was two and a half miles long, over two miles broad, and a hundred and fifty feet high, and it must have weighed fifteen hundred million tons. Yet that was by no means a large one. I have seen them off Cape Horn nearly eight hundred feet high; and a mass of icebergs was once seen sixty miles long by forty broad, and three hundred feet high. As only one-tenth of the whole mass rises above the water, the higher out of water, the larger they are, and one which exposes two hundred feet would probably have eighteen hundred feet under water."

The conversation was here interrupted by a hail always welcome on a whaler. Whether it was "There she blows!" or "Whale o'!" they could uot make out; but seeing the lookout pointing towards the floating island, they turned that way.

The vessel had suddenly passed a projection of the berg that showed them its broad side and snowy peak looming three hundred and fifty feet into the air, and near the top, frozen in the icy block, was the black body of an immense whale.

"Never mind the boats," said the captain, recovering from his astouishment, and recalling an order which he had given upon hearing the hail. "Well, that beats all my experience in thirty years' whaling," he continued. "A fin-back in an iceberg!"

"A frozen whale in command of a ship of ice," said Ned. "And to think that we saw it rise three hundred feet from the water!"

"It's the greatest leap on record," exclaimed his father, "and as such jumps don't occur every day, we may as well have a nearer view;" and, instructing the helmsman, the whaler was hauled a point or so on the wind. It was soon found, however, that a nearer view of the whale would involve being becalmed in the lee of the berg, so that the boat was lowered, and the captain and Ned were soon being pulled toward the huge prisoner of the ice-island.

As they approached, the sight became still more remarkable and impressive. The sight was very tantalizing to the whalers, as there above their reach was the game they were in search of, but it was out of their power to dislodge it from its bed of ice, and they reluctantly rowed back under the shadow of the berg. Looking up at the imprisoned whale, they saw that it was a rorqual nearly one hundred feet in length—the largest of living animals.

As the wind had died down, they could not leave, and so they witnessed the effect of sunset on the ice-island. The tall peak was flooded with golden lights; dark shadows crept up its sides, gradually changing the golden radiance to gleaming silver, then to grey, which was in turn lost in the approaching gloom. But soon the moon appeared, bathing the berg with its silvery light and bringing out with startling distinctness the the frozen giant.

Late into the night the sailors watched the island of ice, fearing that perhaps the surface current might bring them dangerously near it, but finally the wind sprang up, the sails filled, and the frozen whale was soon lost in the distance.

Upon the return of the whaler, two years later, the story was told, and it was found that several sea-captains had observed similar sights. One had seen a polar bear so imprisoned, while others told of euormous rocks aud bowlders that the bergs lifted from the sea. The presence of the whale in the berg was explained in a remarkable way. The huge animal was not entombed at sea, but it had been washed upon the thick ice-sheet in the lee of some antarctic island (these sheets sometimes extend many miles from shore); the snow from the shore had blown over it year after year, melting and freezing, until finally it was surrounded by hard, clear ice; the weight, ever increasing, forced the sheet under water, and as the snow was continually piling up on the top and changing to ice, the great mass with the imprisoned whale finally projected far out under the sea. The snow continued still melting and freezing, but piling upward. And then its weight, or perhaps a heavy gale, detached the mass from the field, and it floated away, an island of ice, bearing the captured whale beneath the sea.

As we have seen, the warmer currents wear away the submerged portion until the berg became top-heavy and overturned, bringing the long-imprisoned monster high up in air.

Sometimes, instead of being frozen in and carried to sea, whales are forced far inland. Captain Pendleton, who accompanied one of the United States expeditions to the antarctic sea, saw a whale two hundred and eighty feet from the surface of the water, in an ice-cliff eight hundred feet high. Whales and their skeletons have not only been found above the level of the sea at South Shetland, but a mile and a half inland away from the shore—wonderful examples of the power of frozen snow and water. —C. J. Holder, in St. Nicholas.

TEMPERANCE.

INSANE THROUGH DRINK.—The following is a touching case of insanity tried the other day before one of our courts. William Kirby, a tug captain, was also declared insane. He imagined that he owned an aerial tug which was propelled by mammoth wings. Kirby is a splendid specimen of physical manhood, and he was brought to his present deplorable condition by excessive use of stimulants. His aged mother, who was present during the inquiry, clung to his neck and cried as if her heart would break, while she called him endearing names.

MRS. VILLARD DECLINED.—Mrs. Henry Villard, who is now staying in Berlin, having gone abroad with her husband a year and a half ago, for a long rest, was recently asked by the Crown Princess of Germany, to take the part of an English barmaid at a fancy fair, in which that lady was deeply interested. The Princess and Mrs. Villard are on intimate terms, and the former meant to offer her friend a compliment by the invitation, not knowing that the danghter of William Lloyd Garrison, like her father and her brother, is devoted to total abstinence. Mrs. Villard, although conscious that requests from the royal family are considered commands, premptorily declined the intended honor. She expressed her cheerful willingness to aid the fair, which was a charitable object, but not iu that way. The Princess on learuing the American lady's feelings, expressed regret, and offered an apology for her involuntary discourtesy.

HAVOC AMONG BREWERS.—The secretary of the United States Brewer's Association says this: "In Kansas the prohibition system has been in operation for two years, and all brewers are ruined. No organization, therefore, exists in that State, and iu Iowa the prohibition law, which has gone into operation there, has made terrible havoc among brewers, and many of them are completely ruined." And yet many persons and papers tell us that prohibition does not prohibit, and that there is more whisky consumed now in Kansas than ever before.

THE LOGIC OF PROHIBITION.

The object of prohibition is a point where much fog has been made to gather. And multitudes of men refuse to vote prohibition into politics because of widespread, but false, notions as to its object.

One misconception is that prohibition aims to "make people good by law." The changes have been rung upon this charge until many actually believe that prohibition's object is "to coerce men to virtue;" to reform men from without;" "to purify the streams at the neglect of the fountain;" and, thinking the method false, they shout, "Away with it!" On the contrary, there is not a man among Prohibitionists cherishing this delusion—not one! The object is neither expressed nor implied in action or platform. It is not iu fact nor in effect, either in the principle or policy of prohibition. Law is protective and restrictive, not reformatory. Its aim is to guard rights, not to produce righteousness. No advocate of prohibition supposes that it is going to make a man virtuous by taking the liquor saloon out of his path. It is not framed to reform the man, but to protect society. Reformation will come through other processes and agencies, but the law will give reformation a better chance.

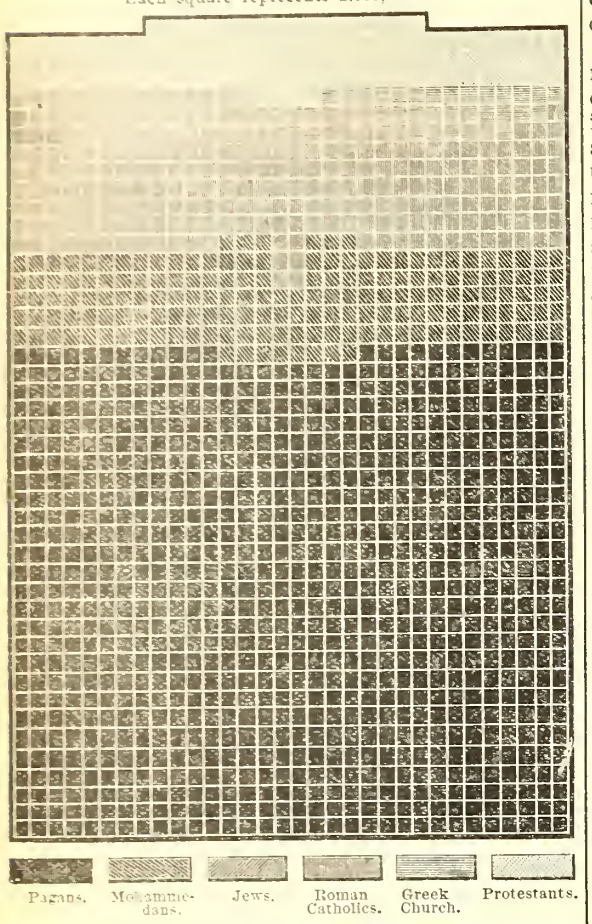
Are we to be told, because we advocate a law prohibiting gambling houses, that we are seeking "to coerce men to virtue," and "to reform men from without, and not from within?" Does my advocacy of civil enactment concerning the Sabbath expose me to the charge of seeking "to make people good by law," to purify the streams to the neglect of the fountain?" Who expects to take the love of money out of men's hearts by shutting up the gambling saloons? Who expects to make men holily observe God's day by a Sabbath law? That is not the object in either case; nor is the making men "good" the object of the prohibiting of the liquor traffic.

A second misconception of the object of prohibition is, that it seeks to strike the individual, to invade his rights, to enter his home, and to compel him to stop drinking. But this is not its object. Surely we may say, with every powerful emphasis, this is not its object. Prohibition aims at a thing, not a man. It means the drink shop, first and last and all the time. It would smite a traffic, not a personal indulgence; annihilate grog shops, not invade homes. If, in abolishing the saloon, prohibition does sometimes touch a persoual right, the saloon is nevertheless the thing aimed at, and not the personal right.

See how this works in other matters. A mob is a bad thing. Prohibition says, "Repress it." But to repress it, it may be necessary to scize private property and destroy life; nevertheless, the mob is what prohibition is after, not the life and the property. A conflagration is a bad thing. Prohibition says, "Stop it." But to "stop it" may require seizure and destruction of property in the path of the fire; nevertheless, the fire is what prohibition is after, not the property. A contagious disease is a bad thing. Prohibition says, "Fence it in; the house must be quarantined." But that's an interference with personal liberty; nevertheless, the contagion is what prohibition is after, uot personal liberty. So the saloon is a bad thing. Prohibition says, "Abolish it." But to abolish it, it may be necessary to interfere with some private drinking usage; nevertheless, the saloon is what prohibition is after, not the private usage.

Can interferencc with personal liberty be pleaded as against the repression of the mob? No. Can the plea of individual right of property bar the effort to stamp out a conflagration? No. Can the right to go in and out of our houses at pleasure be urged as against the restraints of quarautine? No. Neither can a private drinking usage constitute a good reason for opposing a prohibitory liquor law. If the law smites the usage in smiting the saloon, it does so only incidentally. Good citizenship will willingly bear an incidental evil for the sake of au essential and universal good. Life, in the end, will be more sacred if we repress the mob. Property, in the end, will have better securities if we put out the fire. Personal liberty, in the end, will have complete safeguards if we stamp out the contagion. So, every interest of society and of the individual, in the end, will be better shielded if once we say, determinedly and effectually, "The saloon must go!"

The king of the Maories in New Zealand, has kept the promise he made while in England, to work for the temperance reform among his people, 11,559 of whom have become tetotallers aud wear the blue ribbon.



A Philadelphia judge has revoked the licenses of eleven saloon-keepers for violating the Sunday liquor law. One of the dealers, in his anxiety to retain his lucrative business, swore that the stuff he sold for lager beer was not that at all, but was a mixture of yeast and hominy, when the judge not only sentenced him for defying the law, but for fraud.

The man who cannot mind his own business is not to be trusted with the king's.

" product in gold and silver mines	400,000,000
" railroad net earnings	250,000,000

The wealth of the country more than keeps pace with the advance in population. It has quadrupled since 1850, and multiplied sixteen-fold within the memory of persons now living. Mr. Mulhall, the English statistician, says, "The wealth of the United States is accumulating at the rate of $2,500,000 a day." Senator Hoar, of Massachusetts, says, "Every twenty years there is added to the valuation of this country wealth enough to buy the whole German Empire, with its buildings, its ships and its invested property." According to Dr. Dorchester, one-fifth of the population is made up of evangelical Christians. Thus, one-fifth of all this enormous wealth supposedly belongs to the Evangelical church.

We spend every year in dress goods, $125,000,000; In kid gloves, $25,000,000; In ostrich feathers, $5,000,000; for tobacco, $600,000,000, and Christian men and some ministers spend their share. For liquor we spend $900,000,000. Think of it! $1,500,000,000 as a systematic, voluntary offering, every year, for liquor and tobacco alone, to say nothing of the theatre and opera and other enormous exactions of worldly conformity, less injurious indeed to the body, but equally fatal to the soul! and all that can be spared from these fabulous resources and from this tremendous waste, and that, too, under the great pressure of imperative necessities and the most splendid opportunities, for the entire work of home and foreign missions combined is the comparatively paltry sum of $5,500,000. May not our Divine Master say to his professed followers in Christian America, "Why call ye me Lord, Lord, and do not the things which I say?" Let us examine ourselves and see if the stirring words of the prophet do not apply to us also, "Will a man rob God? Yet ye have robbed me, even this whole nation." Mal. 3: 8.

There are hundreds of thousands of precious souls in our large cities and other parts of the land without the Gospel and ignorant of its saving power; and hundreds of millions abroad in the blackness of heathenism who have yet to hear for the first time the "Glad tidings of great joy which shall be to all people." The Macedonian cry is fairly storming the church for men and means, and yet at the late 75th Anniversary of the "American Board" in Boston, a gathering unprecedented in the history of missions, the call for fifty new men for the field did not meet with any immediate response.

Another denomination in the very front rank of missionary enterprise, closes one of its most successful years with a debt of $200,000, a debt arising from an unusual shortage in gifts and legacies, and the bulk of which had to be shamefully charged up to its needy missions and poorly paid missionaries. It reports 2,383 non-contributing churches to foreign missions, and 1,545 to home missions, with a Sabbath-school membership of 250,000 following their example. Still another denomination reports over one million of its members, in good and regular standing, who do not give a penny a year for Christian missions—home or foreign.

Other evangelical churches make a very similar showing, many of them even less favorable. We know of nothing better calculated to stir up the membership than a free circulation of their own reports. How can the church of Christ have such a record under a living ministry, faithful church officers, and Christian training? Dr. Duff boldly asserted that the greatest hindrance to missions was "the apathy of the Christian ministry;" and Joseph Cook, on returning from his trip around the world said, "our greatest hindrance to missions abroad, is semi-universalism at home."

As Mr. Moody said in Chicago, "Our great need is a personal interview with God."

We have genius, eloquence, learning, sagacity, wealth and organization; but what are all these without heart loyalty to Jesus Christ? Instead of being separated to God, many in the church live in conformity with the world. (Jas. 4: 4; 2 Cor. 6; 16–18.)

"Go ye into all the world and preach the Gospel to every creature."

"Freely ye have received, freely give."

"Thou wicked and slothful servant, . . thou oughtest to have put my money to the exchangers, and then at my coming I should have received mine own with usury." Matt. 25: 26, 27.

"Moreover it is required in stewards, that a man be found faithful." 1 Cor. 4: 2.

"They that be wise shall shine as the brightness of the firmament, and they that turn many to righteousness, as the stars for ever and ever." Dan. 12: 3.

In the 19th century all the missionary societies of the world have spent about $300,000,000; while Christian nations have spent in the same time $15,000,000,000 in war; that is, one dollar for the Gospel of peace and fifty dollars for the demon of war. The Chinese spend $200,000,000 annually for their religion.

—In the great Farwell Hall meeting Friday noon on city missions, last Friday, Mr. Moody said that he was having calls every day asking that somebody be sent to help in Gospel meetings. The Independent says, "A prominent evangelist says he never had so large a correspondence on the subject of revivals as he is receiving this winter. There are many indications that the churches both desire and expect a fruitful season of evangelistic work. There is a great demand for the services of evangelists; but hundreds of pastors are preparing to conduct revival meetings without the help of revivalists."

—The American Missionary Association has taken measures to re-open the colored school recently burned down at Quitman, Ga. It will be located, probably, at Thomasville, twenty-five miles distant from its former location.

—The Methodist press, especially of the West, gives several columns weekly to revival items. The Central Advocate, of St. Louis, gave in its issue of January 13th, reports of conversions in Missouri, Kansas, and Southern Illinois, chiefly, which aggregate about 1,600. In the First Church, of St Joseph, Mo., 106 persons have been received since Oct. 11th. In Wellington, Kans., there have been 125 conversions, and the revival is "but just begun." The Western Advocate, of Cincinnati, reported in a recent issue no fewer than 2,700 conversions. At Los Angeles, Cal., revival meetings were in the fifth week, at last accounts, with 800 conversions. In the Connersville District, of Indiana, there have been over 500 conversions, of which 259 were in Connersville.

—A number of the members of the Moody church, Chicago, are in foreign missionary fields, among them are Mr. A. W. Prautch at Elich-pur, Berar, India; Mr. F. Fransen, Carlsruhe, Baden, Germany; Mr. Jansen in Finland, and Miss Dr. Conditt, formerly superintendent of the Medical Mission, now at Bombay, India. Letters from these parties are replete with interest.

—A young man on the island of St. Mary's, one of the Azors, who, before his conversion, was adicted to gambling and worse evils, has lately been arrested for the crime of telling his neighbors of Jesus, the only Saviour of sinners!

—A great revival is in progress in the Wheeler Mission, in the village of Wheeler, Mich., a mission of the United Brethren church. The meetings have been held about six weeks, and upwards of a hundred persons have been to the altar. The pastor of the Methodist Episcopal church took part in the services.

—At a meeting of the Chicago Methodist ministers last week, they voted their "hearty appreciation" to Postmaster General Vilas for his recent letter to the postmaster at Baltimore concerning Sabbath mail delivery. They also expressed their gratitude to the Postmaster General that Postmaster Judd had prohibited the sale of stamps, postal cards, and envelopes upon the Sabbath.

—At a Sabbath-school missionary meeting in this city last Monday, Rev. Hrejsa, pastor of the Bohemian Methodist church, said that the Bohemian people had been sorely mis-judged by the American people. There seemed to be a feeling that they were not Christians at heart. This was entirely wrong, for they as a people had been persecuted for religion's sake. He had a congregation of 100 Bohemians and they were every one earnest Christians.

LODGE NOTES.

—The annual reunion of Scotch Rite Masons in Lyons, Iowa, last week, when the degrees from the 4th to 32d were conferred. An arrangement was made with a quartet of men and women who furnished vocal music during the Hiramite performance. It must have been an interesting situation for candidates and quartet.

—The Royal Society of Good Fellows is a new secret insurance society, organized in the State of Rhode Island, incorporated under the laws of the State of Rhode Island in 1882. One of its advocates says of the order: "Every member is interested, and has an equal voice in the management. Being founded on business principles it is calculated to perpetuate itself, as it is to the interest of every member to have it managed systematically and honestly. Being a fraternal organization, with no stockholders, and no one to be enriched thereby, there is no danger of an attempt to defraud the family of the deceased member."

—The Odd-fellows are preparing for a "decoration day" of their own, as we learn from the following in the Boston Globe: "The question of an Odd-fellows' decoration day is under consideration in some of the lodges in several jurisdictions. The Maine Grand Lodge has already voted to set aside one day of the year for the decoration of graves of deceased brothers, and several Western jurisdictions have done likewise. It is a matter of much interest, and will probably be broached at the next session of our Grand Lodge."

—The Canadian Craftsman says that the square and compasses can be found in Canada "over not a few bar-room doors."

—Canada Grand Lodge does not prohibit Master Masons from joining a "Masonic" Temperance Society or the "Masonic" Rite of Memphis, nor yet the "Masonic" A. & A. S. R.

—The St. Louis hotels are preparing for the next Knight Templar Conclave. The Knights have to make contracts with them at $4 per day each man, and four in a room.

—T. S. Parvin, Grand Secretary of Iowa, says: "As well might the Grand Lodge of Ohio forbid its members to engage in conferring the degrees of Odd-fellowship, or United Workmen [as to forbid membership in the Memphis Rite]. That it may prohibit the use of its halls for such purposes we concede, but it cannot muzzle the mouths of its members in this free country and this nineteenth century." Upon this the Masonic Home Journal of Louisville, Ky., says: "Now we want to know by what right a Grand Lodge can dictate as to what a lodge shall do with its private property when it does not make immoral use of it, or disclose the secrets of Masonry?"

—"The New York Corner Stone, in commenting upon the coronation of brother Rob Morris, quotes him as claiming the order of the Eastern Star as being purely 'Christian Masonry.' We are pleased to say that in Maryland we do not so understand it. Our bodies of the Eastern Star are composed largely of Hebrew ladies, and they are not only good and faithful workers but make excellent presiding officers."—Baltimore Sunday Herald. Masonry is all things to all men. It is so devised that Christians think it Christianity, Jews think it Judaism, Turks think it Mohammedanism, and the devil knows it is his own! Bob Morris was speaking for the Christian women of the North, and the Herald was speaking for the Hebrew women of the South, and both were deceiving their constituents.—Washington American.

—Sir John A. Macdonald, the Canadian politician who has for some time been prime minister of the Dominion, is a Freemason and quoted by the lodge press as representative of the Grand Lodge of England with that of Canada.

—Senator Jones of Florida is reported a Freemason, but the lodge papers complain that he does not work much at the lodge business.

Sing the Reform

Into the Hearts of the People!

BETWEEN TWO OPINIONS.

BY E. E. FLAGG.

Author of "Holden with Cords," "A Sunny Life," "Little People," etc.

This latest and best of Miss Flagg's works is now ready in handsome print, neatly bound. The story begins in a quiet New England home, and paints its homely joys with a delicacy and truthfulness worthy the hand of Harriet Beecher Stowe. The scene then changes to a thriving, growing, palpitating young Western city, and with great power and startling accuracy the writer leads us behind the scenes that we may see the machinery that works the liquor traffic and labor troubles. The story of the strike, the mob, the attempted assassination, the saloon-keeper's wiles, the curse of his trade, the power of the Christian faith to change him to a messenger of mercy, the criminal and the hidden power that shields him from justice, the land robbers tricks, the dark and secret conspiracies of the lodge—these and all the incidents of the book are portrayed with rare tact and great power of description. It is emphatically a book for the hour. And what is better and yet more striking, the incidents are facts, and every one a powerful and convincing argument against the lodge and the saloon.

Every temperance man and woman should read this book. No temperance story like it was ever planned, much less ably executed. A wonderful light is thrown upon the difficulties in the way of prohibition. Learn how they may be avoided.

Every one who loves to read a good story, chaste and elegant in expression, pure in thought, true in incident, deeply interesting in its narrative, should read this book.

READ THESE NOTICES FROM THE PRESS:

The Interior, Chicago.

"Between Two Opinions," hy E. E. Flagg, is an anti-Masonic, anti-liquor, woman-suffrage, honest-brotherhood hook, from the press of the "National Christian Association," Chicago.

The Free Methodist, Chicago.

"Between Two Opinions" is a story, its incidents vouched for as facts, which presents a powerful argument on these questions and must attract thousands of readers among our thinking and ohservant people. The plot of the story is neither startling nor novel, hut it develops a wonderful strength in following the experiences of people in the common, every-day walks of life.

Christian Instructor, Philadelphia.

There are important questions pressing upon American politics to-day; two of them are prohibition and the labor question as connected with the secret unions of workingmen. This work is an expose of the twin evils, secret societies and the saloons. The truths are given in the form of a story; not startling, hut thrilling experiences of home life that are vouched for as facts. The evidences presented of the impossihility of reaching the saloon keeper so long as he and the officers of the law are sworn hrothers in the den of some secret society, are conclusive enough to awaken the most careless and ohtuse memher of society. It is a valuahle hook for the masses to read.

Berea, Kentucky, Evangelist.

The object of the volume is to illustrate the practical workings of Secret Societies, and especially to show how the Lodge upholds the saloon, and this very important design is wrought out with much skill, clearness and power. By reading it temperance people may learn much ahout the difficulties in the way of prohihition. Though in some sense fiction, still the book is hardly that, since the incidents are, without exception, matters of fact. Our friends will he bettered hy reading it. Give it to the children; it may saye them from much evil.

The Standard, Chicago.

It is written in the interests of reform, more especially temperance and Anti-masonry. Thc title of the story suggests the special aim of it, which is to protest against all "halting between two opinions;" in other words, is a plea for radicalism. The story is vigorously written, and will interest even readers who do not altogether helieve in its doctrine.

The Pacific, San Francisco.

It is a story intended to do service against the saloons, and in favor of Womans' Christian Temperance work, and especially against the secret orders—Freemasons, Odd-fellows, the Knights of Lahor, etc. No reflecting man can douht that any comhination of picked classes and individuals is liahle to great abuse. It is ohvious, also, that secret orders are specially capable of heing used in a selfish and unprincipled way. Whether hecause of this liability the method of reform should he one that would exterminate such orders, is a question. But it must do good to have hooks written which show the excesses and dangers to which these societies are exposed: for our civilization is honey-comhed with them, and in many places citizens, who really don't care for them, appear to he ohliged to join a half dozen of them for fear of losing some husiness.

From the American, Washington.

We are reading, in spare moments, Miss Flagg's new hook, "Between Two Opinions," and the estimate we have thus far put upon it is that it is masterly both in style and argument. One is insensihly made to feel that he is reading facts and not fiction; that the hook is not a play upon the imagination but an unraveling of mysterious circumstances which have an important bearing upon current events. It is a book for thoughtful men and women to read, not light in style, yet pleasing in narrative; not startling in plot, yet full of bright surprises and interesting episodes. Written to discuss profound themes, it nevertheless contains touches of true domestic sentiment and vihrates sweet and tender chords.

Sandy Lake, Pa., News.

This is, religiously, morally and mechanically a beautiful book. It is a volume of 386 pages, the first issued by the National Christian Association, Chicago, written by Miss E. E. Flagg, of Wellesley, Mass., author of several volumes, one of which received the prize offered by the well-known publishers of juvenile literature, D. Lothrop & Co., Boston. Like "Uncle Tom's Cabin," it has been extensively read as a serial; and those who have read it in parts will wish to read it as a whole. We predict for it an extensive sale.

Law and Order, Boston.

The hook takes high ground for prohibition of the liquor curse, for woman's hallot for home protection, and for a better and more honest hrotherhood than is forced by their obligations upon the memhefs of secret orders. It is, therefore, a valuable book for several large classes of American readers.

Birmingham, Iowa, Free Press.

It differs from the popular story, "The Bread-winners" of a year ago. It greatly differs from that hook in that it is written from the Christian standpoint, and its heautiful and touching descriptions of home life and home duties and heroic self-denyings will waken a responsive echo in every heart, that has not by dissipation lost the taste for the pure joys of home.

The Religious Telescope.

The author, Miss Flagg, is a hrilliant writer. The stirring questions in American politics are undoubtedly prohihition and the lahor movemeut as champioued hy the secret unions of working men, which direct the strikes that with more and more frequency occur in our cities. "Between Two Opinions" is a story, its incidents vouched for as facts, which presents a powerful argument on these questions, and must attract thousands of readers among our thinking people.

From the Christian Conservator.

This is a charming book, written in an attractive manner. It is so full of sunshine and so radiant with light that one is enlightened, warmed, and, hefore they are conscious of it, set against the lodge. The style gleams, glows and sparkles. It is dignified and simple. It is the right hook to place in the hands of your wife or daughter to superinduce co-operation with you in anti-secrecy work. Every minister's wife should read it, and then, if her husband is not an Anti-mason, he should take his turn next and become one. Send for a copy.

FARM NOTES.

LANDSCAPE PLANTING FOR WINTER EFFECT.

Harmony and contrasts are the leading features necessary to produce pleasing impressions and striking effects in lawn and park scenery. To insure these in a satisfactory manner, requires not only skill and keen appreciation of natural beauty, but also an intimate knowledge of the character, growth, and general habit of each tree and shrub to be employed. A single misplaced tree may mar the effect of an entire group, which otherwise, would be an object of beauty.

Winter is not the proper season for planting trees, but it is the most favorable time for preparing plans for their arrangement, and for determining and marking the places where they are to be planted the coming spring. This is especially the case when the production of effective winter scenery is the object in view. The material to be employed for this latter purpose consists principally of trees with evergreen foliage, and those having brilliant stems and branches; the former impart warmth and tone to a winter landscape; while the latter produce pleasing and often decided contrasts.

The Red-barked Dogwood, several of the bright, yellow-stemmed willows, the Golden-barked Linden, the Golden-barked Ash, with its yellow stem and oddly twisted branches, and various shrubs with brilliant-colored branches, may be advantageously used for the purpose. Then there are many varieties of trees—whose drooping and curiously-shaped branches make them as attractive when defoliated as when in leafage—which are eminently adapted for combination with evergreens for winter landscape effects. Owners of large estates should not omit to plant some portion of their grounds, with a special view to their appearance in winter, while even in small lawns the judicious employment of a few evergreens and trees or shrubs, with brilliant-colored bark, adds much to impart brightness and cheer to chill and dreary surroundings.—American Agriculturist.

From ten years' testing with store steers, Prof. Brown finds that the cheapest feed is permanent pasture, where it costs but two cents for each pound added in live weight. Of the twenty different rations used some made the beef cost so high as 14 cents per pound. Permanent pasture cannot be destroyed by drouth or forst; it is a continual source of wealth. One acre at the Ontario Agricultural College kept two cows from May till October in good condition so that they produced 7,800 pounds of milk during that year. Following is a mixture of pounds of seed for laying down a permanent pasture of one acre: Meadow fescue, 6; meadow foxtail, 4; redtop, 2; orchard grass, 3; Kentucky blue, 2; timothy, 4; rye grass, 1; yellow oat grass, 2; making twenty-four pounds, and add the following clovers: Lucern, 5; white clover, 3; alsike, 2; red, 1; yellow, 1; altogether thirty-six pounds of seed to the acre. The average run given to a cow in the Ontario pastures is three acres, and the average quantity of milk only 950 pounds for a year, while the estimated amount that should be given is a trifle short of 5,000 pounds.

INTERESTING TO GARDENERS.

A new Radish has just been introduced to American gardeners, which if possessed of the points claimed for it, and we have no reason to doubt it, every gardener in the United States will want to try. The introducers exercised their usual care, before recommending it, distributing small quantities of seed among the leading gardeners of Rochester in the spring of 1884, that they might be assured of its retaining the good qualities exhibited in the first experiment. The Floral Guide says of this radish, which is named "Vick's Early Scarlet Globe Radish," that the unanimous testimony of those who tried it is that it is the earliest and best variety for forcing, and in color, also, the handsomest; mild in flavor, crisp and juicy, able to stand a great amount of heat without becoming pithy, and will prove an excellent radish for garden culture. If our readers want to learn more of this new radish, we would advise them to send 10 cents to James Vick, Seedsman, Rochester, N. Y., for a copy of the valuable Floral Guide. The amount may be deducted from the first order. It is a wonderful as well as a beautiful work, of over 150 pages of instructive reading about flowers and vegetables, with a thousand illustrations.

LUCILLE VERNON.

Cloth.....75 cents.

THIS is a pleasant surprise in many ways. The author is Rev. W. T. Meloy, of the United Presbyterian Church of Chicago, and the book is published by the Board of Publication of his denomination. It is a love story, not "fascinating," but with so much of genial interest that the reader is in no danger of laying it down unfinished. * * * The moral purpose of the book is to describe and vindicate Christian character, in its more heroic aspects, and it is a success. We congratulate the author and the United Presbyterian Board of Publication on this literary lily of the valley.—The Interior.

"LUCILLE VERNON" is evidently not an ideal sketch, but the fictitious names used represent to a great extent real men and women of flesh and blood. The characters of many of them are by no means attractive, but are perfect counterparts of querulous, obstinate and parsimonious professors who are thorns in the flesh of many a pastor in all the churches. But as in all the churches, there were also good and true men and women at Lansington, who upheld and encouraged the pastor. * * * In its author will be recognized the worthy pastor of the First United Presbyterian Church of Chicago, and a welcome contributor to these columns.—United Presbyterian.

The heroine, who becomes the bride of the pastor of the church at Lansington, is a wonderful exemplification of how a woman who is a true wife and help-meet may throw her life and energies into the great work of saving souls; aiding, by gentle words and sympathy, wise counsel and brave endurance, the husband having charge of a congregation where the Demon of Misrule held full sway. We follow with interest the history of the wife and husband through their hours of despondency and discouragement to the happy ending, where religion, harmony and peace have gained the ascendency and the good man and wife find their reward.—Pittsburgh Daily Telegraph.

IN THE COILS;

The Coming Conflict.

A NEW AND STRANGE STORY BASED ON STARTLING FACTS, VIVIDLY PORTRAYING A MYSTERIOUS AND DANGEROUS POWER AT WORK IN THE GOVERNMENT, THE CHURCH, AND THE HOME.

"All will agree that this is a powerfully written story."—Evangelist, (Chicago, Ills.)

"A book which we trust may have a wide circulation."—National Baptist, (Philadelphia.)

"So intensely interesting did I find it that it was hard to pause until the last sentence was read. This work places the author high among the writers of fiction."—W. W. Barr, D. D. in Christian Instructor, (Philadelphia.)

"Unless we are greatly mistaken, the work will do more to awaken the American church and people to the evils of Freemasonry than any other book recently published."—Evangelical Repository.

"The book will create a sensation in Masonic circles, and evoke criticism of a most relentless character. The courage of the author in attacking such a rock-rooted bulwark as Freemasonry is something to admire, Fanatic though he be."—Nebraska Watchman.

"Light is needed on this subject and needed badly, and we welcome this contribution to the literature of anti-secretism, and cordially commend it to the favorable attention of our readers."—United Presbyterian, (Pittsburgh.)

"A charming work, fit to be classed with 'Uncle Tom's Cabin;' it is indeed less a work of fiction. The volume is as valuable as a work of reference as it is agreeable, truthful and useful. Our young folks will not leave the book, if they begin it, till they 'see how it turns out.'"—Cynosure, (Chicago, Ills.)

The Facts Stated.

HON. THURLOW WEED ON THE MORGAN ABDUCTION.

This is a sixteen page pamphlet comprising a letter written by Mr. Weed, and read at the unveiling of the monument erected to the memory of Capt. William Morgan. The frontispiece is an engraving of the monument. It is a history of the unlawful seizure and confinement of Morgan in the Canandaigua jail, his subsequent conveyance by Freemasons to Fort Niagara, and drowning in Lake Ontario. He not only subscribes his NAME to the letter, but ATTACHES HIS AFFIDAVIT to it.

In closing his letter he writes: I now look back through an interval of fifty-six years with a conscious sense of having been governed through the "Anti-Masonic excitement" by a sincere desire, first, to vindicate the violated laws of my country, and next, to arrest the great power and dangerous influences of "secret societies."

The pamphlet is well worth perusing, and is doubtless the last historical article which this great journalist and politician wrote. [Chicago, National Christian Association.] Single copy, 5 cents.

HOME AND HEALTH.

KITCHEN FLOORS.

Good white pine flooring of four or five inch stuff, tongued and grooved and thoroughly seasoned, is very good. This may also be laid with painted joints, and thus made nearly or quite water and air-tight. It is far more convenient to have it primed with a good filling coat, after touching the knots over with shellac varnish, and painted. Old floors that have become discolored can be stained to a darker shade of the same kind of wood, or painted with two coats of good white lead and linseed oil, tinted as may be most agreeable to the eye, and most convenient. The best plan is to paint such floors with half boiled and half raw oil, using "drier" as may be necessary, and to leave the rooms unused as long as possible, to allow the paint to become thoroughly dry and hard. This can be done before the house is occupied, if newly built, or during the absence of the family, or when other parts of the house can be used, and the painted floors left for a week, at least, and as much longer as possible, and not stepped upon.

A floor well painted of a bright, cheerful, warm color, is comfortable without oil-cloth or carpet, yet these will be found to add greatly to looks and to comfort. A piece of oil-cloth of small, bright pattern may well be laid in front of the sink, or of the table where dishes are washed if there be no sink, wherever much wear comes, and another near the stove. Besides these, a carpet rug may be provided for the middle of the floor. This rug can be taken up, shaken out every day, or whipped, and laid down when the principal work of the day is over. Thus the kitchen will, with very little trouble, look as well as many people's parlors, and will become the pride of those who occupy it as a work-room and sitting-room. It will be less difficult for the housekeeper to have her tins and coppers kept bright, the stove always well blackened, and everything in order.—American Agriculturist.

A GOOD DISH FOR A TWO-YEAR BABY.

When properly made, milk toast is a most satisfactory supper for babies over two years old. Pare away the crust from slices of stale, light, sweet bread, and with a cake-cutter or sharp edged tumbler cut each of these into a round, cooky-shaped piece. (They taste better to baby—and to bigger children—in this form than in the rectangular slice. I know one baby, twenty years old, who, when appetite flags, begs for "round cream-toast, such as mamma used to make for us when we were wee bits of things.") Spread the rounds on a platter; set them on the oven a few minutes until they begin to roughen all over. Then toast them quickly over a clear fire, and scrape off every burnt crumb to bring the surface to a uniform shade of yellow brown. Dip each piece, as it is taken from the toaster, for a hasty second into boiling water (salted), butter lightly, and pile them in a bowl. Cover out of sight with scalding milk, also salted, fit on a close top to the bowl, and set in a pan of boiling water in a pretty brisk oven for fifteen or twenty minutes, The process will yield a dish so unlike the insipid stuff accepted and eaten under the name of "dip" or "milk" or "soft toast" as to justify to beholders and eater the expenditure of thought and pains required for its production. Babies soon discriminate between "messes" and dainty, delicate food, none the less delicious because the ingredients are simple and inexpensive. If you can, instead of the scalding milk, use half-cream, half-milk, the toast is still more nutritious and palatable.—Marion Harland, in Babyhood.

Mrs. Herrich, wife of Joseph Herrich, a prominent tailor of Munice, Ind., met with a terrible accident Dec. 15. She was sitting in her room, when a hanging lamp broke from the ceiling and fell upon her, saturating her clothing with coal oil, which immediately ignited. In an instant she was enveloped in a blaze of fire, and before the flames could be quenched she was burned to a crisp, and after a few hours intense suffering she died. There was no one with her at the time except her two small children, one of whom was considerably burned.

ALL-NIGHT INHALATION!

"A positive revolution in the treatment of Air-Passage Diseases of the Nose, Throat, and Lungs, and, for the purpose designed, as valuable a discovery as vaccination."

THE PILLOW-INHALER.

A Speedy, Positive and Permanent Cure for Catarrh, Bronchitis, Asthma, and Incipient Consumption.

It is a hair pillow, with reservoirs of evaporating liquid, the fumes or vapor of which is inhaled all night long, whilst sleeping as usual, and without any discomfort. It is used only at night, and is perfectly safe to the most delicate. There is no stomach-dosing, douching or snuffing; but just as a smoky lamp will leave a deposit on a whitened wall so the PILLOW-INHALER, for say eight hours at a time, spreads a powerful healing balm or salve on the inflamed inner coating of the diseased air-surfaces, from the nostrils to the bottom of the lungs, and hence into the blood. Old-fashioned inhalation, through a tube, for a few minutes a day, sometimes cured. Think of eight hours constant action, on the same principle, but intensified a hundred-fold! There are no pipes or tubes. The medicine is breathed in, not swallowed, and goes right to the diseased parts.

CATARRH. BRONCHITIS. CONSUMPTION.

HON. E. L. HEDDEN, Collector of the Port of New York, says: "I take pleasure in stating that the PILLOW-INHALER has been of the greatest relief, and I believe of permanent benefit, to my wife, who has been a great sufferer from Bronchial and Catarrhal Troubles, accompanied with distressing Asthma. I recommend its use to all persons afflicted with such maladies."

E. L. HEDDEN, 38 West 49th St., New York.

MR. H. G. TEELE, 50 Bryan Block, Chicago, Ill., says: "I suffered fifteen years from a severe case of Catarrh; coughed incessantly day and night. I bought a PILLOW-INHALER, and since using it my cough is gone; my lungs are no longer weak and sore, and I am in better health than I have been for years."

During the six years of its existence the PILLOW-INHALER has wrought cures of Catarrh, Bronchitis, Asthma, and Consumption, that have been more like miracles than the usual treatment of disease. It is not expensive, and is within the reach of every one. Send for Explanatory Pamphlet and Testimonials, or call.

The Hungarian women are worse than the men, and will make a desperate fight in defense of their husbands and brothers.

A hurricane raged on the Pacific coast Wednesday, the wind at San Francisco reaching a velocity of eighty-two miles per hour. In the latter city buildings, church spires, and chimneys were blown down, and streets and basements flooded by the bursting of sewers, caused by the heavy rain. Plate-glass windows were blown in, and awnings and signs sent flying in all directions. Two women were caught in a falling building and fatally hurt.

THROAT WEAKNESS.

Clergymen, Teachers, Singers, Lawyers, Public Speakers, and all who have occasion to use their vocal powers more than ordinarily, will find the little treatise entitled "CHRONIC SORE THROAT" very useful. If those who are troubled with hoarseness after speaking or singing will read this book any follow its instructions they will be greatly benefited and relieved. Dr. Shuldham, of England, the author, has himself a reputation as an elocutionist of no mean powers, and he writes on the human vocal economy with the double experience of the physician and reader; especially is this experience noticeable in the Chapter on THE ART OF BREATHING, for it is on the proper modes of inspiration and expiration that the whole secret of managing the voice without causing any undue strain to the throat organs depends. Nor can we speak less emphatically in praise of the Chapter on THE HYGIENE OF THE VOICE, in which Dr. Shuldham lays down what in the way of solids and fluids a public speaker or singer should take, so as to avoid on the one hand throat irritation, and on the other any derangement of the stomach, which must react unfavorably on the whole system.

"Dr. Shuldham has given information and suggestions which will be of priceless value to every public speaker."—Interior. "The chapter on the art of breathing, the inspiration and expiration, without unduly straining the throat and vocal cords will be found a good study for all public speakers."—Inter Ocean.

THIS FEE NUMBER of the Cynosure will be one to be remembered and preserved. 1. Because of the striking likeness and biographical sketches of one of the noblest Americans. 2. Because of the testimony against Jeff. Davis and the lodge. 3. Because of the ably-written symposium on the United Brethren case, of which we shall yet learn more. 4. From the interesting reports from the lecture field. 5. From the points discussed in Bro. Nutting's letter, which project too far not to be hit by some one. The Cynosure, we believe our readers will confess, is worth its cost, and is on the whole the cheapest of the reform papers. Don't forget with your renewal that a new subscriber with each old one will double our list.

TO REV. JOHN G. FEE.

Servant of God, long tried and proved
In labor and in earthly loss,
The Master sees and knows thy heart unmoved—
The furnace taking from the gold its dross;
Bereft of children, smitten sore;
While age with heavy hand doth press,
When comfort, peace and joy thy door,
'Twould seem, should enter and be guests.

Is this the goodly land long sought,
The heritage from tears and prayers and toil!
Thy going forth with precious seed hath brought Bereavement, sorrow, and no precious spoil.
Ah, no! the land of perfect peace, beyond the sunset lies,
The harbor calm lies just across the wave,
And nearer now thy faith attracts the prize,
And brighter now looms up the land beyond the grave.

Thy jewels are not lost. God takes
And stores them up against thy coming on;
His service and himself thy portion here he makes—
Thy heart's best gift to heaven, a daughter and a son.
And when at length thy pilgrimage shall ended be,
O stand fast, to thy sure reward
What numbers, glorified, shall welcome thee—
To enter in the joy even of thy Lord!

B. A. IMES.

Memphis, Tenn., January, 1886.

It cannot be conceived that a man of such stirling principles as Mr. Fee should be other than opposed to such a system as the lodge. Although nothing is said of this in the graphic sketch of President Fairchild, yet Mr. Fee has always been known as against secretism because it is against Christ. Of late years he has been more actively identified with the movement led by the National Christian Association, addressing the Convention at Washington, and through the Cynosure and the Berea Evangelist giving no uncertain witness against this great evil. Every church which he has founded is separated from the lodge iniquity.

Pres. J. Blanchard travelled from Cincinnati to Richmond, Kentucky, with one of guerrilla Morgan's raiders, who was two years in Camp Douglas, Chicago, as our prisoner of war. He said, "Mr. Fee has the confidence of both political parties now. He is a wonderful man!" Surely, "When a man's ways please the Lord, he maketh even his enemies to be at peace with him."

JOHN G. FEE.

Pastor B. A. Imes of the Congregational church, Memphis, who writes the touching lines addressed to Mr. Fee in this number, was personally acquainted with Mr. Fee's son, Burritt, who died several years ago. This loss fell with heavy weight upon the father's heart, and in a sense made more intense the pain of parting with his loved daughter a few days ago. The portrait of Mr. Fee was copied from a photograph lent us from this daughter's album.

REV. JOHN G. FEE.

BY PRESIDENT E. H. FAIRCHILD.

[Revised from a letter to the Louisville Commercial, Nov. 28, 1883.]

John G. Fee was born in Bracken county, Ky., in 1816. His father, a farmer, was a member of the Presbyterian church, and the owner of thirteen slaves. John early embraced religion, and became convinced that it was his duty to prepare for the work of the ministry. With this design he entered college at Augusta, Ky., afterward studied two years at Oxford, Ohio, and finally graduated at Augusta. His theological course of two years was taken at Lane Seminary, Ohio. There, after many struggles of mind, and much discussion, with earnest prayer for light, he became convinced of the great evil and sinfulness of American slavery, and, with a full sense of the obloquy and danger he must meet, consecrated himself to preach a gospel of impartial love in his native State.

At first he labored several months with his parents, to persuade them to liberate their slaves. He failed, and, with great sadness, relinquished the effort, and went to preach the Gospel to others. His father, a severe man, disowned and disinherited him, giving him one dollar in his will. His mother, a kind-hearted woman, wept over her deluded son. He continued to visit his parents, though twice the door was shut against him. But afterward he was invited to come in. Learning that his father was about to sell a female slave, a member of the same church with her master, he bought her, at the price demanded, and liberated her. His father was very angry because he would not sell her back.

Before he became an Abolitionist his father had given him four hundred acres of land in Indiana. This he sold for $2,400, and spent it all in buying this slave, in publishing an anti-slavery manual, and in self support. His people in Lewis county promised him $100 for preaching, but being offended by an anti-slavery sermon, very mild and gentle, they paid him but $25. For two years he received $200 a year from the American Home Missionary Society; but finding that this society was sustaining fifty-two slave-holding churches, he felt that he could not conscientiously solicit contributions for it, and must decline to receive its support.

On joining the Presbytery he made a full statement of his anti-slavery convictions. As these convictions ripened, his anti-slavery efforts multiplied, and his preaching became more earnest and effective. Under his influence the church in Lewis county passed resolutions denouncing slavery as sinful, and refusing fellowship with slaveholders. The Synod reviewed this action, and censured Mr. Fee for disturbing the peace of Zion, and introducing a test of membership not known to the Constitution of the Presbyterian church. He finally withdrew, after fully stating his views, and received a qualified letter of dismission. By the publication of these facts in the New York Evangelist, his condition was brought to the notice of the American Missionary Association, and its aid was offered him. From that time to this, a period of twenty-six years, he has been supported wholly by that society.

In Lewis and Bracken counties he labored eight years and organized three anti-slavery churches. At the request of Cassius M. Clay, Mr. Fee sent him a box of the anti-slavery manuals which he had written and published. These were scattered through Madison county. The result was, the people invited him to Berea, where, after preaching nine sermons, he organized an anti-slavery church, and, after one year, became its pastor. This relation he still sustains, after a period of twenty-two years. There was little inviting here when he came. The place was a wilderness. It was inviting chiefly because it was central.

The same reasons which led to the organization of anti-slavery churches demanded an anti-slavery school. This was organized in 1855. Its first teacher was William E. Lincoln, a student of Oberlin College, in Ohio; its next was Otis B. Waters, from the same place. In 1857, Rev. J. A. Rogers, from the same institution, took the management of the school, and with marked success. He still remains as professor of Greek.

Mr. Fee was first mobbed in Lewis, Mason and Bracken counties. In 1855 he experienced a series of mobs in this region. The first was at Dripping Springs, the next near Mt. Vernon, the third near Texas, in Madison county. This was the most violent of all. Mr. Fee was preaching on the subject of Christian union. He was accompanied by Robert Jones, a native of the county, who was acting as a colporteur of the American Missionary Association, and he was especially sustained by the two Messrs. Field and Mr. Marsh. There was apprehension of danger, and Mr. Fee had been consulted as to the propriety of carrying guns. He said: "No; if I am disturbed I will appeal to the courts." He believed in the right of self-defense, but opposed the practice of carrying arms, and believed they were oftener a source of danger than a means of safety.

The sermon had just commenced when a mob of sixty men, with pistols and guns, surrounded the house. One came in and said to Mr. Fee, "There are men here who wish you to stop and come out." He replied, "I am engaged in the exercise of a constitutional and religious right; please do not interrupt," and preached on. The man went out and soon returned with two others, and demanded that he come out. He preached on. They seized him and dragged him out, no resistance being made. A man with a rope swore they would hang him to the first tree unless he would promise to leave the county and never return. He said: "I am in your hands. I would not harm you; if you harm me, the responsibility rests with you. I can make no pledge; duty to God and my country forbid." They swore they would duck him in the Kentucky river as long as life was in him, unless he would promise to leave the country. He replied: "I am a native of the State. I believe slavery is wrong. I am acting for the good of my country and all her people. You will know my motives at the judgment." He had proceeded but a few moments, when one exclaimed, "We didn't come to hear a sermon; let us do our work." They stripped Robert Jones naked, bent him down, and gave him thirty-three lashes with three sycamore rods. He was so injured that he could not walk the next day. But he made no pledges, and did not leave. They then said to Mr. Fee, "We will give you five hundred lashes if you do not leave the country and promise never to come back." He knelt down and said, "I will take my suffering: I can make no pledges." The whip was raised above him, but one cried, "Don't strike." The man with the whip replied, "I feel that I ought to, but I don't like to go against my party. Get up and go home"—with an oath.

With Jones on his horse behind him, and a guard in front and rear, he rode three miles, when the mob left him. He and Jones went into the woods, read the 4th chapter of Acts, and prayed. That night he preached in the house of Mr. Jones's cousin, and both the man and his wife covenanted to be the Lord's.

The church in Berea became terribly alarmed, and advised Mr. Fee to leave the State. For four weeks no man but Ham Rawlings entered Mr. Fee's yard. None but women attended church. That brave man, Cassius M. Clay, though still friendly to Mr. Fee, notwithstanding their difference on the higher law question (Mr. Fee holding that a law confessedly contrary to the law of God ought not, by human courts, to be enforced), advised him to leave. But he continued his labors; Mr. Waters continued his school, and the excitement gradually died away. But in the meantime two lawyers had been engaged to prosecute in behalf of Jones. The mob met in Richmond and swore they would give five hundred lashes to any lawyer who would prosecute the case. The grand jury never inquired into it. Thirteen months after the mob, Professor Rogers closed a session of the school with ninety-six pupils and an exhibition, at which there were five hundred in attendance.

Four of the principal leaders of the mob soon came to violent deaths. So it was with all the mobs —several of the most active in them soon died by violence. And it became a common saying among them, "Old master is against us."

In 1855 it was determined to establish a college. Trustees were appointed and a constitution adopted. Upon the adoption of a by-law declaring that this college shall be opposed to sectarianism, slaveholding, and caste, three of the trustees resigned. The charter was finally obtained in 1865.

After the raid of John Brown, in 1859, this whole region became intensely excited. Berea was believed to be in league with him; and the most marvelous stories of loads of Sharpe's rifles and other weapons smuggled in were circulated and believed. A county meeting was held at Richmond, and a committee of sixty men appointed to break up the school and expel all who were active in sustaining it from the State. Mr. Fee, at this time, was in Massachusetts attending a meeting of the American Missionary Association, and the committee of sixty, amply armed, paid their addresses to Professor Rogers. It is needless to remark what has been so often published. Mr. Fee met the retiring people in Cincinnati. He went over to Bracken county to fulfill an appointment, notwithstanding Mr. Mallet, a teacher from Oberlin, had recently been mobbed there, and Mr. Davis, a preacher, also from Oberlin, had been mobbed in Lewis county. A county meeting was called, eight hundred in attendance.

A committee of sixty-two warned him and others to leave. He made no promises but to do what should seem to be duty. All friends advised him to leave. A day of fasting and prayer was observed. His decision was, that he had no right seriously to imperil his friends against their will, and he left.

After some months he brought the corpse of his little boy to the cemetery of the Free Church of Christ, in Bracken, and left with the impression that he ought to return to the State. He came with gravestones for the little mound, and a mob took him from the omnibus. But they soon released him, and he preached the next Sabbath.

In 1862 he sent his family forward to his home in Berea, but in attempting to join them was stopped by the battle of Richmond, and for ten weeks no communications passed between them.

That year he was mobbed in Augusta. He was taken into the office of his cousin, and, after being threatened with death if he should ever return, he was put across the Ohio river at midnight. Two skiff-loads crossed at the same time, swearing that they would whip him like hell; but on landing they failed to find him. Four of the leaders of this mob died sudden and violent deaths.

Five weeks after he returned to Bracken county, and while waiting for the stage, at the house of a Presbyterian minister, was mobbed. He was committed to five men to be taken to Augusta. A friend joined the company, and adroitly diverted them to Maysville, where he crossed the river. The next day he returned, sent for his family, and remained ten months, when he returned to Berea, and his wife and daughter opened a school.

Till the close of the war much of his time was passed in Camp Nelson, where he aided in establishing schools for the colored soldiers and their women and children. A bright-colored female teacher was introduced, and five of the seven white teachers refused to eat with her. He was advised to remove her, but refused. The school in that place still continues.

The school in Berea was revived in 1865. After two months four colored youths were admitted and more than half the white students left. But all, or nearly all, returned, and the number of colored greatly increased; and the school, which in 1865 was accommodated in an unpainted, unplastered district school-house, has numbered for the last five years from 250 to 300 pupils a year, and, instead of one or two teachers, there are now five men and six women.

The temporary buildings erected in 1866 are giving place to more costly and substantial structures. Howard Hall was erected in 1869 at a cost of $18,000. The new Ladies' Hall, just completed, is valued at $50,000, and the college seems established on a firm and permanent basis, and is growing in favor with all classes of people.

Mr. Fee insists that it was no foresight of his, nor any far-reaching plan that led him to adopt a principle of reform that was sure to triumph. In all those years of darkness one simple rule was his guide, "As ye would that men should do to you, do ye even so to them." No one is more amazed at what God has wrought than he, and he mourns over his lack of faith in those days of darkness.

The question is frequently asked, "To what denomination has Mr. Fee belonged since he left the Presbyterians?" My answer is, "He has done all he could to belong to none." He embraced the doctrine of immersion, after much investigation, in 1852, and still adheres to it; but he earnestly insists that every true Christian is entitled to a place in the church, whatever his views may be as regards the mode and subjects of baptism. While he conscientiously administers only immersion, he as conscientiously yields to his brethren in the church the privilege of other modes, and of infant baptism. His church is called, by those who think a denonminational name important, "Congregational." It calls itself "The Church of Berea." He repudiates all denominational names, in order to promote Christian union.

Mr. Fee has not been, as some suppose, a man of strife and contention, at home only in the belligerent attitude. He has in unusual measure, the gift of perseverance in whatever seems to him right. But his manner is conciliatory and argumentative, rather than denunciatory, it has always been a grief to him that he has been compelled to differ from the mass of his countrymen on a question of vital importance to the welfare of the people, the church, and the State. And, the great cause of difference being removed, it is exceedingly painful to him to find the breach still existing. Following the light which has been his guide from the first, he finds it impossible to believe that it is consistent with the great law of love to treat a portion of our fellow-citizens as if they were fit only for servants. He finds colored people, as servants in the dining-rooms and parlors of the most genteel and fastidious; they abound in every part of our hotels; they attend their mistresses in the ladies' car; there is no place from which they are excluded as servants. But, as independent men and women, they have no privileges in our hotels; they are compelled to ride in the smoking-cars; their children are excluded from our public schools; in restaurants and barbers' shops they cannot share with white people, and in every public place they are degraded.

Against this state of things both Mr. Fee, personally, and the college which he has been active in founding, feel bound to protest. But this he does with all patience, looking with the utmost confidence for the coming day when prejudice and caste shall give place to justice and love.

MR. FEE'S SEPARATION FROM THE PRESBYTERIAN CHURCH.

WRITTEN BY HIMSELF.

The Synod directed the Presbytery, with which Mr. Fee was connected, to visit him and the church of which he was pastor and report to the next Synod. The Presbytery failed to do as directed.

On being told by the Presbytery and Synod that he ought to leave them and not stay with those living in what he regarded as a flagrant sin (i. e. slaveholding), Mr. Fee replied that he regarded it as a Christian duty, first to labor kindly but faithfully with his brethren. Both Presbytery and Synod told him there was no hope of repentance on their part. The Synod after first having attempted to justify slavery from the Bible, refused to consider it in the light of the Bible, and demanded that it be considered in the light of the constitution of the church, the Confession of Faith. Mr. Fee claimed that slavery was wrong, viewed in the light of the definition of an "offence" as laid down in the Confession of Faith. The Synod then said he must construe the Confession of Faith as the body to which he belonged construed it.

To this Mr. Fee replied, "You, by your assumptions, interpose between me and God's Word a human creed, and then take from him the right of private interpretation! Give to me a letter of dismission." This they did as in good and regular standing, save in the matter of the agitation of the slavery question.

Something of the spirit of those two bodies may be seen from the fact that a gray-headed father and most renowned man in the Synod, said, during the discussion of slavery in the light of the Bible: "If the young man shall find himself taken out, ridden on a rail, and ducked in a pond, he need blame nobody but himself."

Another, next in renown, and a good revivalist, said in reference to Mr. Fee: "A man may hold a black-eyed pea so near to his eye as to shut out the whole world." There, in the same church house, where two years previously he had been ordained, Mr. Fee took his letter of withdrawal from the Synod.

JEFFERSON DAVIS A MASON.

EDITOR CYNOSURE:—I notice by your issue of Jan. 21st that Jefferson Davis is out with a card denying that he is a Freemason. Providentially, I may throw a little light on the subject.

At the close of the war, the Second Cavalry Corps (with which I was connected), under command of General Wilson, was halted in its march across the country at Macon, Georgia. On the 5th of July following, I received orders from General Wilson to go on an inspecting tour through southwestern Georgia, to look after the interests of the freedman. My orders permitted me to have a guard to attend me from any point where troops werestationed. After travelling over a large portion of the Lower Flint River country, I reached Andersonville, where the noted prison pen was located, on the afternoon of July 21st, and, procuring a guard of a non-commissioned officer and ten men, I started up the river,and halted for the night on the plantation of a Mr. Felton, about five miles above Oglethorpe. This Mr. Felton, though a sympathizer with the rebellion, was very much of a gentleman; and, after putting my men into camp, I accepted his proffered hospitality, and staid with him over night.

During the evening we talked freely about the prison at Andersonville and the prisoners that had been confined there. In the course of the conversation I remarked that I had noticed in the prison grave-yard here and there a grave with a head-board put up and marked with the name, company, regiment and the place from where the soldier came;and I asked why such a discrimination? why were not all the graves marked in the same way? Mr. Felton's reply was, that those were Freemasons, and that the expense of marking their graves was incurred by the lodge at Oglethorpe, of which he was master.

He went on to say that soon after the prison was established at Andersonville, the Masons in the prison made an overture to the lodge, and in response an appropriation was voted, and supplies for their comfort purchased and taken to the prison; but they were refused entrance by Capt. Wirz, who was in command. I then asked, "Was Captain Wirz a Mason?" and received a negative reply. My curiosity been aroused, I enquired further about the general (whose name I have forgotten) who had the oversight of all the confederate prisons; and was informed that he was not a Freemason. Mr. Felton went on to say that President Davis was too wise to appoint a Freemason to such a position, as it would not do to show partiality to any of the prisoners. I desired to know if Davis was a Freemason, and was informed that he was; and Mr. Felton said that he had frequently met him in the lodge and at other Masonic gatherings.

Mr. Felton must have been a man of high standing. He lived on a plantation of ten thousand acres of land, and had owned a large number of slaves, all of whom had been liberated by President Lincoln's proclamation. I was somewhat surprised at the freedom with which he talked about matters pertaining to the lodge; but I afterwards learned that Masons in the South were not as reticent as in the North, there never having been any agitation of the subject there.

THE UNITED BRETHREN COMMISSION.

BY PROF. C. J. KEPHART.

The report of the Commission appointed by the General Conference at Fostoria in May last, has been made public. Since the appointment of the Commission there has been a division of sentiment as to the authority of the General Conferenee to make such an appointment, or to provide any measure looking to the amendment of the constitution. This division arises from the fact that the present constitution provides that there shall be no alteration of it "unless by request of two-thirds of the whole society."

It has been said that no such request has ever been presented, therefore there is no authority for any action looking to its alteration or amendment.

It must be remembered, however, that the constitution neither defines what two-thirds of the whole society, as the term is here used, means, nor provides a method by which such a request shall be made known. Hence on account of the silence of the constitution upon these points, there could be no authorative request made known without previous legislation by the General Conference, nor could any body aside from the General Conference decide when two-thirds of the whole society had expressed itself, since the two-thirds clause may be interpreted to refer to the individual member, the classes or the annual conference districts. The conclusion follows that either our church was shut up to a continuance under its present form of constitution, or the General Conference must somehow open the way for amendmnt.

Another fact of fully as much significance modifies the solution of this problem. It is this: The present constitution of the church, while it has been for forty years the statement of the fundamental law of the church, was never ratified by the church as a body. Its acceptance by the church was only a tacit acceptance, as an expression of the best judgment of the General Conference, and in the same manner it has been lived under by the successive General Conferences. Since this is the case, and since the church is superior to its representative body, no legal condition prevented the church from establishing a new system of government at any time, and in any manner that it chose.

Further, since the authority of each General Conference is the same, no legal condition prevented any revision of the General Conference from annulling the present constitution, (the enactment of a previous revision of the same body) and placing before the church another system of government under which the church might act or refuse to act as it saw proper. In providing simply for the amendment of the present constitution and for its adoption or rejection by the church, the action of the General Conference was much more conservative than was legally necessary. Did that body then in providing for the commission in any sense transcend its authority? The question is not whether the action was in accordance with my wishes, or the wishes of any other man, but had the General Conference the right to do upon this question as it did? I can see but one answer and that an affirmative.

But how about the report of the Commission? Does it indicate a desire to depart from the distinctive feature of the church in the past? Of course the answer to this question will hinge upon the action of the Commission respecting secret societies. The Commission recommends lay representation in General Conference, but this will call out but little discussion. How about the recommendation respecting secret societies? The report declares that all such societies possessing certain characteristics "are contrary to the word of God, and that Christians ought to have no connection with them." In the judgment of very many good men in our church these characteristics are possessed by all secret societies. Yet is it not better in a fundamental law to give the marks of the orders against which we would pronounce, than to attempt to give the particular orders, or to condemn an entire class when all are not convinced that all possess the marks of evil?

Further authority is given the General Conference, the representative body or the church, to express the conviction of the church respecting individual orders or the entire class, so that with full authority the General Conference can at any time exclude members of all secret orders from the church. If the majority of the church believe that such should be the attitude of the church to these organizations, such will be the expression of the church through the General Couference. If the majority believe otherwise, expression will be given to this fact, and this will be true no matter what the coustitutional provisions may be. Constitutions neither create nor restrain conviction.

Our church has unquestionably undergone a change in sentiment as to the best manner in which to deal with this secret society question. But a few years ago the almost unanimous voice was "exclusion." To-day it is different. I have no reason for believing that more has been done to effect, than to prevent such a change. Yet it has come. A change which very many of the best men and women of our church regret, and on account of which many of the best men and women of the church rejoice. God alone knows whether it is for the best. Yet this change in the hearts of those whom I believe are truly honest, expresses itself despite the provision of our constitution.

Allow me in closing to ask whether in view of these things there is just ground for denouncing one of the most faithful and devoted workmen in our church as a "hypocrite," because he coincides with those who express their change in sentiment, and is it best to charge such an one with having been a leader in an "unholy crusade" against the right?

THE UNITED BRETHREN CHURCH.

BY REV. WILLIAM DILLON.

DEAR BRETHREN OF THE CYNOSURE:—For more than six months the battle has been raging without intermission or pause. For twenty years previous to the actual declaration of war on us they were preparing and marshaling their worldly hosts, but now we are in the midst of hostilities. We have seen the "Outlook," but just where the outcome will be we cannot now tell. It is unpleasant having civil war with our brethren, but they attacked us. We are defending our church home from the taint and foulness of the lodge into which they would introduce us to fellowship. We prefer war to submission. We have been encouraged by friends in the church and friends of Jesus in other churches. Three and one-half of our bishops are with us, and three and one-half against us. The fractional one is Bishop Castle. I do not wish to speak lightly of him for he is a good man, but the reason we claim half of him is he voted against the sham law to admit secret societies into the church at the last General Conference; and the reason I accord to them one-half of him is, he voted for and acted on the "Commission." We begrudge them this moiety of a good man. Bishop Weaver claims never to have changed his sentiments; he has always been with the majority, and if that should turn back to us, we should look around and expect to see his tall form and genial face among us again. He condemns the radicals for doing the very things for which he voted when he was with us, in a recent issue of the Telescope. How and when he got over from radical to liberal without changing nobody knows. Whether he walked, rode, was carried or circumambulated, none of us know, but we fear he was privately working for the liberals when publicly voting with us. But let no one think he has no virtues. He is a pleasing speaker, and in former years dealt as hard blows on the lodge as he is now giving to lodge opposers. On the other hand, many of our distinguished and prominent men are with us. Bishops Dickson and Wright are very reliable; Flickinger is off in Africa, but he voted against the Commission in his conference last August. Barnaby, Titus, Mowers, Bowles, Watson, Clay aud others of Michigan; Alwood, Lemasters, J. French, McDaniel, Bovey, Wm. Miller, Luttrell, Brazee, Ecker, Excell, Kosht, Mason, Dr. Davis, Dillon and others in Ohio; Floyd, Snyder, Keller, Lilly, Kabrich, McNew, Day, Riley, Wilmore, Prof. Kiracofe, Breeder, F. Thomas and others in Indiana; Kretzinger, Powell, Long, Knipple, Grimms, Prof. Allen and others in Illinois—and so on in various States the leading, God-fearing, sin-hating men of the church are with us. Our distinguished layman, J. Hoke, of Pennsylvania, is with us. Also all the conferences of the Pacific Coast district declared themselves with us in their annual sessions. Hartsville College placed itself by vote of its trustees with us in our Constitution. But best of all is, we are on the side where God is, and the Christ that the lodge would eject from his own Word. And here, whatever comes, we mean with divine help to stand.

While the surface controversy is about our constitution, the reasou it is assaulted by the liberals is because of eight words contained in it, "There shall be no connection with secret combinations." But for these words they would contend for its validity as strongly as we. So the real issue is the admission or exclusion of secret societies from the church. Our paper is doing well.

I suggest a religious syndicate of anti-secrecy papers, and that the lovers of our common principles take them all at a reduced price, and that we plan and issue terms. We ask the readers of the good Cynosure to remember us and pray for us.

SUPPLEMENT TO THE WORK OF THE U. B. COMMISSION.

BY REV. W. S. TITUS.

It seems to me that it would have been logical and consistent, after the Commission had simmered down the law on secrecy to a tame "You ought not," to have proceeded a little further in their work and revised the sacred Decalogue to bring it into harmony with their milk-and-water law (more water than milk) on secret combinations. The law of God would then have been more liberal, and we would not have been under the painful necessity of hurting people's feelings by bluntly saying to them, "Thou SHALT NOT steal," "Thou SHALT NOT bear false witness," "Thou SHALT NOT commit adultery." We could then use soft words (and they turn away wrath), such as: you ought not to kill, you ought not to bear false witness, etc. And, furthermore, this new revision would be a great help in squelching those fanatical prohibitionists, who are bent on having a "thou shalt not" in all their platforms.

I think the changing of that little word shalt to ought would accommodate the largest number of men and some women—especially in the large cities, and then our U. B. church could scoop them into the church by wholesale. This would be a wise (worldly wise) and economical arrangement; all the trouble the pastor would have with unruly members would simply be to say kindly to them, You ought not to be so naughty. But then it doesn't make much difference; men differ in their opinions and each one has a right to his opinion. Some men are troubled with moral color-blindness, and of course they are not to blame if they do call white black, or right wrong. "The prophets prophesy falsely, and the priests bear rule by their means, and my people love to have it so." There you have it in a nutshell. The bishops define the constitution falsely, and the preachers therefore vote to change it. Will the people have it so?

THE SKATING RINK.—One of the curses of modern society is the skating riuk. As a craze it has but few equals. It has left wrecks in its history in every town where it has been patronized. It has led children away from school and the pursuit of study. Young men and women have been led by it to throw aside the pure and modest refinement and restraints of home and assume a brazenness which has robbed them of their charm. It has led young wives and husbauds into infidelity to those to whom their lives were pledged at the marriage-altar. It has kept hundreds and thousands from the house of God, and caused men and women to love pleasure more thau God. It has ruined the health of many a fair young woman, and sent her home to months of suffering and to premature death. The skating riuk is pretty well uuderstood now. At the first it attracted the better class of society, as it does not now. The door of the skating rink is the opening to harlotry. It is the opportunity of the foul seducer of all purity. Let parents beware of the ways of death which would allure the feet of their children. Keep clear of the skating rink.—Telescope.

Mark Hopkins, at the meeting of the American Board in Boston, said that the greatest obstacle in the way of Christianity's progress to-day is the habit of substituting "something called religion" for downright holiness. "If individuals are not brought to serve a holy God by being holy, and thus fitting for an eternal life of holiness, and joy and higher service, no distinctive and proper missionary work is being done."

THE SECRET EMPIRE.

CHINESE FREEMASONS.

On Monday, the 2nd of June last, the dead body of a Chinaman named Lou Johnson was found in the attic stairway of his lodging house in St. Louis. The numerous stabs told of murder, and six Chinamen were soon arrested on evidence given before the coroner's jury. After a trial of thirteen days one of the assassins, Chyo Chyock, was found by the jury on Saturday, guilty of murder in the first degree. He received the verdict with terror, having been confident of an acquittal, as do most American Freemasons in similar circumstances.

The murder was the culminating act of a trouble which had been some time going on between the Chinese societies, the "Hong Kongites," who have a membership in St. Louis of about 200, and the "Cantonese," who number about forty. The socicties fell out over a gambling question. The Cantonese high rollers were in the habit of attending the Hong Kong gambling-house kept by Chyo Gou, alias Joe Gong. They lost money so steadily and and so heavily that they came to the conclusion that an "Ah Sin" game was being put up on them, and, in order to get even with the enemy, they decided to have the game stopped by the authorities. For this purpose they enlisted the services of Lou Johnson, a Cantonese brother and an interpreter who had been a detective in Denver and understood how to apply American law to a Chinese brace-game. Johnson went to work and succeeded in having Joe Gong's place raided, a proceeding which intensified the animosity between the two societies, and the Hong Kongites met in secret session and decided that Johnson must go. A fund of $1,200 was raised, and the morning of June 1 Johnson was attacked in his bed by a hired assassin and cut to pieces, his body being found the evening of the same day. Several arrests were made, but the full revelation of the bloody plot was not made until after the arrest of Cong Seng, who fled from the city after the murder, was caught at Murphysboro, Ill., brought back, and made a clean breast of the affair, revealing the entire conspiracy, and detailing the circumstances of the killing, which he said was done by Chyo Pock and Chyo Chyock.

During the trial considerable testimony relating to that recent order of Chinese known as the Foo Toe Tsal company, and in the vernacular as the "Small Hatchet society," or the "highbinders," has been elicited. To this order Ah Lung belongs, and it was on a commission from this society that he came from San Francisco to kill Lou Johnson. The six prisoners are not members of this order. The

REFORM NEWS.

FROM THE GENERAL AGENT.

SNOW-BOUND—AN ODD-FELLOW CONFESSION—FRIENDS IN NEED—LECTURE AT WINFIELD, IOWA.

CHICAGO, Jan. 27th.

Leaving Chicago in company with Bro. M. N. Butler on the evening of the 20th inst. we arrived at Washington, Iowa, and only a trifle behind schedule time. Our plan was to proceed together to Winfield, where we were to join Bro. Hawley and assist in organizing Henry County Christian Association. At Washington we met with a snow blockade and learned that the Northern railroad train had been abandoned. Nothing remained but to quietly accept the situation and telegraph Bro. Hawley to "hold the fort." We were cordially received by friends at Washington and helped on our way by their prayers, counsels and benefactions. As the storm increased and "neither sun nor stars appeared," it was deemed wisest by Bro. Butler to proceed on his way homeward, as the Rock Island railroad was still open.

Winfield is eighteen miles from Washington, and on Friday morning I took the train, hoping to arrive in time to participate in the services of the second day in convention. The train men toiled hard, and all did the very best they knew, and by dint of effort we covered the entire distance of eighteen miles in just thirty-two hours, reaching Winfield on Saturday at 3 o'clock P. M., thirty minutes after Bro. Hawley had departed for Mediapolis.

One or two incidents by the way are worthy of note. Exhibiting my charts and explaining the methods of the Secret Empire, I presented a chart on Odd-fellowship. One attentive listener remarked, "I don't know anything about Freemasonry, but you have got Odd-fellowship correct." He was from Nebraska. Impelled by a keen appetite I bundled up and started through the drifts across the fields to a farm-house, where I was gratified to meet with friends, who after conference proved to be United Presbyterians and remembered hearing me speak several years ago at Crawfordsville, iu the church of which Rev. Brown was at the time pastor, and over which Rev. Elliott now presides. No attention to my personal comfort was wanting, and after a most generous and welcome repast, I was supplied with substantials for those remaining in the car who felt unable to "breast the cold wave," and all without the "grand hailing sigu of distress" which is said to possess such magic power and "help a man to travel."

Entering the "Hawk-eye" hotel at Winfield, I was uoticed by Bro. John Cooper who chanced to be in town; and, making himself known, it was soon arranged that I should accompany him to his home three and a half miles in the country. Owing to the condition of the roads he had come to town on horseback, but as we are both of Quaker ancestry, and believe in the "perseverance of the saints" the seeming difficulties were easily overcome and I found myself in the neat, quiet farm house of our brother and was heartily welcomed. Here, too, I met the Free Methodist pastor on that circuit, and it was arranged that I should assist him at his Sabbath morning service in a school-house near by. Returning to the village we called on the U. P. pastor, and I accepted his iuvitation to preach to his people on Sabbath evening. Both these appointments I filled as best I could, and was gratified with both the number present and the attention given. My remarks on Sabbath evening were by some thought worthy of a wider circulation and I left with them the manuscript which may or may not appear in print.

Bro. Cooper had meantime arranged for a hall on Monday evening, and sent out "posts" to notify friends in different parts of the country. On Monday I encountered Dr. John I. Taylor, special agent for the Masonic Benevolent Association and after a "tilt" of a couple of hours or so I asked him to attend my lecture to which he replied, "I intended to, but you have convinced me that you don't know anything about it." So I had the satisfaction of knowing that I had made one point on him.

The hall was well filled and I was told the craft were well represented. I in some way got the impression that the time had come to give the people of Winfield "strong meat" and so for two and a half hours I opened the "lower tiers." The expense for the hall was raised and a dollar in excess, which just covered my expense at the hotel, and let me out clear on the lecture enterprse.

I was disappointed in not meeting Bro. Hawley, but much rejoiced to hear only good reports of his labors. Bros. Laird and Reed came from the neighboring town of Wayne, and showed their accustomed zeal by their contributions and counsels. May God bless and help these brethren in pushing on the good work.

WARM TIMES IN OHIO.

MEETINGS AT BELLE CENTER AND RUSHSYLVANIA.—A MASON WHO WOULD DEBATE.—DANIEL'S BAND IN A NEW ROLE.

DEAR CYNOSURE:—On last Friday evening I addressed an audience of something over one hundred in the Reformed Presbyterian church, Belle Center. Notwithstanding the cold and a smoky chimney, the friends listened very patiently. At Rushsylvania, Saturday evening I found a few friends gathered in an upper room. Had not Bro. T. C. Speer and quite a number of young people come over from Northwood, there would have been little hope for the meeting. After opening a number came in, among the rest a man by the name of John Kerns. At the conclusion of the lecture I gave the usual opportunity for remarks and questions. Mr. Kerns arose, and, learning that I had never been a Mason, said he would like to know how I knew that what I had said was true. I gave my reasons as follows: 1. The expositions of Masonry and the Masonic publications agree. For instance, I take up Mackey's Manual and read a description of the rite of circumambulation. Why should a Past General Grand High Priest of the General Grand Chapter of the United States describe such a thing, tell why it is done, and what it means? If there is no such rite in Masonry, why does he describe it? 2. The witnesses all agree. 3. The character of the witnesses is another evidence. 4. I have frequently been mistaken for a Mason myself by simply giving these grips and signs which we are told "cannot be revealed."

Mr. K. then arose again in a very dignified manner and spoke substantially as follows: I am now an old man; my days in this world are nearly spent. I have lived among you for years; you all know me. I must say that I feel very much hurt that this man should come here and tell so many lies about this institution and mislead so many. I have been a member of the Masons for many years and I know them to be good and true men. Of course I have no chauce to reply to this man here. He is around working for a big salary and peddling his sin-cure. I wish I had his salary, etc.

I walked down the isle to where he was and said to him, "Sir, when you was initiated into the lodge did they place a hoodwink over your eyes and a rope or cabletow around your neck?" He quibbled for a time, but finally said, "Yes, but they took off your coat when you were baptized."

I proceeded to question him about the stripping process, then held him up before the young men as he looked the uight he was made a Mason, commenting on his appearance. This did uot shame him a particle.

But he wanted to debate, and we set the time, Tuesday evening at seven o'clock. He made out the question as follows: "Resolved, that Freemasonry is not unchristian, unreligious, or immoral in its workings and teachings." This question I could uot get him to change and use an affirmative instead of the two negatives, so I accepted the situation, with the understanding that the word "unreligious" should only apply to the Christian religion.

The evening came, and the time for the discussion. The house was crowded. After the reading of the question, Mr. K. opened with the same plea as was used the night before—"You have known me many year," etc. His remarks were very mixed. He made several assertions which he did not attempt to prove. He said, "Freemasonry is founded on the Bible." Then went to telling about Solomon's temple. "We bury our dead with those beautiful little white aprons, emblems of innocence." "Go to the many homes of the orphan's and see if we don't care for them." "Every man in our lodge takes the oath of his own free will aud accord."

I will not quote further. Both of Mr. K's. speeches were filled with assertions like the above. Of course it was no trouble for me to prove that Masonry was not Christian, there is not a Masonic author that ever claimed it to be; and as for morality, men differ on that point.

I expected to have spoken here last night in what is called the "Daniel's Band Church," having seen as I supposed, those in authority, and advertised the meeting. At seven o'clock I commenced by reading the 91st Psalm and proceeded to make some remarks, when a member of the Band rushed up to me, and, shaking his fist, declared that I would give no lecture in that house that night. If I wanted to lecture "agin' the Masons" I should go down to the Methodist church, "where they had um." He did not "purpose to have the Band meetin' spiled in any sich way. Thare are no Masons or Odd-fellows here. Now you pick up your duds and git!"

Another member of the band arose and said he was both a Mason and an Odd-fellow, and he "knowed nothin' agin 'em." He should like to hear the lecture.

"No he won't lecture," said the first speaker. "We don't want no devils lecturing here." Seizing a large iron stove-poker he came toward me with a very rapid pace and exclaimed, "Now you git. If you don't I'll break every lamp in the house!" He was kept away from me by members of the Band. The time until after eight o'clock was spent in a general quarrel. I sat as an observer. No one seemed to have any authority. Some called for the marshal to put out the man that disturbed me. Others said, "Lets take a rising vote and see whether he goes on."

This is my first introduction to the Band and consequently was somewhat embarrassing. I suppose this scene was to represent "Daniel in the lion's den." I speak to-night in the United Brethren church. A good attendance is expected. The whole town is stirred.

FROM THE LAND OF BLIZZARDS.

A MAN FAMILIAR WITH CRIME DISPLAYS AN ELASTIO CONSCIENCE.—LECTURE AT HUTCHINSON.

SAINT PAUL, Minn., Jan. 27, 1886.

EDITOR CYNOSURE:—A late chaplain of a State prison is delivering a lecture on "Reform aud Labor in their Relation to Crime." He was given a tract on the "Hidden Mysteries of Masonry." Upon seeing it he claims that the church is a more secret society than Masonry. When he was asked if he knew a book called Ecce Orienti, he said he was acquainted with that book; that I was barking up a tree on which there were no squirrels. Again and again he persisted in the assertion that Masonry is not a secret society. He was asked, if that was the case, why every Entered Apprentice Mason was sworn under a death penalty to forever conceal and never reveal the "Hidden Mysterics of Masonry." He could not answer that question. His attention was called to the twenty-third landmark of Masonry, namely: "The death of Masonry would follow its legalized exposure." But it made no impression on him; and this goes to prove that Freemasonry is but a miserable wreck of an institution, capable of nothing good; but it destroys those who undertake to defend it.

A Methodist Masonic minister, by the name of Klepper, pastor of a Mcthodist church at Hutchinson, unwillingly deprived himself of the opportunity of listening to my lecture in the Congregational church at Hutchinson on last Monday evening by remarking that he would attend and deny whatever of the lecture that was not true. If he had attended after having made that statement of course he would of necessity have given Masonry away in the face of the whole congregation.

I found many friends of the Anti-masonic movement at Hutchinson, and a large number of Masons attended the lecture and behaved well; kept their jewels and I hope some lost their Masonry preparatory to finding Christ. May the dear Lord deliver them from the cruel bondage of the secret lodge.

I was kindly entertained at the house of Bro. Day, who is now near the 80th mile-stone of his earthly pilgrimage, he and his consort both enjoying the declining years of a well-spent life, having hated the idolatry of the secret lodge ever since they first saw it. I distributed tracts at Hutchinson and Glencoe, and at the former place took one subscription for the Christian Cynosure.

Hutchinson is a very pleasant village of about 1,200 people, and is named after the celebrated singers of that name who were famous thirty years ago. Under the dominion of the lodge and the saloon they have a decree that no admission fee can be charged and no collection taken in connection with any public lecture without a license costing five dollars. NOTES OF IOWA WORK.

ENCOURAGEMENT AMONG THE SWEDES.—THE LODGE, SATAN'S CABLETOW, DRAGGING INTO INFIDELITY.—AN ARMY OF 100,000.—SNOW AND STORM.—WORK IN BURLINGTON.

DEAR CYNOSURE—Last week I had an appointment to deliver a course of three lectures in the Evangelical Swedish Lutheran church, of Swedesburgh, Henry Co., Iowa. I gave two of the three lectures, and was prevented by a snow storm from giving the third. I greatly enjoyed the kind hospitality of Rev. Mr. Franzien while lecturing in his church. He has a membership of 290, with the prospect of twenty additions soon. He and his church are thoroughly committed against the lodge. Indeed their whole Synod, one hundred thousand strong, is governed by a constitution that declares that no person may be received to membership in their congregation who is a member of the Freemasons or any other infidel society.

I like the ring of the above declaration; for, since I have more carefully studied the religious philosophy of Freemasonry, the better to prepare for the lecture field, I am convinced that "Ancient Craft Masonry," including what they call "Holy Royal Arch," with its religious philosophy as developed and taught by the authorized teachers and expounders of the order, is the most artfully contrived plan for infidelizing the young men of our country that Satan has ever put into the heart of man to devise. And Christian men have slept while these tares have been sown; and even now, when this deadly miasma of infidelity has spread from the lodges until but five out of one hundred of the young men of our country are members of a Christian church, still many good people sleep on. Their eyes are open to the fact that the saloons are debauching the morals of our people, and breeding crime by the wholesale; but they fail to see that the lodge is corrupting the faith of our young men, and preparing the way for the general spread of infidelity, unless the the Spirit of the Lord shall lift up a standard against it.

The silent marshaling of one hundred thousand sturdy Swedes against the lodge in our country plainly shows that the Spirit of the Lord is at work gathering his hosts for the overthrow of this subtle lodge demon, who claims the right to establish his infidel factories within the sacred enclosures of the church of Christ.

Why will not every pastor, and elder, and deacon, and class-leader, and trustee of the churches awake to the importance of having the religious philosophy of Freemasonry thoroughly exposed? and then when the people are enlightened to understand that Freemasonry,(to use the words of Dr. Kendig, a 33-degree Mason,) more than anything else in the world, stands in the way of the coming of the kingdom of our Lord Jesus Christ, they will take the stand that our Swedish brethren have taken, and will not receive those who are members of the Freemasons or any other infidel society to membership in the church of Christ. Why should a man be received into the church who insists on adhering to a system that is better calculated for spreading infidelity, and concealing crime, and shielding criminals from just punishment than any other device of Satan in our land?

"Oh," you say, "a great many people don't understand the character of Freemasonry." True; but will you aid us to enlighten them? Why should the people be destroyed for lack of knowledge?

Thursday evening, Jan. 21st, I went to Winfield, expecting to meet Bro. J. P. Stoddard, and with him to hold a convention there and organize a Henry County Christian Association, opposed to the saloon and the lodge. But our dear brother did not arriver and so I lectured to a good congregation, considering the circumstances. A report of this will appear in the Winfield Beacon.

During the night there was a blow, and travel was suspended. As the object of the convention (to organize an association) was defeated by the condition of the roads, and two revival meetings were in progress that I did not anticipate when I arranged for the convention, I determined not to lecture on Friday night; but, if Providence favor, I will return at some future time and complete the work begun at the Thursday night lecture.

There are strong lodges of Freemason and Odd-fellows in Winfield, and I greatly desire to reason with them, and show them how utterly unchristian and unrepublican lodgery is. It seems to me since I learned that Gen. B. F. Butler sickened of Freemasonry that I can persuade those, at least, who profess to follow Christ to renounce it.

I am now in Burlington. I have just preached in the city three times, and, if Providence favors, will lecture four times.

I can be addressed at Wayne, Henry Co., Iowa, at any time. Bro. J. A. Laird, the treasurer of the Iowa Christian Association, will forward my mail to me. I expect soon to attend the conference of the Evangelical Swedish Lutheran church, of Iowa, at Marshalltown. I hope every friend of the cause in Iowa will co-operate in carrying forward this work. Let us unitedly pray that God will work for the overthrow of the lodge, and that we may be anointed with the Spirit, by Christ, to work with him.

EVERY ONE OVER AGAINST HIS HOUSE.

THE MISSOURI AGENT BEGINS A PRACTICAL WORK.

MARYVILLE, Mo., Jan. 26, 1886.

DEAR REFORMERS:—Nehemiah-like we must go to work. If we are not called to work abroad in general conventions or meetings, we must adopt some plan to work at home. The workers under Nehemiah found it a grand plan to work on the wall they were putting up opposite their homes, so as to put in all the time to the best advantage. My headquarters for the last ten years have been here; while I have worked in more than ten States. I am now almost 65 years of age. My health not being good, I have tried to get off on the sea coast to work. The Lord of late seemed to tell me plainly, go right to work at home. Thank his holy name, I obeyed that heavenly voice; and on the 15th of this month I rented a hall in the center of the city for six months, with the privilege of five years, at the rate of $100 per year.

So far our meetings have been blessed and owned of the Most High. Its unselfish nature, free to all, without money or price, all God's workers made free and at home; all to be workers together with God. The rum power, with all wickedness in high places as well as low to be fully and trully exposed. The hall is named and known as "Salvation Hall!" All my time and strength, until further orders from our only Leader, will be put in the work assigned me here.

1. In getting "lively stones built up into a spiritual house." (1 Pet. 2: 5.)

2. "Salvation is to be for our walls and our bulwarks." (Is. 26: 1.)

3. In this Salvation Hall "all the redeemed shall find a place, and God alone shall name them." (Is. 56: 5.)

4. In all that is done by all the workers in this great movement, there is to be so little of the human, and so much of the divine aid manifested that all want the 115th Psalm sung often. "Not unto us, O Lord, not unto us, but unto thy name give glory."

Now, beloved workers, go work as God may direct. Time is short. Eternity is near. If you cannot travel, get a room, if no larger one than your own house. Go to work. Keep at it till Jesus says, "Well done." Amen. R. SMITH.

CORRESPONDENCE.

JEFF DAVIS'S DENIAL EXPLAINED.

KEYSTONE, Dak., Jan. 25, 1886.

DEAR EDITOR:—I have just read Jeff Davis's denial of his connection with the Masonic fraternity. At this I am not surprised, but am somewhat to read his denial over his own signature of ever leading or following a rebellion.

Davis's denial of having any connection with Freemasonry reminds me of a statement made by Jonas Stutesman, of Ligonier, Ind., a few years ago, who affirmed that Masons could tell us Anti-masons that they were not Masons and yet not lie. This Jonas Stutesman was well known to the writer as being a Freemason and a deacon in the Disciple church.

Davis's denial also reminds me of the obligations all Masons take so near akin to lying, viz., to lie conditionally. C. G. FAIT.

FINCH, GOOD TEMPLARISM AND PROHIBITION.

BARABOO, Wis., Jan. 21, 1886.

DEAR CYNOSURE:—The citizens of Baraboo had an opportunity on the 14th inst. of hearing John B. Finch speak on the subject of temperance. His reputation as chairman of the National Prohibition Committee had preceded him, and it was also known that he occupied a very exalted position as a secretist. A large audience greeted him. Quite a number of Good Templars, with conspicious badges, accupied reserved seats in front, but the bulk of his audience were open-air Prohibitionists who came expecting to hear an able champion defend their position against the bitter attacks to which they are exposed.

He spoke rapidly for two hours, but he did not in the whole discourse allude to third party prohibition. His address was as grateful to our political opponents as if it had been pronounced by one of their own number. He spoke forcibly against license. This was the only point on which they took issue with him.

We expected some championship from the man who had been one of our conspucious leaders, but we were entirely disappointed.

The explanation seems to be this: He is now in the employ of the secret society of which he is the head, so that he is foreclosed from speaking his real sentiments on the question of prohibition. At the same time he said that prohibition was one of the three cardinal principles of Good Templarism; but this was not, of course, "third party prohibition."

Among the audience of Good Templars were some of the bitterest enemies of the third party whom it has been our fortune to meet. There is no doubt that Mr. Finch is a third party man, and a strong one at that, but yet he stood before his Baraboo audience bound in fetters which hindered him from declaring his principles, to the great disappointment of the majority of those who came out to hear him.

The whole controversy here is over the third party movement. Many of our opponents say, "I am just as good a prohibitionist as you are; but you have put the cause back twenty years by your foolish movement." Mr. Finch did not speak on this point at all, and this is the only point of interest in our community.

If Good Templarism can tie up such a man as Mr. Finch, what have we to expect from it as an ally in the great movement against the saloons? Some of their leaders openly oppose the formation of prohibition clubs. They desire to swallow up the club members, and then they will oppose the third party.

I see trouble ahead growing out of this condition of things. I cannot doubt the wisdom of organizing the American party, for I fear the time is near when we shall be compelled to run candidates of our own or be swallowed up by a party heavily ridden by secretism. If I remember rightly John B. Finch was the very man who led in the ill-mannered attempt to hiss and stamp down Pres. Charles A. Blanchard at the Pittsburg Convention. He is evidently a Good Templar first and a Prohibitionist afterwards. He did the cause no real good by his visit to Baraboo. Respectfully, J. W. WOOD

BRO. DISSETTE CRITICIZED.

WAUSEON, O., Jan. 23, 1886.

EDITOR CYNOSURE:—I see in your last issue a statement of Bro. Dissette's in regard to his work and maltreatment in Champaign, Ill. As one who has himself suffered in a similar manner for the same truth, and who now has had time and opportunity for a fuller view of the case, I wish to say a word:

1. The trial and imprisonment of Bro. Dissette, according to the facts given was utterly unjustifiable, and simply a piece of Masonic "legal" outrage—a thing which has happened before and may happen again, but which is an insult to every instinct of righteousness.

2. Bro. Dissette's conduct in the revival meetings, according to his own account, was entirely wrong. I do not know whether Bro. D. is a minister himself or not, but believe not. That fact, however, would not essentially change the case were it otherwise. I am now in the midst of revival meetings and shortly since was endeavoring to secure a union of effort by all the churches here. I know, as every one who has ever been through the experience knows, how much it costs to secure such an union, in the face of sectarian differences and the general apathy and inertia with reference to religious work. To have another and foreign element of discord thrown in by a stranger would be almost insupportable under such circumstances; it would be hardly less than an impertinence born of Satan to thwart the efforts being inaugurated against his vile kingdom. Should any such person appear in my meetings the second time, I should give him very plainly to understand that he was out of place, as he most certainly would be. There is a time and place for exposing secret societies, but neither is in a revival meeting of persons unenlightened upon the subject, when the whole effect will be to divert their minds from the object in hand and thwart every effort for the salvation of souls. It is perfectly right and proper to split kindling-wood, for illustration, but to split it in a revival meeting would be utterly out of place. The fact that the splitter believed it to be his bounden duty to do so—a duty from which he could not conscientiously escape, even,—would only prove the sadly morbid state of his conscience—not the rightfulness of his act. His act would be exceedingly ill-advised, and if continued would most certainly destroy whatever chance there had been of doing good by the meeting.

The reason for writing these words is not to be found in Bro. Dissette's case alone, but in the somewhat wide-spread idea among our friends, which I once possessed, also, that anti-secrecy must take precedence of everything else, and if others did not put it thus in advance it was our duty to push it ahead regardless of time, place, or consequences. A more false and disastrous idea can hardly be broached. God waited 2,500 years, nearly half the world's lifetime, before he gave man even the Ten Commandments, and then waited 1,500 more before sending Christ. Why did not he push everything ahead all in a heap at once, with the Ten Commandments and Christ together at the dawn of creation?

Because it was an impossibility so to "reach" things; the mind of man must be gradually developed up to the point when a Decalogue first, and then a Christ, would be received by it, and the four-thousand years of God's patient waiting and working little by little as it was possible to advance, "here a little and there a little," never stepping backward, never hastening, are a rebuke unavoidable to us in our hot-headed haste which makes so very much waste of time and effort and blocks the progess of the very cause we are striving to advance. Christ lived on earth thirty-three years after he did come and in all that time never instituted a single temperance society, even though the world was, outside of Palestine, in almost one vast drunken stupor. The time for that was "not fully come," so he enunciated principles that would in time result as we see they have resulted, and then waited till that time should come. Had he been like us he would have rushed pell-mell at everything wrong at once, and would thus have destroyed the very work he labored to promote. His zeal would have been "not according to knowledge." We are not responsible for creating a world in one day. Bro. D. could in my judgment have accomplished much more by colporture work; speaking to audiences of his own if advisable (which would be very doubtful during revival effort), and humbly and sincerely taking part in the revival meetings, in line with their purpose and leadership, than in any other way. God has placed the care of and responsibitity for the religious condition of Champaign in the hands of its pastors and people—not in the hands of any stranger who cannot know the situation and needs of a place in advance, no matter who, or how good or able, he may be. Home claims and plans of work, as known and laid out by the pastors, are to have, and must have, always the precedence of everything else; and it is every pastor's duty to maintain himself in this God-given position against all intruders. I trust that these words will be taken by Bro. D. and all in the spirit which dictates them—a spirit of love for and interest in the work, and not of carping criticism.

STUDIES IN JEWISH HISTORY.

LESSON VII, Feb. 14, 1886.—The handwriting on the wall. Dan. 5: 1-12, 52-28.

GOLDEN TEXT.—Thou art weighed in the balances and found wanting.—Dan. 5: 27.

Open the Bible and read the lesson.]

COMMENTS ON THE LESSON BY E. E. FLAGG.

1. Belshazzar's impious revel. vs. 1–4. Belshazzar felt himself secure. What engine of war powerful enough to batter down the impregnable walls of Babylon?—while the fact of his giving such a feast at such a time was itself a defiance to the enemy, if they indulged any hope of reducing the city by famine. So the sinner lulls his conscience to rest with the opiate of worldly pleasure, and feels securest when nighest to the brink of destruction. Judgment against an evil work may not be executed speedily, but when the stroke falls it is swift and sure. Had Belshazzar been sober he might have recoiled from the sacrilege of using the temple vessels at an idol feast. But the act is not less provocative of divine wrath because he is in his cups when he thus insults Jehovah. Nowhere in the Bible do we find sin excused because committed under the influence of drink. And taken in connection with the solemn assertion of Scripture that no drunkard can inherit the kingdom of God this must be with every Christian man and woman one of the strongest possible arguments for prohibition. Only when Belshazzar had filled up the cup of his iniquity by the sacrilegious act does he see the handwriting on the wall. Yet Isaiah saw it 176 years before when he prophesied the fall of Babylon amid revelry and feasting. (ch. 21:5) On every evil institution, however feared or courted by church and state, men of clear spiritual vision have in all ages seen the handwriting of doom. The religious nature of the feast must not be overlooked. He drank wine and praised the gods of gold and silver, of brass and iron, of wood and stone. He was tolerant of all false religions. They required nothing disagreeable of him;—no repentance, no self-denial; the very same reason why the universal religion of Masonry, which admits the Mohammedan, infidel and Christian on the same level, is so acceptable to the natural heart.

2. The doom pronounced. vs. 5–12, 25–28. Daniel seems since the death of Nebuchadnezzar to have retired into comparative obscurity, yet there is no obscurity so deep as to hide the man for the hour, when once that hour has struck on the dial-plate of a nation's destiny. Again Daniel stands forth in the proud court of Babylon the inspired interpreter of mysteries. Mene: God hath numbered thy kingdom and finished it. Every evil, every wrong must eventually see Mene written on its walls. On the soul of every sinner conscience writes the terrible Tekel: "weighed in the balance and found wanting." Peres: Thy kingdom is divided and given to the Medes and Persians. The weak, cruel, sensual Belshazzar must make room for God's instrument, Cyrus. Rulers, institutions or parties which refuse to do the Lord's work must give way to others which will. The opportunities we throw away are not lost—only to ourselves. God always has his chosen instrument ready, waiting to seize what we reject. Hold that fast which thou hast that no man take thy crown.

LIGHT FROM THE WORD.

What other prophet besides Isaiah saw the handwriting on the wall? Jer., chs. 50, 51. What proverb applies strikingly to Daniel? Prov. 18: 16. Are God's judgments always sudden? Matt. 24: 37–41. Rev. 18: 19, l. c.

From Peloubet's Notes.

Confirmation of Scripture history from the stone records of the past. There are few works of Divine Providence more marvellous and interesting than the preservation of the records of this age about which we are now studying, hiding them safely from harm in great heaps of ruins for 2,300 years, and bringing them to light in these days when they can be read, when there is deep interest in such studies, and need of their aid in refuting skepticism. The kings wrote the history of their times on clay cylinders, or slabs, and baked them into stone. These, at the destruction of the city, were covered deep among the ruins, and thus preserved from the action of the elements and the hand of man. Now they are being exhumed and placed in our museums. Other inscriptions were engraved on stone, or on the rocky sides of ravines, and are being discovered. Every year brings something new. And these records, hidden for 25 centuries, now come forth to confirm and explain the Bible. Whole books are written to reveal this new light. One of the most interesting of these confirmations is in relation to King Belshazzar. No name like his was given in secular history. Indeed, that said that Nabonidus was the last king of Babylon, and that he was not killed when Babylon was taken. Skeptics said that Daniel was in error. Now, cylinders of this hardened clay have been found, and are in the British Museum, which say that Nabonidus associated his eldest son Belshazzar with him in the kingdom, and that he was king in Babylon, while his father was with the army outside. This explains why Belshazzar offered as a reward to make the interpreter of the writing on the wall third ruler. He himself was second, while his father was first. They also give facts which imply that Nabonidus married Nebuchadnezzar's daughter, and hence Belshazzar was a grandson of that great king, and so the statements of Jeremiah (50: 15–18; 51: 53–58) are confirmed. This is but one illustration of many.

"The golden and silver vessels . . . taken out of the temple . . . in Jerusalem." This was done more than once,—in B. C 605–4, almost 66 or 67 years before, and B. C. 586, 48 years before. A list of these vessels is found in Ezra 1: 8–11, where the number sent back to Jerusalem amounts to 5,400. They had probably been kept sacred so far in the temple, at least from such profane use. "That the king, etc., might drink therein." This act was not one of necessity or for honor's sake, but in reckless profanity.—Jamieson.

The wickedness of this act consisted, (1) In profaning these sacred utensils to base uses. (2) Increasing the insult by doing it at a feast to an idol, thus implying that the idol was superior to the living God. (3) By doing it at an immoral and drunken revel, thus insulting the moral law of God. (4) In addition to these, Belshazzar was guilty of pride, revelry and neglect of warnings from the past (see vs. 18–23.

"And this is the writing (see under v. 8). Daniel first read the words:

MENE, MENE, TEKEL, UPHARSIN.
Numbered, Numbered, Weighed, Divided, or Fragments.

Their individual meaning might be clear to all; but their application, or interpretation, as applied to Belshazzar, would be as dark an enigma as ever. In all the words there lay a double sense, which Daniel brought out.

"Mene, mene." This word is repeated to give emphasis and impressiveness. That which is foretold shall certainly and swiftly come to pass. Mene means numbered, the count is finished. So Daniel interprets its application to be "God has numbered thy kingdom, i. e., its duration or its days, "and has finished it,"—i. e., its duration is so counted out that it is full, that it now comes to an end.—Keil.

"Tekel." In this lies the double sense of weighed and found light. The application is that Belshazzar had been weighed as to his moral character and actions, and been found wanting, of light weight. He had not come up to the standard required. God had tested him and he had failed. "Perhaps the reference is not so much to him personally as to him as the representative of the Babylonian people,"

"Peres." This is the singular form, of which "Upharsin" is the plural It means divided, broken into pieces. The word Peres, when written according to ancient custom, without the vowels, is the same as the word which means Persians.—S. S. Times.

"Thy kingdom is divided." Not divided into two parts but broken into pieces, destroyed.—Keil.

"Given to the Medes and Persians." Media was a large country lying east of Assyria, north of Persia and southwest of the Caspian sea. Persia was a smaller and more mountainous country, lying east of Chaldea, south and southeast of Media, and north of the Persian gulf.—Todd. These nations had been combined into one kingdom by Cyrus, who at this time was besieging Babylon.

NOTE.—During his late meetings in Chicago, Mr. Moody took for his text one evening, when over 2,500 were present, the word "Tekel." He represented every one present as being weighed in a balance, and taking each of the Ten Commandments one after the other as weights, he preached a most powerful sermon against the prevailing sins of a great city, from which only Christ can save.—ED.

And many a time a man has travelled so far that God can never stop him until he has to put his dead wife in his pathway, and many a man has turned around and said, "I will go back! I will go back!" Many a time God has thrown the sweet angel babe, like a sweet angel chiseled out of marble, in the pathway of the father, and stopped him. This much I know: God will never suffer any man to be damned until he has done his best to save him.—Sam Jones.

As the Russian Raskolniks, or Dissenters, are strictly forbidden to print any books in Russia, they have lately opened a large printing office in Roumania. A number of phamphlets have been recently published there in defense of the Raskol against the Orthodox onslaught. These pamphlets are being largely circulated in Russia, to the consternation of the Orthodox clergymen.

AMERICAN PLATFORM.

Viewing with deep concern the corrupt and unsettled condition of American politics, and witnessing with alarm the fearful prevalence of caste and clannishness by which our citizens are being arrayed in hostile bands, working secretly to compass political ends, a method directly and powerfully tending to increase corruption, to destroy mutual confidence, and hasten disruption and bloodshed; and having no hope of adequate remedy for these evils from existing parties, and believing the foundation of a party based upon the fundamental principles of the Declaration of American Independence, both inevitable and indispensable:

We, therefore, a portion of the American people, believing with our fathers that we have our rights and liberties, not from men or parties, but from God; believing in the Christian marriage, and not in Mormonism; believing in the religious democracy of the New Testament, and not in the despotism of the lodge; believing, also, with our Scotch and English ancestors, that civil government, though ordained in God, is "founded in nature, not in grace," and, therefore, that all have equal civil rights; while we abhor the idea of enforcing religion or controlling conscience by human laws and penalties as calculated to make hypocrites, not Christians, and savoring of the days of priestism, the fagot and the stake, we at the same time as firmly believe that atheism and priestcraft are twins and both alike foes to human liberty and welfare. We further most firmly believe that a government without God has none but lynch power, and is destitute of all legitimate authority to maintain civil order, to swear a witness, to try a criminal, to hang a murderer, to imprison a thief; and while we consider government without God as a mere usurpation, we regard all religions and worships invented by men, and so having no higher than human origin, as mere swindling impositions and cheats. We believe in peace and in national arbitration as a means of perpetuating it; yet we as profoundly believe that the bravery and blood of our soldiers have bought us the peace which we enjoy, and we honor the memories of the dead and will be just to the claims of the living; and we take up and prolong the strain raised by the women of this country: "For God, and home, and native land," and trust that this beautiful and patriotic motto will soon be not only echoed by their voices, but sustained by their votes.

We, therefore, solemnly adopt and present the following, as containing a brief synopsis of the principles of our government, by which we intend to be governed in casting our votes. We hold:

1. That ours is a Christian and not a heathen nation, and that the God of the Christian Scriptures is the author of civil government.
2. That the Bible should be associated with books of science and literature in all our educational institutions.
3. That God requires, and man needs a Sabbath.
4. We demand the prohibition of the importation, manufacture, and sale of intoxicating drinks.
5. We hold that the charters of all secret lodges granted by our Federal and State Legislatures should be withdrawn, and their oaths prohibited by law.
6. We are opposed to putting prison labor or depreciated contract labor from foreign countries in competition with free labor to benefit manufacturers, corporations or speculators.
7. We are in favor of a revision and enforcement of the laws concerning patents and inventions; for the prevention and punishment of frauds either upon inventors or the general public.
8. We hold to and will vote for woman suffrage.
9. That the civil equality secured to all American citizens by Articles 13, 14 and 15 of our amended National Constitution should be preserved inviolate, and the same equality should be extended to Indians and Chinamen.
10. That international differences should be settled by arbitration.
11. That land and other monopolies should be discouraged.
12. That the general government should furnish the people with an ample and sound currency
13. That it should be the settled policy of the government to reduce tariffs and taxes as rapidly as the necessities of revenue and vested business interests will allow.
14. That polygamy should be immediately suppressed by law, and that the Republican party is censurable for the long neglect of its duty in respect to this evil.
15. And, finally, we demand for the American people the abolition of electoral colleges, and a direct vote for President and Vice President of the United States.

EDITORIAL CORRESPONDENCE.

STRAIGHT UNIVERSITY.

NEW ORLEANS, Jan. 21, 1886.

DEAR CYNOSURE:—I have just addressed the students of Straight University by request of Pres. R. C. Hitchcock. They number some 500 strong, and are a bright, intelligent group with a good faculty. If there were no such school here, and one like this could be started, it would be sufficient cause for a day of thanksgiving. But when I group what I have seen here with Berea, Knoxville, Nashville and Memphis, I am filled with joy, and, at the same time, with remorse, that I ever repined at the "long agony" of years of prophesying in sackcloth and prayer for this day. Pres. Hitchcock had seen and heard Pres. C. A. Blanchard and myself at South Hadley Falls, Mass., in 1871, where we spoke in Rev. Geo. E. Fisher's church, Mr. Fisher being then master of Holyoke Lodge. Prof. Geo. W. Bothwell had heard the former in Ohio, and he congratulated me on saying "just the things we need to hear." This is what I said: I told them we "wished for a general congress of good men from all churches to consider the nature of secret societies and advise concerning them." A smile ran over the crowd showing that very many of them had been ensnared by the "man-traps of Satan." I said, "I know that you will like me, because I graduated your good Dr. Roy, who has often addressed you." I told them that there was a craze like an epidemic disease on the colored people on secret societies; and mentioned cases which had come to my knowledge in different parts of the South. But the worst of all was those lodges were little sham religions without Christ, so they could not, as David did, "set the Lord always before their face," as their professor had read in the 16th Psalm.

Rev. Mr. Wharton and wife, self-supported English evangelists, are holding meetings there. There is much solemnity and many conversions. So I told them that beholding Christ was what converted and saved people; and that when wicked men killed and crucified the Saviour then he sent "another Comforter," a Spirit, the sweet dove of heaven whom men could not catch and kill; so he, the Holy Ghost, was ready in their meetings to take the things of Christ and show them to every one who would be sorry for all the sins he knew, and would agree to repent of the rest as fast as he saw them." I alluded to Rev. Mr. Harris of Jackson, Tenn., and President Hitchcock spoke and said many present knew him. So I had a good and joyous time.

I then went to see Dr. Palmer again, but found him again gone out visiting the sick. He is not a Mason, nor is Dr. Smith of the Southwestern Presbyterian; and Mrs. Palmer thinks few or no ministers of the Church South have joined the lodge. Saturated with secrecy as society is here, it would be expecting miracles to expect these venerable men to take a leading part in unclutching the fingers of the lodge from the throat of the church. But that they have kept themselves out of lodges is greatly to their credit, and contrasts sublimely with the conduct of Bateman, Courier, Quint, Eddy, and other professedly orthodox men in the North.

Leaving now New Orleans

FOR FLORIDA,

I feel calm and happy as a benediction after prayer. I have stopped with a family who were slaveholders after the straitest sect. I have dined with a lady whose brother was with Symmes, the pirate. I have travelled and conversed with three of the guerrilla Morgan's men, and none of all whom I have seen, though most of them justify their past record, wish slavery back. I have spoken pointedly against the lodge, and declared myself everywhere an "original Abolitionist," and I have never received more courtesy or kindness than I have here. There are colored members in the Prytania Presbyterian church where I preached on the Sabbath; and colored people have been in almost every car in which I have travelled, and have been treated with no indignity. I am told there is a change of late in this respect, and other localities may show differently. But I record facts as I have seen them.

I do not forget that I am in the Ku-klux land, and in a city where Gen. Sheridan reported a premeditated massacre of 400 Republican voters. I have not met those political assassins. But I saw Wm. Pitt Kellogg at Washington on the wrong side of the Star Route trials, along with Bob Ingersoll, and remember that Mr. Kellogg was a principal partisan in the bloody business here. I remember, too, that Northern Masons murdered Morgan, and Northern lodges uphold the act, with his blood still crusted on their altars! And that Northern Masons were confederate with Southern Masons in the lodges of the District of Columbia in organizing the war of the rebellion. The secretary of Federal Lodge No. 1, when Pike's Indians were initiated and sworn to prepare them to fight and scalp at Pea Ridge, was a man from central New York!

On the whole, the impression made on my mind is this: That human nature is everywhere fallen; that there is a reality in regeneration; and though custom, habit, ancestry and the "works of the devil" make localities vary, the true children of God are one family, and there are very precious children of God here in New Orleans. EDITORIAL KALEIDOSCOPE.

"To catch the living manners as they rise."

FIG. I.—On the Mississippi, below Natchez, a somewhat rough traveler, from Covington, Ky., (once the last place to look for goodness), had buried his young wife, put their child with its grand parents, and was traveling for relief of mind. He had found it by finding Christ, and was peaceful and happy. He brought me his late wife's picture and Bible. The face was sweet and saintly, and the Bible marked throughout, and he hung over the marked pages as if an angel were expounding them. This obscure young woman had met and married him in Covington. He was from Illinois. She won him from dancing, card-playing, theatres, and the lodge, though he had never heard or read a word against it. He paid dues still, though he had long since left its meetings. He said, as a rule, not above one-fifth of the members attend the lodges! Of course the lodges are supported by those who seldom or never attend, and are run by the worst fifth. He said he had often felt the injustice of dropping for non-payment of dues those who had paid for years, when they became poor, depriving them of all they had paid in. His sainted young wife was a Disciple—unknown, unheard of out of her home. Her husband promised her to become a Christian and has kept his word.

FIG. II.—In New Orleans, the family where I stopped consisted of four generations, which shows old age not confined by latitude, and yet one fancies death divides and diversifies families more in the South. This must have been true during the war.

This excellent family, extremely Southern, with a single exception, brunette with dark Spanish eyes, reared in the moral miasm of slavery, alternating between residence in town and beyond Lake Ponchartrain—yet exhibit the power which the Bible attributes to a pious mother, and the transforming power of faith. They teach and pray for the persecuted Chinese, and they aid Mr. and Mrs. Wolfe in their mission for the recovery of lost girls; thus kindling the fire of salvation at the bottom of the human grate. The eldest son, James, has been a clerk in some court, and by my request brought me a lawyer's word that Chinese are sworn here by "cutting off a cock's head and burning the blood on paper;" but if Christians they swear by putting their hand on the Bible. This, of course, insults God, and sets aside Christian civilization, and proves the need of the American platform.

This family (McEnery) are by name and blood connected with the present Louisiana Governor and also with the one who superceded Gov. Kellogg. But the poison Upas, slavery, is extracted and the sun now rises in the South.

FIG. III.—UP THE ST. JOHN'S RIVER, FLORIDA.—This is not a stream but a meandering chain of lakes, so that there is no particular width to the water. How far the late freeze has affected the swamp forests on either hand, none here seem to know. But the woods appear now like a funeral cortege, heavily draped with dingy, dark-gray moss. Now and then a tall palm tree spreads its green basket of fan-like leaves; and here and there a tall tree lifts its green head above the gray forest mantle of cypress, live-oak and other swamp trees.

We are this moment passing a nice house surrounded by pleasant grounds, filled with loaded orange trees, which would be resplendently beautiful, but for the late freeze, which has astonished their owners and saddened them. But the tree of the country is the pine, which grows up straight to its umbrella top. A hundred acres of such would be a perpetual timber growth, yielding five acres of mill-logs yearly. Of course this is not Florida, but its tangled fringes. The day is beautiful. The river, black and, like a polished mirror, reflects sky, clouds, and shore,

Whose tendrils above and its hangings below
Seem to meet at the surface and there to entwine.

FIG. IV.—On the cars from New Orleans we had a navy captain whose U. S. ship lay at Pensacola, a native German Lutheran from southeast Missouri, and a lady born in Louisiana, a Catholic who went to Cuba to save her slaves during the war, now living in Georgia. The captain praised the Chinese anong whom he had been stationed, and denounced their treatment by this country, in violation of our treaties and law and justice.

The Missourian said, "I keeps a good shtore und selled a leetle liquor, and I quits it. But I am not temperance. We drives out all but one and makes him walk straight and pay $500. But I go not near him to drink any. But when these women takes hold of things they goes wrong. De woman is to stand up by a man and help him when he gets discouraged, but they never will get us rid of liquor."

The Georgia woman whose tongue was likewise a little tipt with German, said, "One in ten negroes, may be, does well: the rest were better slaves; they give all they get for drink. But the women took round petitions to the county authorities, and drove the liquor off so far the negroes cannot get it. May be the negroes will do better if they drive the liquor clear away."

In fact wherever I see and converse with people, "Truth seems to be springing out of the earth, and righteousness looking down from heaven. J. B.

DAVIS AND MASONRY—THE CASE SETTLED.

The testimony of Dea. O. M. Brown, of Oberlin, in this number settles, we believe, the controversy with the late chief of the rebellion. After noting what he says, also the letter from Bro. Fait on page 4, the attention of the reader is called to these considerations:

1. After treason had become odious, Lincoln was assassinated and Davis captured in disgrace, it was of course for the interest of Freemasonry to separate itself from Mr. Davis's company, if he was a lodge-member. It is, therefore, to be expected that Masons would deny that he was ever a Mason. So they attempted with Arnold, though the record of his Masonry, which cannot be denied, has been published for years.

2. Masonry, like Jesuitism, does not scruple about facts, when the reputation of the order is involved. The oath permits and encourages this.

3. Davis has repeatedly denied the facts of his capture in female attire, which are officially reported in the war records in Washington. He also, in his letter printed in these columns two weeks ago, denies being a rebel as he understands the term. To deny his Masonry after the above requires no stretch of his conscience. It is the only thing to be expected, since to do so would be a favor to the lodge, of which he speaks in terms of approval.

4. The witnesses on the other side are unimpeachable. Deacon Brown has long been known and esteemed as an officer of the First Church, Oberlin, and one of the best citizens of the town. He has nothing to make or lose by his testimony; and men who know him hold his word as good as an oath. Mr. Felton, the master of Oglethorpe lodge gave his testimony at a time and under circumstances which render it unbiased, and it is impossible to suppose from his conversation, that he was attempting to deceive Dea. Brown.

This evidence we must regard, therefore, far more credible than either that of Davis, or of the Grand Secretary of the Grand Lodge of Mississippi, who wrote to the Voice of Masonry that Davis's name was not on their list; and we are compelled to believe, therefore, that Freemasonry had something to do with the rebellion through its head, and, we hope, sole living defender.

Joseph Cook began his lecture course in Tremont Temple, Boston, on Monday noon. The eight lectures this year will be on "Vital Orthodoxy at Home and Abroad." The specific topics are thus announced: "What is Saving Faith?" "Man's Part in Conversion." "God's Part in Conversion." "Christ the Way, the Truth, and the Life." "The Unity of the Faith of Evangelical Christendom in Regard to the Means of Salvation." "Agreements of the Foremost Evangelists of all Ages." "Methods of the Most Successful Preachers." "The Church Needed by the Times." There will be a symposium on the question, "What saves men, and why?" There will also be preludes and interludes as heretofore. There is no intimation given whether among the latter there will be any notice of the lodge question, in answer to the request numerously signed which was handed Mr. Cook last summer. It is to be regretted that a strong convention could not have been held in the East to give emphasis to these requests and prepare the way for Mr. Cook to speak. Had he been lecturing in Boston at the time of the mob in 1880 he has assured us he would have devoted a prelude to the lodge. Let us pray that God will prepare the way this year, and enlighten also the speaker and fill him with courage and divine power to speak so that the churches shall hear and take the alarm against their hidden foe.

THE MOODY MEETINGS in this city two weeks ago closed with such pronounced interest that the work was continued in the Chicago Avenue church; and, at the urgent request of Mr. Moody, Pres. C. A. Blanchard spoke every evening last week until Saturday. The meetings grew in size and interest to the close and a number of conversions resulted, among them two members of the Masonic lodge, who spoke frankly and inquired earnestly after the way of Christian duty in respect to their lodge relation. We regret that Mr. Moody did not find or make an opportunity to speak a word of warning against the lodge. Late in the week just before the close of his meetings a note was addressed him, requesting that he leave again his testimony against the lodge. It is true that he generally speaks on this subject while holding a Christian Convention, where he has more freedom of discussion; but in his Wednesday evening sermon on the Ten Commandments, he spoke with great power against Sabbath-breaking, Sunday papers and street-cars, adultery, etc. We almost expected to hear a testimony against the secret societies along with the rest. It would have been more of a surprise had President Blanchard omitted to say a word on the subject during last week, and it was a pleasure to note how well his word of warning was received at two of the meetings.

THE UNITED BRETHREN COMMISSION is ably argued on both sides in the present number, and we expect Prof. Kephart's argument will call out more than one reply. We purposed one indeed, in this connection, but the facile pen of the editor of the Conservator and of his Michigan brother have relieved us of the labor. We wish to call the attention to the fact that the British Constitution, the most firmly established of all political formulas, has been accepted and adopted by that great nation much as he claims the United Brethren have accepted their constitution. It is no argument against the document when or how it was accepted since the church has acted peaceably under it for many years. The proposed article on secret societies, too, declares nothing, decides nothing, and will, we fear, amount to nothing. It virtually amounts to the same as the action taken by the General Synod of the Reformed Church, under which Masons and secretists of every sort can live contentedly. We shall rejoice to be convinced that we have misjudged Bishop Weaver in this matter, but Bro. Kephart will have to write again to do it.

BRO. NUTTING has opened a door whereat a score of replies may fly in. He is at least to be congratulated in having escaped from a delusion respecting the lodge, but it is to be regretted that the pendulum of his sentiments seems to have swung to the other extreme. He should remember Horace—medio tutissimus ibis. If a pastor is led by the Holy Spirit, and filled with his power, he may speak of the lodge every Sabbath, or in every prayer meeting, and his words will be blessed. If he have not the Spirit he might as well speak against the saloon, or gambling den, or any other evil which it pleases his church to hear denounced. We were not with Bro. Dissette at Champaign: perhaps he was unwise, perhaps he was not. So long as the week of prayer topics are observed he was in order. In our judgment when he got the leaders of the meeting to speak against the lodge it might have been better to have let them do all the talking for the time being. It is very easy to criticise; what God wants to know is how the pastors are keeping their oath to him to proclaim the whole counsel of God.

—The Band of Hope, connected with the Chicago Christian Association, wishes to acknowledge with many thanks a donation of $5 from another friend in this city.

—The experiences of the Ohio agent have an occasional humorous turn, but all the while he gets subscriptions for the Cynosure and keeps a good part of his audience in a good reform condition thereby the year round. The week ending Jan. 26, he added 29 names to the list.

—Pres. C. A. Blanchard is engaged to speak on the lodge in the Presbyterian church of Bloom, Ill., near Chicago, on Saturday evening next. The pastor, Rev. Wm. Morrow, and the principal of the public schools, Bro. E. R. Worrell, are engaged in securing this meeting. It is a happy thing for any community when men of such influential position take such a stand for the discussion of public evils.

—The mission that has for some three months been carried on in the hall of the N. C. A. building by Bro. B. Loveless and others, has been removed to a larger room on Washington Boulevard two blocks away, where a large vacant church building, for many years occupied by the Universalists, has been rented, and other missionary work will be united with that of Bro. Loveless. The converts during the time this work has been going on in the N. C. A. building number some 150.

—Bro. Jasper Tucker, of Battle Creek, Michigan, who has been engaged by his State Association as colporteur, writes that in his visits from house to house he has had to meet the lodge advocates face to face, and when he gets down to his own experience in the order it softens the asperity of the debate on the lodge side in a remarkable manner. In a meeting last week he was enabled to give a good testimony for the truth telling how he was blest of God when he gave up Masonry.

—The last letter received from the editor of the Cynosure was postmarked Sandford, Florida, an important town in Orange county on the St. John's river. He will stop there with Dr. and Mrs. J. D. Bishop, one a former student, the other a popular matron in Wheaton College a few years ago. He will probably be this week in Washington, and next at home again after an absence of nearly three months. He preached last Sabbath in the Presbyterian church of Sanford, on the secret lodge system, on the invitation of the pastor.

WASHINGTON LETTER.

Local Improvements.—The President's Tug of War with the Senate.—The G. A. R. Must Learn Moderation.—Shall the Indian Tribes be Broken up?—Buy Out the Liquor Men.—The Churches and the Lodges.

There are three bills now pending in Congress, which are of much importance to this city. The construction of a new postoffice, a new library building, and a system of cable railway for the District are the objects provided for. The first is to occupy the block south of the Patent Office, between Eighth and Ninth streets, now occupied by the LeDroit buildings; the second is to be built between First and Second streets, east of the Capitol grounds, either north or south of East Capitol street; and the cable road is to accommodate the city and extend to the Soldier's Home. These schemes if carried out will involve the expenditure of many millions, and add much to the wealth and beauty of the city.

The question as to the right of the Senate to demand of the President the reasons for his dismissals from office remains undecided. Both parties are firm and are seeking to avoid an open conflict. Nevertheless it will come, and our excellent chief magistrate will have to yield or he will find the popular voice turned against him. The temper of the people is such that it will brook no exercise of arbitrary power. Both in this country and in Europe the people are more and more becoming the rulers of those who rule. So long as the Senate has a right to reject nominations, it has a right to know the reasons why they were made, and this implies the right to know why the holding officer was removed.

It is refreshing to know that there is a growing reaction against the demands of the Grand Army that the first great object of government shall be to pay money and give office to the soldiers in the late war. The following is from the Star of the 27th inst.

In all soberness, is it not time to deal with the question of pensions from some other standpoint than the re-election of members of Congress? Is it too much to ask Congressmen to deal with this class of legislation on its merits, and with some reference to the public finances?

There is a proposition pending to extend the limit of time for filing applications for arrears of pensions to 1888, and the bill meets with a significant degree of favor. Yet the Pension office states that if the bill passes it will require an expenditure of $75,000,000 to meet the claims already filed in the office in expectation that this measure will become a law! Is there to be no moderation, no limit, no barriers to this legislation?

Unquestionably valuable as were the services rendered by our citizen soldiers, there is surely something better to do than that Congress should not only make provision for ample pensions, but should spend days and weeks in considering private bills that come under no general law.

The grand Hebrew fair which has been for some time in progress in Washington is being conducted in a spirited manner and drawing many visitors. It must not be supposed that Jews are any more scrupulous than Gentiles about the use of fish ponds and similar schemes of fraud and folly.

Recent investigations of the Signal Service Bureau, under General Hazen's management, show that there has not been any radical reform since Captain Howgate's era. A huge number of items of illegal expenditure have been unearthed; among them, as a specimen, is the charge of $202.50 for forty-five gallons of whisky.

The meetings of the Colonization Society and of the Indian Aid Society awakened considerable interest, especially the latter. Captain Pratt, of the Carlisle school visited the city with a considerable number of his Indian pupils. They were graciously received by the President and Miss Cleveland, and made creditable speeches in the First Presbyterian church. Chief Jumper, the Seminole, thinks that the allotment of land in severalty is a measure that must not be pushed too far. In this he is probably right. His illustration, that you must not put a man's clothes on a boy, is appropriate. But the danger is not in going too fast or too far, but rather that nothing will be done.

The recent decision of Judge Brewer that brewers and distillers have a right of recompense for property destroyed by prohibition enactments, will have considerable bearing on the question. It would be far better that all the breweries and distilleries should be bought up and burned rather than have their business go on. But such a claim, if it has any validity, must come from law-abiding men. Shylock could have his pound of flesh provided he did not transcend by one hair's breadth the limit of the contract. These men who have from the first and all the time persistently evaded and defied the law, should have small claim to its protection.

The week of prayer has passed without marked incident. There is no special interest in the churches. Spasmodic piety is not prolific of great results. The rooms of the Central Union Mission have been renovated, repapered and painted, and a number of the city pastors are taking turns in conducting the meetings. Much good has been accomplished, and it is greatly to be hoped that the good work may go on.

The lodges of the city have been remarkably quiet. Masonry is doubtless an important influence in our legislation and our courts, but at present it is a most silent influence. Evidently it is conscious of public reprobation. So far as I can learn all the Masons, of whom there were several, who have professed conversion in the Central Union Mission, have given up the order and speak against it. I am sorry to say that some have come in to work with us who flaunt their Masonic jewelry before the world. May the Lord show them their folly and sin.

LITERATURE.

EMMA'S TRIUMPH, by Jane S. Collins. United Presbyterian Publication Society, Pittsburgh.

Mrs. Collins, our readers need hardly be told is the wife of our Dr. Collins, now pastor of a church in Jersey City and president of our National Convention. When we remember that Mrs. Collins has spent several seasons at Ocean Grove, it seems not only probable, but almost certain, that the incidents of this entertaining little book are facts that came under her observation there. The story is one of Divine grace in the heart of a young woman reared in luxury and wealth, and, as the daughter of a liquor-seller, who had learned to accept that business as necessary and honorable. The difficult questions she had to solve when her feelings and convictions became changed make up an entertaining story, and though it is in part a love story, it is not spoiled, but an honest one. Mrs. Collins is not a sensational writer. The plot and incidents would warrant more fire, energy and sentiment. Perhaps the book will be more useful because of the calmness and simplicity of its style.

We have received from W. Atlee Burpee & Co., the well-known seedsmen of Philadelphia, a copy of Burpee's Farm Annual for 1886. Unlike any other catalogue published, this book of 128 pages, in addition to seeds, bulbs and plants, fully describes and illustrates the leading breeds of swine, sheep, Scotch Colly dogs, and fancy poultry. It contains much valuable information, two beautiful colored plates, and hundreds of illustrations of all varieties of vegetables and flowers, including novelties of striking merit. Those of our readers who are interested in seeds or thoroughbred stock, can obtain Burpee's Farm Annual free, by addressing the publishers at Philadelphia, Pa. W. Atlee Burpee & Co. enjoy a wide reputation for the fine quality of the seeds grown and sold by them.

T. B. Arnold, publisher of the Hand Book of Freemasonry by Edmond Ronayne, announces that the original plates being worn out, a thorough revision of the work is being made by Bro. Ronayne, and numerous foot-notes and references will be added, greatly increasing the value of the work, which will contain about one-third more matter than the first edition.

A RIVER TO CROSS.

There's always a river to cross,
Always an effort to make,
If there's anything good to win,
Any rich prize to take:
Yonder's the fruit we crave,
Yonder the charming scene:
It's deep and wide, with a troubled tide,
Is the river that lies between.

For the treasures of precious worth
We must patiently dig and dive;
For the places we long to fill
We must push, and struggle, and strive;
And always and everywhere
We'll find in our onward course,
Thorns for the feet, and trials to meet,
And a dreadful river to cross.

The rougher the way that we take,
The stouter the heart and the nerve:
Tho' stones in our path we break,
Never from our impulse swerve;
For the glory we hope to win,
Our labors we count no loss;
'Tis folly to pause and murmur because
Of the river we have to cross.

Ready to do and to dare
Should we in our places stand,
Fulfilling the Master's will,
Fulfilling the soul's demand;
For though as the mountains high
The billows may rear and toss,
They'll not overwhelm if the Lord's at the helm—
One more river to cross.

MOSES AND HIS MASTER.

In those "old days" which have departed never to return, few things were more worthy of notice than the sincere though untrained and uncultured fervor of many of the dark-skinned bondmen of the Southern States. Among the stories of those times may be recalled the following, which was published many years since in a Baltimore paper, the Methodist Protestant, and is believed to be entirely authentic.

Mr. B—— was a merchant in Baltimore, and did a very heavy business, especially in grain. One morning as he was passing over the vessels that lay at the wharf he stepped upon the deck of one, at the stern of which he saw a negro man sitting, whose dejected countenance gave indication of distress: and he accosted him with—

"Hey! my man, what is the matter with you?"

The negro lifted his eyes, and replied—

"Ah, massa, I'se in great trouble."

"What about?"

"Kase I's fotched up here to be sold."

"What for? Have you been stealing? or did you run away? or what?

"No, no, massa, none o' dat; it's bekase I didn't mind the orders."

"What kind of orders?"

"Well, massa stranger, I tell you. Massa Willum werry strick man, and werry nice man, too, and ebry body on de place got to mine him; and I break de rule, doe: I forgot mesef, an I got too high?"

"It is for getting drunk, then, is it?"

"O no, sah, not dat nother."

"You are the strangest negro I have seen for a week. If you would not like to be pitched overboard, you had better tell me what you did."

"Please, massa, don't frow de poor flicted nigga in de wata."

"Then tell me what you are to be sold for."

"For prayin, sah."

"For praying? that is a strange tale indeed. Will your master not permit you to pray?"

"O yes, sah, he let me pray easy; but I hollers too loud."

"And why did you halloo so in your prayer?"

"Kase de Spirit comes on me, an I git happy fore I knows it; den I gone; can't trol messef den; den I holler if ole Satun hissef come, wid all de rules of de quisition."

"And do you suppose your master will really sell you for that?"

"O yes; no help for me now; all de men in de world couldn't help me now; kase when Massa Willum say one ting, he no do anoder."

"What is your name?"

"Moses, sah."

"What is your Master's name?"

"Massa name Colonel Willum C——."

"Where does he live?"

"Down on de Easin Shoah."

"Is he a good master? Does he treat you well?"

"O yes; Massa Willum good; no better Massa in de world."

"Stand up and let me look at you." And Moses stood up and presented a robust frame; and as Mr. B—— stripped up his sleeve his arm gave evidence of unusual muscular strength.

"Wher is your master?"

"Yander he is, jis comiu to de wharf."

As Mr. B—— started for the shore, he heard Moses give a heavy sigh, followed by a deep groan. Moses was uot at all pleased with the present phase of affairs. He was strongly impressed with the idea that B—— was a trader and intended to buy him. Mr. B—— reached the wharf just as Colonel C—— did. He introduced himself and said:

"I understand you wish to sell that negro man yonder on board the schooner."

Col. C—— replied that he did.

"What do you ask for him?"

"I expect to get seven hundred dolllars."

"How old is he?"

"About thirty."

"Is he a good hand?"

"Yes, sir, he is the best hand on my place. He is steady, honest, and industrious. He has been my foreman; and that he might be available at any moment I might want him, I built his quarter within a hundred yards of my own house; and I have never rung the bell at any time in the night or morning, that his horn did not answer in five minutes after. But two years ago he got religion, and commenced what he terms family prayer—that is, prayer in his quarter every night and morning; and when he begun his prayer, it was impossible to tell when he would stop, especially if, as he termed it he got happy. Then he would sing and pray and halloo for an hour or two together, so loud that you might hear him a mile off. And he would pray for me and my wife and children, and all my brothers and sisters and their children, and our whole family connection to the third generation; and sometimes when we would have visitors Moses' prayer would interrupt the conversation and destroy the enjoyment of the whole company. The women would cry, and the children would cry, and it would set me almost frantic; and even after I had retired, it would sometimes be nearly daylight before I could go to sleep; for it appeared to me that I could hear Moses pray for three hours after he had finished I bore it as long as I could, and then forbade his praying so loud any more. Moses promised obedience, but he soon transgressed; and my rule is never to whip, but whenever a negro proves incorrigible I sell him. This keeps them in better subjection, and is less trouble than whipping. I pardoned Moses twice for disobedience in praying so loud, but the third time I knew I must sell him, or every negro on the farm would soon be perfectly regardless of all my orders."

"You spoke of Moses' quarter; I suppose from that he has a family."

"Yes, he has a woman and three children—or wife, I suppose he calls her now, for soon after he got religion, he asked me if they might be married, and I presume they were."

"What will you take for her and the children?"

"If you want them for your own use, I will take seven hundred dollars; but I shall not sell Moses nor them to go out of the State."

"I wish them all for my own use, and will give you the fourteen hundred dollars."

Mr. B——and Col. C——then went to Mr. B——'s store, drew up the writings, and closed the sale, after which they returned to the vessel; and Mr. B——, approaching the negro, who sat with his eyes fixed upon the deck, seemingly wrapt in meditation of the most awful forebodings, said—

"Well, Moses, I have bought you."

Moses made a very low bow, and every muscle of his face worked with emotion as he replied—

"Is you, massa? Where is I gwine, massa? Is I gwine to Georgy?"

"No," said Mr. B——, "I am a merchant here in the city; yonder is my store. I want you to attend on the store; and have purchased your wife and children, too, that you may not be separated."

"Bress God fer dat! And, massa, kin I go to meetin sometimes?"

"Yes, Moses, you can go to church three times on Sabbath, and every night in the week; and you can pray as often as you choose, and as long as you choose, and get as happy as you choose; and every time you pray, whether it be at home or in church, I want you to pray for me, my wife, and all my children, and single-handed, too; for if you are a good man, your prayers will do us no harm, and we need them very much; and if you wish to, you may pray for everybody of the name of B—— in the State of Maryland. It will not injure them."

While Mr. B—— was dealing out these privileges to Moses, the negroe's eyes danced in their sockets, and his full heart laughed outright for gladness, exposing two rows of as even, clear ivories, as any African can boast; and his heart's response was, "Bress God! bress God all the time, bress you, too, massa! Moses neber tinks bout he gwine to have all dese commodations; dis makes me tink bout Joseph in de Egypt."

And after Moses had poured a few blessings upou Colonel C——, bidding him a warm adieu, and requesting him to give his love and farewell to his mistress, the children and all the servants, he followed B—— to the store, to enter upon the functions of his new office.

The return of the schooner brought to Moses his wife aud children.

Early the next spring, as Mr. B—— was one day standing at the store door, he saw a man leap upon the wharf from the deck of a vessel and walk hurriedly towards the store. He soon recognized him as Col. C——. They exchanged salutations, and, to the Colonel's inquiry after Moses, Mr. B—— replied that he was up stairs measuring grain, and invited him to walk up and see him.

Soon Mr. B——'s attention was arrested by a very confused uoise above. He listened and heard an unusual shuffling of feet, some one sobbing violently, and some one talking very hurriedly; and wheu he reflected upon Col. C——'s singular movements and the peculiar expression of his countenance, he became alarmed, and determined to go up and see what was transpiring.

When he reached the head of the stairs, he was startled by seeing Moses in the middle of the floor, down upon one knee, with his arms around the Colonel's waist, and talking most rapidly, while the Colonel stood weeping audibly.

So soon as the Colonel could sufficiently control his feelings, he told Mr. B—— that he had never been able to free himself from the influence of Moses's prayers, and that during the past year he and his wife and all his children had been converted.

Moses responded; "Bress God, Massa C——, doe I way up hea, I neber forgit you in my prayers; I ollers put de ole massa side de new one. Bress God! dis make Moses tink bout Joseph in de Egypt agiu."

The Colonel then stated to Mr. B——that his object in coming to Baltimore was to buy Moses and his family back again. But Mr. B——assured him that that was out of the question, for he could not part with him; and he intended to manumit Moses and his wife at forty, and his children at thirty-five years of age.

Years rolled on, and the kind purpose of the master was fulfilled, and in conclusion the relater of this story adds:

Old Moses is still living and doing well. He long since obtained his freedom, and at present occupies a comfortable house of his own, and I suppose sings and prays and shouts to his heart's content.

PREACHING TO THE DOGS.

The following is told of the famous African missionary, Robert Moffat:

One evening he halted at a farm which showed signs of belonging to a man of wealth and importance who had many slaves. The old patriarch, hearing that he was a missionary, gave him a hearty welcome, and proposed that in the evening he should give them a serviee. No proposal could have been more acceptable, and he sat down to the plain but plentiful meal with a light heart. The sons and daughters came in. Supper ended, a clearance was made, the big Bible and the psalm-books were brought out, and the family was seated.

"But where are the servants?" asked Moffat.

"Servants! What do you mean?"

"I mean the Hottentots, of whom I see so many on your farm."

"Hottentots! Do you mean that, then? Let me go to the mountains and call the baboons, if you want a congregation of that sort. Or, stop, I have it. My sons, call the dogs that lie in front of the door—they will do."

The missionary quietly dropped an attempt which threatened a wrathful ending, and commenced the service. The song was sung, prayer was offered, and the preacher read the story of the Syro-Phœnician, and selected more especially the words: "Truth, Lord, but even the dogs eat of the crumbs that fall from the master's table." He had not spoken many minutes when the voice of the old man was again heard. "Will Mein Herr sit down and wait a little? He shall have the Hottentots."

The summons was given, the motely crowd trooped in, many who probably had never been within the door of their master's house before, and many more who never before had heard the voice of a preacher.

When the sermon was over, and the astonished Hottentots had dispersed, the farmer turned to his guest and said: "My friend, you took a hard hammer, and you have broken a hard head."—Christian Union.

PARROTS.

Parrots are very entertaining birds, as you all know. When you visit a zoological garden you will learn how great is their variety, and what very noisy birds they are. If you have visited such a garden, or if you have only seen the parrots in a bird-dealer's shop, you will know that they are climbing birds. Of course you have often seen them climb up the wires of their cages, and hang down from the top.

There are many birds that are climbers, such as the woodpeckers and the wryneck, and if you look at the feet of any of these birds you will see that two of the four toes are turned to the front, and two toward the back. This gives them great power for grasping anything. Give a parrot a plum, a nut, or a small apple, and you may see him take hold of it with his claws, and so convey it to his mouth.

Their beaks are very strong, and so formed that the short lower jaw fits into the upper, and the action of the two is something like that of a pair of scissors. This beak serves them as a third foot in climbing, and with it they are able to crack nuts. Unlike the beaks of most birds, the upper half of this organ is jointed to the skull, and is therefore movable.

In place of the thin tongue so general in birds, the parrots possess one that is thick and fleshy, and which enables them to suck and taste. It is probable that this kind of tongue also helps them in their wonderful imitations of the human voice. The colors of their feathers, though so varied, are always brilliant and clear, and range through every tint, from pure white to black.

In proportion to the size and weight of their bodies, the wings are not well adapted for flight, and they have, in consequence, some difficulty in rising high into the air. But having attained the proper height, they fly rapidly and well, and sometimes to great distances. As a rule they confine themselves to high forest trees in the neighborhood of plantations, and live in large flocks. Some kinds migrate at certain seasons of the year; but this is not the general rule. One of these is the African parrot. When the rainy season is coming they assemble in great flocks, and fly so high that, it is said, they are lost to sight, though their calls still reach the ear.

In a wild state their food consists chiefly of seeds and fruits, and they are very fond of clear water, both to drink and to bathe in. It has frequently been stated that parrots never drink, and some parrot-keepers and dealers have made it a practice not to supply them with water. This is a cruelty, founded upon untruth. It is true that they can go without water for long intervals, but in a natural state they are in the habit of dwelling near streams and pools, and drink frequently, though sparingly.

Parrots live to a considerable age, and in captivity instances are on record of their having attained a hundred years; but the average length of life among the true parrots is about forty, among the paraquets twenty-five years.

There are many wonderful stories told of parrots. They can be taught to talk in almost a human manner, and there are stories of them told which almost indicate human intelligence.

Bayard Taylor tells this, among other entertaining stories of animal nature, in the February "Atlantic." The parrot was owned by a lady in Chicago:

"When the great fire was raging, its owner saw that she could rescue nothing except what she instantly took in her hands. There were two objects equally dear, the parrot and the old family Bible, and she could take but one. After a moment of hesitation she seized the Bible, and was hastening away, when the parrot cried out in a loud and solemn voice, 'Good Lord, deliver us!' No human being could be deaf to such an appeal; the precious Bible was sacrificed and the bird saved. He was otherwise a clever bird. In the home to which he was taken there were among other visitors a gentleman rather noted for volubility. When the parrot first heard him it listened in silence for some time; then, to the amazement of all present, it said, very emphatically, 'You talk too much!' The gentleman, at first embarrassed, presently resumed his interrupted discourse. Thereupon the parrot laid his head upon one side, gave an indescribably comical and contemptuous 'H'm—m!' and added, 'There he goes again!'"—Sel.

REMARKABLE MEMORIES.

There was a Corsican boy who could rehearse forty thousand words, whether sense or nonsense, as they were dictated, and then repeat in the reversed order without making a single mistake.

A physician, about sixty years ago, could repeat the whole of "Paradise Lost," without a mistake, although he had not read it for twenty years.

Euler, the great mathematician, when he became blind, could repeat the whole of Virgil's "Æneid," and could remember the first line and the last line on every page of the particular edition which he had been accustomed to read before he became blind.

One kind of retentive memory may be considered as the result of sheer work, a determination toward one particular achievement without reference either to cultivation or to memory on other subjects. This is frequently shown by persons in humble life in regard to the Bible. An old beggar man at Stirling, known about fifty years as "Blind Alick," afforded an instance of this. He knew the whole of the Bible by heart, insomuch that, if a sentence was read to him, he could name the book, chapter and verse; or, if the book, chapter and verse were named, he could give the exact words. A gentleman, to test him, repeated a verse, purposely making one verbal inaccuracy. Alick hesitated, named the place where the passage was to be found, but at the same time pointed out the verbal error. The same gentleman asked him to repeat the ninetieth verse of the seventh chapter of the Book of Numbers. Alick almost instantly replied: "There is no such verse. The chapter has only eighty-nine verses."

TEMPERANCE.

IS TOBACCO KING?

[From the Inter Ocean.]

The liquor question has received the radical attention of a considerable proportion of the vast community of States, and some very vigorous action has been taken to offset the usurpation by crippling the power of the usurper. The struggle going on is an interesting one, not the less so because the revolutionary spirits do not appear to have gained any permanent advantage. But the tobacco dynasty continues to extend its authority without encountering opposition, and the weed that Columbus found in the island of Cuba is as absolutely monarch of America as Alexander Selkirk was monarch of the island he had the chance fortune to occupy alone.

It is impossible to convey to the average mind intelligence of the extent to which this country is subject to this deleterious narcotic, simply because it is impracticable to comprehend the stupendous figures in which the facts must be presented. The word billion conveys a vague, intangible idea of magnitude, but no one has a definite sense of it any more than one has a clear notion of what is comprised in the term universe. When, therefore, it is declared that there were 3,500,000,000 of cigars smoked in the United States last year, one may admit the fact without knowing its significance. It has been estimated, accepting 1,000,000,000 as a billion, that had Adam begun counting and continued without stopping until now he would not have yet reached the billion point. In this light the fact may be grasped that it would take one man about 40,000 years to count, one by one, the cigars that were smoked in the United States last year.

Besides these cigars there were more than 1,000,000,000 cigarettes consumed, and 170,000,000 pounds of plug and fine cut chewed. Interesting indictment this, that allows over twenty-four pounds of tobacco to every family in the United States. How many people can get an adequate picture before their mind's eye of the bulk of this tobacco? If the cigars and cigarettes to the number mentioned were fastened end to end the line formed would be long enough to reach from the earth to a point a considerable distance beyond the moon. This represents a great volume of money for the maintainance of a luxury that not infrequently makes a ruinous tax upon the system, even going so far sometimes as to derange the brain and topple reason. As an industry nothing is more profitable. It benefits all who come between the growing plant and the consumer, the consumer paying the profit of all, and paying it very roundly, too.

A 15 cent cigar represents about 2 cents worth of tobacco and 1 cent's worth of labor, the balance being the tax of the handlers and government stamp. Next to drugs the consumer pays more for his tobacco than for any other commodity or article in which he deals, not excepting whisky. Especially dear to the buyer are cheap cigars, which are not only made up from inferior tobacco, but are often made from tobacco that has in part done serviee before.

The great popularity of tobacco is due primarily, of course, to the soothing influence it is supposed to exert upon the nerves, tranquilizing the mind and comforting the body. The advocates of tobacco can find any abundance of authority to justify its use, and the virtue of the weed has been sung in prose and poetry by rapturous writers, time out of mind. Physicians even declare the harmlessness of the article. It is comparatively harmless if moderately used and in proper respect of the constitution of the user; but most tobacco-users are self-abusers who do not practice moderation, and instead of tranquilizing, irritate and weaken their nervous systems, sometimes carrying the habit to such an excess that the man becomes a physical and mental wreck no less than the confirmed inebriate.

But this sort of counsel is not what the smoker or chewer asks for, and he positively refuses to be governed by any advice or any evidence that it is an easy matter to do one's-self a permanent injury with tobacco. The general smoker prides himself as much on the quantity as the quality of the cigars he smokes, and will tell you with gusto that he gets away with ten or fifteen cigars a day. In the presence of a few millions of such cheerful imbeciles it is not at all difficult to believe that the United States makes use of more than three billion cigars annually. Verily tobacco is king, and a very tyrannous one at that.

TOBACCO.—A PARABLE.

Then shall the kingdom of Satan be likened to a grain of tobacco seed, which, though exceedingly small, being cast into tbe ground grew, and became a great plant, and spread its leaves rank and broad so that huge and vile worms formed a habitation thereon. And it came to pass, in the course of time, that the sons of men looked upon it, and thought it beautiful to look upon, and much to be desired to make lads look big and manly. So they put forth their hands and did chew thereof. And some it made sick, and others to vomit most filthily. And it further came to pass that those who chewed it became weak and unmanly, and said we are enslaved and can't cease from chewing it. And the mouths of all that were enslaved became foul. And they were seized with a violent spitting; and they did spit even in ladies' parlors, and in the house of the Lord of Hosts. And the saints of the Most High were greatly plagued thereby.

And in the course of time it came also to pass that others snuffed it; and they were taken suddenly with fits, and they did sneeze with a great and mighty sneeze, insomuch that their eyes filled with tears, and they did look exceedingly silly. And yet others cunningly wrought the leaves thereof into rolls, and did set fire to the one end thereof, and did suck vehemently at the other end thereof, and did look very grave and calf-like; and the smoke of their torment ascended up forever and forever.

And the cultivation thereof became a great and mighty business on the earth; and the merchantmen waxed rich by the commerce thereof And it came to pass that the saints of the Most High defiled themselves therewith; even the poor who could not buy shoes, nor bread, nor books, for their little ones, spent their money for it. And the Lord was greatly displeased therewith, and said: "Wherefore this waste; and why do these little ones lack shoes and bread and books? Turn now your fields into corn and wheat; and put this evil thing far from you, and be separate, and defile not yourselves any more, and I will bless you and cause my face to shine on you."

But with one accord they all exclaimed:

"We cannot cease from chewing, snuffing and puffing—we are slaves."—Christian Secretary.

Tobacco is useful as an insecticide. We are only sorry that the process is so slow in the case of the little animals that congregate about a pool-room or druggist's light, smoking the poison in the form of cigarettes. If there is any one feature of a Western town that is almost universal it is the sight of a lot of half-grown boys sitting about the "Hotel," with feet in the air, smoking, chewing, swearing, lying, sinning against God, man and the English grammar, and, if it is a railroad town, waiting from morning to night for the "kyars" to come in. How much such gatherings are schools for all evil living only those who have had to listen for a few hours to the dirty talk know.

interpreter Baptiste, is, as is also Cong Seng. The highbinders are the offspring of the Triad society. This latter is the remnant of the Tai Ping rebellion, which was subdued over thirty years ago. The society is, of course, inimical to the government in China and to the ruling dynasty, by which it was subdued. In China the society has for its object a change of government, and to this end is engaged in collecting money and raising troops. Membership in the Triad society is punished by death by the government. In America, however, the character of the society has been changed.

The Chinamen of America come chiefly from the districts of Sing Ning Sin Way, Hian San, and Hock San, in the province of Quong Tung, the capital of which is Canton. During the early days of the gold excitement in California the Chinese from this province thronged to the Pacific coast, impelled by the desire to get rich. It was during the troublous times of those days that the Triad society of China was transplanted to America. The organization was at first governed by the spirit that pervaded the parent society, but through the lawlessness of those rude times it gradually came to be used as an instrument of blackmail and oppression. Known by the name of highbinders, this organization has become the terror of every Chinaman in America without regard to age, sex, or position in life. In the manner of the Molly McGuires of Pennsylvania, or the vigilantes of the west, the individual who has made himself obnoxious is first warned to leave the community. These warnings are given by anonymous communications, and if not obeyed the individual singled out is doomed to die by the hand of violence.

The society exists as an organization by itself, having its own signs and rites, but its members are also auxiliaries to other societies or to families. For instance, the societies of Sing Ning, or Sin Ways, or other kindred organizations for self-protection, have attached to them a small army of highbinders. When difficulties arise between opposing associations, which are too grave to be settled by the head men, the highbinders are set to work to drive the offenders out of the country or to remove the grievance by death. These assassins never engage in an open fight, and are, on the contrary, celebrated for cowardice, cruelty and treachery. The grea est merit of a highbinder is his ability to inflict torture. These men are supported sometimes by a regular levy imposed upon storekeepers, sometimes by a tax collected by the factions to which they belong. Some raise money by blackmail, and some by exacting contributions from gamblers. Besides the highbinders connected with the rival factions are those attached to leading families and to gambling houses. Others follow the life of a highbinder as a profession.

The present trouble in St. Louis is between gamblers' highbinders. The family highbinders are employed by those who represent the different surnames, such as Lee, Wong, Chu, Woo. Each of these families, when they become numerous in the community, has its own highbinders. The professionals are perhaps the most dangerous of them all, as they are the criminals' public servants. They will do almost anything for money. Numerous cases are on record of murder and butchery that can properly be laid at the door of these professional assassins. In San Francisco a few years ago Aan Yuer, a Chinese interpreter and a wealthy man, was found butchered in his own home. Wan Ah Suey, a year later, was shot dead while on his way to market. He was also an interpreter, and was attached to the Wong family. To neither of these murders was there any clew. In New York the Chinaman found chopped to pieces in his room on Cherry street about a year ago, owes his death to the cruelty of the highbinders. The assassins are now supposed to be in China. The murder at 25 Clinton place last summer was the deadly work of the highbinders. The victim, Ah Sing, was found tied to a post in his room, horribly mangled. In Chicago the murderous assault upon the Chinaman at 255 Clark street was made by highbinders. The victim was an interpreter who had been instrumental in winning a suit in Justice Brady's court. The five would-be murderers in this case were arrested, but one of them was a member of an influential Baptist church and of the Young Men's Christian Association. They were cleared by the efforts of the Christians.

The money paid for these deeds is given by the persons directly interested in having the victims disposed of. Charlie Long Sing, of Arctic Jeanette fame, who is serving a ten years' term for highway robbery in New Jersey, was refused admittance to the order of highbinders because he was a natural thief and too talkative.

THE CHURCHES.

—Bro. Hinman was lately beset in his mission at 909 Pennsylvania ave. Washington. He was severely reprimanded by the man for giving a seat in the meeting to a respectable colored man. One of the directors of the mission was present and sustained Bro. Hinman in preaching a free Gospel, irrespective of color or previous social condition.

—Pastor Norilius of the German Lutheran church writes to the Workman from California, that there are a number of families scattered through the State, but "infidelity, mammon, the lodge and sectarianism have made havoc of their faith."

Seguin, of the French Protestant mission work has returned to Chicago, and will resume the publication of the Gospel Trumpet, (La Trumpet Evangelique) in a monthly eight-page form, two pages being English, the rest French. It will be devoted to exposing and correcting the errors of Romanism and the lodge.

—The following was passed at the quarterly meeting in Boston, Jan. 11: "Reoslved, That the Evangelical Ministers' Association, representing the evangelical churches of Boston and vicinity, respectfully request our representatives in the Massachusetts Legislature to enact a law which shall forbid any city or town, or corporation passing any ordinance or by-law prohibiting the public reading of the Scriptures, the preaching of the Gospel, or the orderly worship of Almighty God upon any of the public grounds in the towns and cities of this Commonwealth where such religious exercises do not interfere with the rights of others and the peace of society."

—At a recent meeting of the New Haven Congregational Club, which was held last week, the subject of the evening's discussion was "The Place of Music in the Church Services." It was opened by Professor Blodgett, of Smith College, who in the course of his remarks said: "As the minister who interprets the Gospel to a congregation is engaged for his religious character and attainments, so should the interpreters of sacred music be engaged. To secure a man or woman morally impure to interpret the most powerful agent of religion is to completely destroy the effect you aim to attain."

—The Rev. James Kemper was ordained pastor of a church in Cincinnati, October 21st, 1792, the first Presbyterian ordination west of the Alleghanies. ARMENIAN CHURCHES IN CONSTANTINOPLE.

To all readers of the Cynosure:

DEAR FRIENDS:—As Christians we are interested in the cause of Christ throughout the world. Too often, however, in the labors of home we forget our brethren who are laboring for the same Saviour whom we love in the ends of the earth.

Our brother Filian is laboring, as you will see from the letters below printed, in Constantinople. His church is weak and the need of the field is great. Will you not ask the Lord whether you should aid him in preaching the Gospel of Jesus Christ in that ancient and needy city?

For nearly five hundred years Constantinople has been trodden down of the Turks, as for nearly nineteen hundred Jerusalem has been trodden down of the Gentiles. The signs indicate that the times of the Gentiles are rapidly being fulfilled, that soon our Lord will take account of his servants to know how much each one has done for him with the talents entrusted to his care. Do you not owe something to the cause of foreign missions? Mrs. L. H. Plumb, Streator, Ill., is treasurer of the society which aids Bro. Filian and will receive and forward all contributions. Please read the letters. Your friend and fellow servant, CHAS. A. BLANCHARD.

Wheaton College.

CONSTANTINOPLE, Turkey, Aug. 22, 1885.

DEAR SIR:—In the city of Constantinople there are three Armenian Evangelical churches, organized by the missionaries of the American Board, and all of them are without pastors, and in a very pitiful state. It is a sad fact to see that in an important city like Constantinople there are to be found only three churches, but it is still sadder when we know that one of them, which is called "Hasskoy church." has only two or three members, which virtually reduces the number of churches to two, namely the Pera and Valanga churches. The Pera church is also in a very miserable state, without pastor, without church building, and without church school, which is regarded as the nursery of the church in this country. As to our Valanga church, which by its position is the most important one, it likewise was destitute of pastoral care for some time. This church. although it felt long before the necessity of a pastor, did not succeed until recently in finding a proper person to occupy this position. But the church did not cease to persevere in its prayers and efforts to find a remedy for its pastorless state; and in this time, we believe by the guidance of Providence, it has found the proper pastor in the person of Rev. G. H. Filian, who was known to us by his practical merits during his pastorate in different places in this country, by his God-given endowments, his piety, his love of the work of God, his independence, in brief, the most proper person for our church and congregation; and trusting in the Lord and making some provision towards his salary according to its ability, the church has given him an unanimous call, and begged him, at least, to accept it for a year to cultivate this field, which is the most important one in the Turkish Empire.

Now with our deepest gratitude and joy we inform you, dear sir, that Rev. G. H. Filian accepted the call to become our pastor, and last Sunday the initiatory services were held, and he entered into his new pastorate. We believe that God will bless his labors, and, by the grace of God, he will be a means of the growth of our church in grace and love, and for the salvation of many immortal souls, and so you will see the abundant fruits of your self sacrifice and be so encuraged that you will send other Filians of whom our country has great need. Yours very respectfully, G. SENEKERIMSON, Clerk.

G. HAROUTOUNIAN, Deacon.

CONSTANTINOPLE, Dec. 28.

· · · For the present we could say with great joy and cheer that our hopes are in the way of realization, day by day increasing the numbers of our congregations, church members, prayer meetings and Sunday-schools, growing in brotherly love and grace. The care of the Lord's work is more enlarged in the minds and hearts of every individual. We feel more responsibility for the salvation of many immortal souls in this great city, for which we hope to be prepared bye and bye and to enlighten the whole country with Christian zeal and perseverance through the aid of the Lord. We are glad to have the presence of Mr. S. Minassian here among us, so that he may personally testify about our church and pastor, and about the work done by him.

It is not our intention now to make a report, only writing so far in brief, we deliver it to Mr. S. Minassian to forward to you. We hope to write you occasionally hereafter about the work of the Lord here. The average number in our preaching services at Sunday is 200 or more; Sunday-school, 70 or more; prayer meeting, 60; church members, 80, additions 2. We have a Young Men's Christian Association which has a series of lectures during the present winter, and they have been thus far well attended. Had we a suitable building for our services, the number of attendance would greatly increase.

Our people are extremely poor; specially at the present time. We are all of us thinking how to provide for our daily bread. In this our utmost poverty we are paying to our Pastor Filian about $28 a month. He needs at least $66 a month; so we hope and pray that your society will kindly continue to help us to make up the difference. We anxiously wait to hear from you upon this point. Yours very respectfully, G. SENEKERIMSON, Clerk.

BUSINESS.

WORDS OF CHEER.

The least that we do in the name of a disciple is rewarded, be it the cup of cold water to the thirsty or the sample Cynosure to the needy. Read the extracts below and "In the morning sow thy seed, and in the evening withhold not thy hand; for thou knowest not whether shall prosper, either this or that, or whether they both shall be alike good."

Rev. C. E. Walker writes: "I enclose 15 cents for four or five Cynosures to be sent to the names here given, and then as many as you can afford to, send to me to be distributed among my friends in different places. These samples dropped down occasionally do the work very often. I accidentally got hold of a Cynosure in 1879 and that led me to ask for a sample last winter, and now I want the Cynosure always while I live. So many other papers that I have taken and now take, I met a sample and then subscribed."

William C. Bissel writes: "After a long interval I have the joy to send you a new subscriber, just one. I say joy because we are to remember the figure 1 is an influential number. It may easily be made 10, a 100, a 1.000, or more. It only requires Christian patience, perseverance and "pluck" to accomplish it. I subscribed for it some three years ago at the repeated solicitation of a dear friend in Illinois. No other copy was taken in town or adjacent country. It opened my eyes to the evils of the whole lodge system as never before. What it did for me it might do for others. For this reason I have kept it going from house to house, in town and country. It has proved itself a remarkably good agent. Having put other copies into several families. These in turn are helping to hasten on the good work, and I do not hesitate to predict an increased circulation in the near future.'

N. Bourne writes: "If you hold on the world will come round after a spell."

The Cynosure for one year, $1.50. Six months, 75 cts. Eight numbers 25 cents; five sample copies (back numbers of different dates) to one address for ten cents.

For every new subscriber, for one year, received from now to the first of March, the person sending may order 30 cents worth of anti-secret books.

If you wish the benefits of the above offer, do not fail to send your order with the name of the subscriber, that errors may be avoided.

We prefer that remittances be made to us (when possible) by which can be obtained at any office of the American, United States, or Wells, Fargo & Co.'s Express Company, at the following rates: One cent to $5, for 5 cents; over $5 to $10, 8 cents; over $10 to $20, 10 cents. Where these companies have no offices, or if more convenient, remittances may be made by bank draft, postoffice order or registered letter. Do not send personal check unless 25 cents extra is added for collection. Always make payable to order of W. I. PHILLIPS, Chicago.

A Staggering Blow!

Such was to Freemasonry the great NATIONAL CONVENTION held in BATAVIA, N. Y., September 1882. It gave the world

Thurlow Weed's Great Letter

On the abduction and murder of WILLIAM MORGAN in 1826, which has been the most widely published of any Anti-masonic document. The dedication of a noble granite monument to the memory of Morgan, and the able and eloquent addresses of the Convention make this a most valuable pamphlet.

SEE WHY.

It contains—
1. Portrait of Morgan.
2. Portrait of Thurlow Weed.
3. Fine picture of the Monument
4. The great letter of Thurlow Weed and his affidavit—almost the last public act of his life.
5. Address by J. E. Roy, D.D.
6. The monument oration by Pres. C. A. Blanchard.
7. Addresses on "Christian Politics" by Pres. J. Blanchard, on the Character of Freemasonry by Prof. E. D. Bailey, on the "Freedmen and Secret Societies" by Rev. H. H. Hinman; and very interesting personal and historical reminiscences.

HOME AND HEALTH.

THE TREATMENT OF FROST-BITTEN FINGERS AND TOES.

Dr. Lapatin, in the Proceedings of the Caucasian Medical Society, advises that fingers and toes which have been slightly frost-bitten, and which subsequently suffer from burning, itching and pricking sensations, should be painted at once, and afterwards twice a day, with a mixture of dilute nitric acid and peppermint water in equal proportions. After this application has been made for three or four days, the skin becomes darkened and the epidermis is shed, healthy skin appearing under it. The cure is affected in from ten to fourteen days. The author has found this plan very effectual among soldiers, who were unable to wear their boots in consequence of having frozen feet. They were, in this way, soon rendered capable of returning to duty.—British Medical Journal.

INSOMNIA.—Many good physicians who used to prescribe bromide of soda or potassium for sleeplessness, now urge their patients to take beef tea instead. The writer, after trying various prescriptions with little benefit, was at length so fortunate as to receive such advice. At first beef tea was used with some light bread or biscuit broken into it, sipped from a spoon as warm as it could be taken. Afterwards, milk just scalded, not boiled, was substituted, and, to make it more easy of digestion a tablespoonful of lime-water was added to a half-tumbler of milk. To faciliate matters, a pocket-stove with an alcohol lamp, or an arrangement for the gas fixture should be at hand. If neither beef tea nor milk can be procured, hot water with an infusion of hops or mint may be substituted, or even hot water alone will quiet restlessness and induce sleep. A darkened room that the moonbeams cannot enter, a little fresh air from an open fireplace or window are valuable assistants in making the sleep continuous.

When once the habit of wakefulness is broken up the beef tea or milk may be taken cold, but not iced. If you are always a poor sleeper, it will be well to continue this late supper as a permanent thing in your daily life.

Provide for it in the case of aged or delicate persons who may be under your roof; and as the troubles of life appear more weighty when scanned in the midnight hours, you may be able to lighten the load for the rest of their journey.—Christian Union.

HOW TO SLEEP WELL.—In sleeping much depends upon securing a comfortable position. Lying on the back would seem to give the most ease, but general experience and practice prove that it does not, and is liable to some definite objections. In a weekly state of the heart and the blood-vessels, and in certain morbid conditions of the brain, the blood seems to gravitate to the back of the head, and to produce dreams. Persons who have contracted chests, and who have pleurisy and adhesions of the lungs, do not sleep well on the back. Nearly all who are inclined to snore do so in that position. For these and other reasons, it is, therefore, better to lie on the side, and in lung disease to lie on the weak side, so as to leave the healthy lung free to expand. It is well to choose the right side, because, when the body is thus placed, the food gravitates more easily out of the stomach into the intestines. Sleeping with the arm thrown over the head is to be deprecated; but this position is often assumed during sleep, because circulation is then free in the extremities and the head and neck, and the muscles in the chest are drawn up and fixed by the shoulders, and thus expansion of the throat is easy. The chief objections to this are that it creates a tendency to cramp and cold in the arms, and sometimes seems to cause headaches and dreams. The best sleep is obtained when the shutsers are closed so as to make the room dark, and the windows are adjusted so as to admit plenty of fresh air. Early rising is not a virtue unless the riser has secured sleep enough; and the best rising is obtained when the sleeper awakes naturally.

IN THE COILS;
— OR —
The Coming Conflict.

A NEW AND STRANGE STORY BASED ON STARTLING FACTS, VIVIDLY PORTRAYING A MYSTERIOUS AND DANGEROUS POWER AT WORK IN THE GOVERNMENT, THE CHURCH, AND THE HOME.

"All will agree that this is a powerfully written story."—Evangelist, (Chicago, Ills.)

"A book which we trust may have a wide circulation."—National Baptist, (Philadelphia.)

"So intensely interesting did I find it that it was hard to pause until the last sentence was read. This work places the author high among the writers of fiction."—W. W. Barr, D. D. in Christian Instructor, (Philadelphia.)

"Unless we are greatly mistaken, the work will do more to awaken the American church and people to the evils of Freemasonry than any other book recently published."—Evangelical Repository.

"The book will create a sensation in Masonic circles, and evoke criticism of a most relentless character. The courage of the author in attacking such a rock-rooted bulwark as Freemasonry is something to admire, Fanatic though he be."—Nebraska Watchman.

"Light is needed on this subject and needed badly, and we welcome this contribution to the literature of anti-secretism, and cordially commend it to the favorable attention of our readers."—United Presbyterian, (Pittsburgh.)

"A charming work, fit to be classed with 'Uncle Tom's Cabin;' it is indeed less a work of fiction. The volume is as valuable as a work of reference as it is agreeable, truthful and useful. Our young folks will not leave the book, if they begin it, till they 'see how it turns out.'"—Cynosure, (Chicago, Ills.)

Wonderful Woman,
A Wonderful Life,
AND
A Wonderful Book.

Laura S. Haviland is a quiet, gentle, unassuming Quaker woman, 76 years of age, yet vigorous, who has had a remarkable career of usefulness, and has now given to the world a remarkable history of her "Life Work" as a teacher, at an early day, of the colored refugees in Canada and in Michigan, and in other States, as a traveler down South in the guise of a "berry picker," helping out into freedom many slaves; as a nurse and preacher to the sufferers in hospitals during the war; and with Gov. St. John and Elizabeth Comstock, relieving the destitute and suffering refugees in Kansas, etc.

Her book is neither fiction nor founded on fiction, but is an interesting narration of facts of a most thrilling character, as every one will find and testify who will get and read her book, now on sale at the Cynosure office, 221 W. Madison St., Chicago, Ill. Price, cloth, $1,75, half Russia, $2.25.

IN BRIEF.

419 of the 500 members of the House of Lords own in the aggregate 15,000 acres of land from which they derive a revenue equivalent to $5 per acre. The members of the Senate in the United States are said to be worth, in property, railway and bank stocks, etc., three times as much as the members of the House of Lords. Republican institutions must offer facilities for the acquisition of wealth unknown to the older and more conservative communities.

The keen eye-sight of savages and semi-barbarians has frequently been noticed by travellers, but we have never yet understood why civilization which strengthens our mental vision, should tend to diminish our natural sight. An American traveller who recently visited Zululand, states that upon looking through a field glass, he observed at a great distance two figures which appeared to him to be those of a man upon horseback accompanied by a companion on foot. Much to his surprise several natives standing near, perceived the figures without the aid of the glass, recognizing the features to be those of a man and woman well known in the locality. The story is vouched for, but perhaps there may be some who cannot see it.

The number of employes required in the customs service during the next fiscal year is estimated at 4,026, and the total expenses of collection at $6,501,583. The persons employed during the year ended June 30, 1885, numbered 4,527 and the expense of collection was $6,918,221.

There is a natural bridge near the boundary line between Arizona and New Mexico, 20 miles north of the Atlantic & Pacific railroad, which surpasses, in every way, it is said, the famous one in Virginia.

The force of a small body falling from a distance is illustrated in the case of a shot dropped from the dome of the State capitol at Des Moines, Iowa, which made a clean, neat hole through the inch-thick glass floor of the rotunda. A heavy muff, accidently dropped from the same elevation is said to have made a noise which was heard all over the building, many persons supposing a gun had been fired.

The strongest wood in America, according to Prof. Sargent, is that of the nutmeg hickory of the Arkansas region, and the weakest the West Indian birch. The most elastic is the tamarack, the white or shell-bark hickory standing far below it. The least elastic and the lowest in specific gravity is the wood of the Ficus aurea. The highest specific gravity, upon which in general depends value as fuel, is attained by the bluewood of Texas,

The mining experts sent out by the Pennsylvania Railroad company, have found a vein of coal extending through the mountains at White Oaks, New Mexico, about 140 miles northeast of El Paso, in Texas. The vein averages six feet in thickness and is clear of shale. The quality is very superior, equal to anthracite in heating properties. Large deposits of beautiful black marble have also been discovered in the same vicinity, the vein exceeding twenty feet in thickness. Eastern capitalists are contemplating the building of a railroad from White Oaks to El Paso, where these minerals will find an outlet by six routes.

Bisulphide of Carbon, M. Pasteur thinks, will become the most efficacious of all antiseptics, as it is also the cheapest, costing but a fraction of a penny per pound in large quantity. It is likewise the best insecticide known, and for this purpose may, it is thought, be useful for preserving woodwork in tropical countries. Some idea of the use it is already put to may be gathered from the fact, as stated, that more than eight million pounds are used annually to check the ravages of phylloxera. Carbon bisulphide, as produced, though an extremely offensive compound in respect to odor, is capable of complete purification.

ALL-NIGHT INHALATION!

"A positive revolution in the treatment of Air-Passage Diseases of the Nose, Throat, and Lungs, and, for the purpose designed, as valuable a discovery as vaccination."

THE PILLOW-INHALER.

A Speedy, Positive and Permanent Cure for Catarrh, Bronchitis, Asthma, and Incipient Consumption.

It is a hair pillow, with reservoirs of evaporating liquid, the fumes or vapor of which is inhaled all night long, whilst sleeping as usual, and without any discomfort. It is used only at night, and is perfectly safe to the most delicate. There is no stomach-dosing, douching or snuffing; but just as a smoky lamp will leave a deposit on a whitened wall so the PILLOW-INHALER, for say eight hours at a time, spreads a powerful healing balm or salve on the inflamed inner coating of the diseased air-surfaces, from the nostrils to the bottom of the lungs, and hence into the blood. Old-fashioned inhalation, through a tube, for a few minutes a day, sometimes cured. Think of eight hours constant action, on the same principle, but intensified a hundred-fold! There are no pipes or tubes. The medicine is breathed in, not swallowed, and goes right to the diseased parts.

CATARRH. BRONCHITIS. CONSUMPTION.

HON. E. L. HEDDEN, Collector of the Port of New York, says: "I take pleasure in stating that the PILLOW-INHALER has been of the greatest relief, and I believe of permanent benefit, to my wife, who has been a great sufferer from Bronchial and Catarrhal Troubles, accompanied with distressing Asthma. I recommend its use to all persons afflicted with such maladies."
E. L. HEDDEN, 38 West 49th St., New York.

MR. H. G. TEELE, 50 Bryan Block, Chicago, Ill., says: "I suffered fifteen years from a severe case of Catarrh; coughed incessantly day and night. I bought a PILLOW-INHALER, and since using it my cough is gone; my lungs are no longer weak and sore, and I am in better health than I have been for years."

During the six years of its existence the PILLOW-INHALER has wrought cures of Catarrh, Bronchitis, Asthma, and Consumption, that have been more like miracles than the usual treatment of disease. It is not expensive, and is within the reach of every one. Send for Explanatory Pamphlet and Testimonials, or call.

NEWS OF THE WEEK.

WASHINGTON.

In the Senate Mr. Ingalls presented a a petition of Frederick Douglass and other leading colored citizens of the District of Columbia, complaining against discriminations against them at theaters and other places of public entertainment in the city of Washington, and praying that the license laws of the District of Columbia be so amended as to prevent such discrimination.

The Democratic Senators have decided to sustain the President in his attitude toward the Senate, in relation to showing the papers in suspended cases, nothwithstanding that he snubbed them at the White House, when a caucus committee waited upon him. Republican Senators are particularly anxious to consider executive business in open session, in order to place the Democrats on record in their support of the President's stand against the Senate.

Mrs. Bayard, wife of the Secretary of State, died Sunday morning. She has long been an invalid and depended upon her daughter Katherine in her social and domestic matters. The sudden death of this daughter two weeks ago she could not realize, but about a week ago broke down, and her convulsions of grief resulted in brain fever. It is reported that Secretary Bayard will resign.

The House Committee on Military Affairs report the bill for the erection of a monument in New York city to the memory of General Grant. The bill appropriates $500,000 for the purpose of erecting the monument on ground donated by the city.

COUNTRY.

The biennial directory of American millers and mill furnishers shows a total of 18 267 flour-mills in America, a net decrease of 6 812 compared with 1884. The gross capacity of the mills is slightly increased over 1884; showing that a number of small concerns have either gone to the wall in the last two years or been consolidated with larger companies. A numerical loss is reported in nearly every State, Territory and Province.

The Supreme Court of Illinois confirms the sentence of a burglar to fourteen years in the penitentiary under the habitual criminal act. The decision sustains the constitutionality of the act.

A spark from a miner's lamp ignited a keg of powder which a companion was carrying under his arm, in a coal shaft near Springfield, Ill., Thursday morning. The explosion shockingly mangled both men.

The proselyting work of two Mormon polygamists, at Walhalla, S. C., has caused much excitement, it being reported that fifty converts are ready to proceed to Utah. The young men of the district have organized, and warned the Mormons to quit.

The Knights of Labor, at Galveston, Texas, have issued an order again boycotting the Mallory Steamship Company. The first boycott was in November last. The difficulty originally arose from the substitution of colored for white 'longshoremen on the Mallory wharf here because the white 'longshoremen demanded an increase of wages and struck.

After a two hours' fight with Indians, Jan. 11, at East Nocori, in Sonora, Mexico, the American force, under Captain Crawford, was fired on by Mexican troops, American scouts returning the fire. Five of the American party were wounded, among them Captain Crawford, who died several days later, while the Mexican loss was four killed and five wounded. The Mexicans claim that they mistook the Americans for Indians, but Lieutenant Maus gives it as his opinion that the Mexicans intended to rout the Americans and appropriate their camp equipage and commissary stores.

Freeman Clark, a negro, who was born in Virginia in 1764 died Tuesday night at Windsor, Ont., being over 121 years old.

A number of negroes from Greenville, S. C., are said to be forcibly detained at the turpentine manufacturies of Briddick & Bridges, in Montgomery county, Georgia, where they can earn but 15 cents per day. Some of the men tried to escape, but were pursued by an armed band and compelled to return.

While Professor Jones was delivering a scientific lecture in the Presbyterian church at Marshfield, Wis., Saturday evening, a certain compound burst into flames, resulting in the destruction of the edifice. The building was fully covered by insurance, but it is a question if the origin of the fire does not invalidate the risks.

United States Judge Love rendered a decision Monday at Keokuk, sustaining the constitutionality of the prohibitory law, and giving the State courts full powers. In the case of breweries erected before the passage of the act, it is set forth that proceedings shall be by condemnation.

FOREIGN.

The Union Bridge Works, of Buffalo, N. Y., and Athens, Pa., has been awarded a contract by the New South Wales Government for a bridge a mile in length over the Hawksberry river, near Sydney. The bid was in excess of $1,000,000.

Two thousand striking employes at one of the iron mills in Dreaseville, Department of Aveyron, attacked the house of the manager of the works, broke open the door, entered the building, seized the manager and threw him out of the window. He was then trampled to death by the angry crowd. Troops were sent to quell the disorder, and several rioters were killed and wounded. The trouble arose from a questian of wages.

Lord Salisbury and his party was defeated last Tuesday in Parliament by a vote of 329 to 250, on an amendment to the Queen's address at the opening of the session. The Queen expressed her regret at the attempt to excite the people of Ireland to hostility against the legislative union with England, and added: "I am resolutely opposed to any disturbance of that fundamental law." This declaration was a notice to the Irish party that they could expect nothing from the conservatives. They, therefore, supported the amendment offered by Mr. Collings, which expressed regret that no measures are announced in the Queen's speech for the relief of the sufferers by the depression in trade and agriculture, particularly in regard to affording facilities to farm laborers, etc., for obtaining allotments of small holdings on equitable terms as to rent and security of tenure. Gladstone strongly supported the amendment. The resignation of the Salisbury Government was announced Thursday. The Queen wished to call upon Lord Hartington to form a new Cabinet. He was announced as successor of Mr. Gladstone when the latter resigned the leadership of the Liberal party in 1875. But the impossibility of the attempt was evident and Gladstone was again called to the front. It is believed he will be able to harmonize all classes of the liberal party and satisfy the Home Rule party with substantial relief for Ireland.

A treaty of peace between France and Madagascar has been signed, the latter paying $2,000,000 for a release of all foreign claims against Madagascar.

It is rumored that King George, of Greece, has grown so weary of political strife that he is likely to abdicate. THROAT WEAKNESS.

Clergymen, Teachers, Singers, Lawyers, Public Speakers, and all who have occasion to use their vocal powers more than ordinarily, will find the little treatise entitled "CHRONIC SORE THROAT" very useful. If those who are troubled with hoarseness after speaking or singing will read this book any follow its instructions they will he greatly benefited and relieved. Dr. Shuldham, of England, the author, has himself a reputation as an elocutionist of no mean powers, and he writes on the human vocal economy with the double experience of the physician and reader; especially is this experience noticeable in the Chapter on THE ART OF BREATHING, for it is on the proper modes of inspiration and expiration that the whole secret of managing the voice without causing any undue strain to the throat organs depends. Nor can we speak less emphatically in praise of the Chapter on THE HYGIENE OF THE VOICE, in which Dr. Shuldham lays down what in the way of solids and fluids a public speaker or singer should take, so as to avoid on the one hand throat irritation, and on the other any derangement of the stomach, which must react unfavorably on the whole system.

"Dr. Shuldham has given information and suggestions which will be of priceless value to every public speaker."—Interior. "The chapter on the art of breathing, the inspiration and expiration, without unduly straining the throat and vocal cords will be found a good study for all public speakers."—Inter Ocean.

Miss Cleveland is beginning to make good the expectations of her American sisters, who have been nearly a year hoping to see her principles prevailing in the White House. The public is now notified that smoking is prohibited in the executive mansion. Let us hope the liquor will follow the tobacco. The first public dinner given by Mr. Cleveland was spread a few days ago in honor of his Cabinet; and this beginning was badly made with seven kinds of wine.

Senator Colquitt keeps his word. He wished to retire from public life, but took up the burden again in order to carry prohibition against the dram-shop. He is ready to introduce this week a bill establishing local option in the District of Columbia. The bill is said to be sweeping and strong, excepting neither the President's mansion nor the negro hovel, state dinners nor bar-room carousals. The importation and manufacture of liquor are included with the sale. Foreign delegations will have a strong taste of American principles if this bill passes, or else they will have to live in the suburbs, along with the liquor den and its victims. Senator Blair, of New Hampshire, has been almost alone in his battle for temperance, but he has now a valiant man beside him.

Dr. A. E. Kittredge is pastor of the largest Presbyterian church in Chicago, and one of the strongest in the country, and will have a stalwart backing in a suit for libel just brought against him by a police justice. This justice, Meech, let off 220 gamblers captured cleverly by the police at one haul a few days since. Instead of charging them with gambling, and proportioning their bail to the heavy fine for that offense, they were booked as disorderly with a $1 fine, which the keeper of the gaming house paid. This collusion with crime Mr. Kittredge arraigned in fitting terms in a sermon, just as the daily press had done before and has since; hence the suit. If Meech holds his ground and prosecutes, there is likely to be a case full of revelations and sensations. The corruption of our city council and lower courts has long been a stench, but the opportunity to lay it bare, and so give the people a chance to vote it out, has seldom appeared. Many are hoping that this may be a God-send to Chicago.

Chinese eviction riots broke out in Seattle, Washington Territory last Sabbath that threatened to end in a severe conflict with the authorities. When the foreigners were driven out of Tacoma, preparations were made at Seattle to follow suit, but the presence of troops was a temporary check. But under the cloak of a sanitary examination by a committee appointed at a meeting of citizens, a mob broke into the Chinese dwellings, loaded their effects upon drays and drove Chinamen and chattels to the wharf, where nearly a hundred were put on board a steamer ready to start across the Pacific. The captain rallied his crew and kept off all whose fare was not paid, the mob "passing the hat" for this purpose. He rigged his hose to throw streams of hot water upon the mob if they persisted in putting any more on board. The local police sympathized with the mob, and not till the whole Chinese population of the city had been driven to the docks did the mayor of Seattle or the governor of the Territory rouse themselves to send for troops. When these arrive, what shall be done? It is evident that the plan of eviction was well arranged, and secretly. [The Knights of Labor are understood to head the movement.] But the Chinese are all laborers and among the best on the coast, yet these mis-named Knights are making cowardly war on these men.

The adjournment of Parliament till the 18th inst., to allow the members who have accepted office under the new administration to be re-elected to the Commons, gives England and the world—for what nation is not interested in the government of Great Britain—a brief space for reconsideration. The universal confidence in Gladstone returns in strength, and there are no more prophecies of a brief administration. Gladstone is himself a candidate for re-election from the Scotch district of Midlothian, where a few years since he made so renowned a canvass against the foreign policy of Beaconsfield. In his address to the voters he says there are three questions concerning Ireland which demand the attention of Parliament—the question of social order, the question of land reform, and the question of self-government. The desire for self-goverment, he says, must necessarily be subject to the law of imperial unity. The government hopes to find a safer and more effectual method than coercion to remedy the social troubles. The address is interpreted to mean that the Irish questions will be taken up in the order named, and the frankness and confidence of the chief in making his platform has raised the confidence of all parties. But one sentence from the address must be quoted, since it reveals the spring of Gladstone's policy for years: "Although the difficulties of the task make it impossible to anticipate success with confidence, we shall draw comfort from the knowledge that we are engaged in a great work of peace." A noble sentence and worthy to stand as a memorial of the greatest statesman of the age.

CO-OPERATIVE INSURANCE.

BY J. W. WOOD.

We have in Wisconsin an officer known as the Commissioner of insurance, whose duty it is to look after the interests of the people of the State as affected by insurance matters. The Governor alluded to it in his last message, and among other things he says, "The laws relating to insurance seem to work great good in protecting the people from the transactions of fraudulent companies and tends to add to the business of the solvent companies that cannot afford to do business at a losing rate."

At the same time there are insurance interests aggregating more than fifty million of dollars which are by special act of the legislature removed from under the jurisdiction of this Commissioner, who is set to guard the interest of the people "from the operations of fraudulent companies."

A large majority of these excepted companies are run by secret societies, and involve only their own membership. Some of them are run independent of secret societies, and aim to do a general business. Their agents are busy everywhere, and, judging from their reports, meet with very great success.

As a system of insurance these co-operative companies are of universal application and are available to all classes of citizens without distinction of creed, race or color; so that I want it to be distinctly understood that I eliminate from this paper all other questions, moral or social, and confine myself entirely to the necessary principles of co-operative life insurance. I shall use some of the statistics of the United Workmen for illustration, because they were given to me by a friend who belongs to that order.

There is hardly anything in our present civilization which takes a more important hold upon the business interests of our country than this matter of insurance. It permeates our whole commercial fabric. The stored up capital of the insurance companies becomes a fund, available for the equalization of the losses of society, from all the more imminent dangers which threaten such losses. The damages which may occur from fire, flood, storms, lightning and accident in almost any form, are guarded against; and the benefits are almost untold which are derived from the security which this gives to business interests. So far-reaching has this business become that insurance may be said to lie at the bottom of all sound commercial or manufacturing transactions.

A knowledge of the reliability of companies is so difficult to obtain by private individuals, that the law has wisely interposed, compelling the fullest statements of the standing of each company proposing to do business in this State. These statements are submitted to our State Commissioner who is supposed to be competent to verify these and so "guard the people from the operation of fraudulent companies."

There is another branch of insurance—life insurance—which appeals to us in a different form from the commercial, for its aim is to make provision for dependent ones after the heart is still which beats for them in life, and the arms are perished which have labored for them with such willingness. By this form of insurance we can project ourselves beyond the natural period of our lives, in order to shelter and protect our dear ones, and to provide for the necessary burdens attendant upon sickness and death. Why this branch of insurance should be, to such an extent, deliberately withdrawn from the censorship of our State Commissioner is one of those inscrutable things which sometimes happen in our State legislation.

There is this radical difference between the two systems of insurance, for in a thousand risks of fire assumed on the one side, possibly not more than a score of them will ever mature, and in a thousand risks of tornado, possibly the tornado will never come; but in life insurance every risk taken will, if kept up, in due time have to be paid.

Here, too, it would seem proper in an eminent degree that the law should step in to protect the helpless, for the risk is not due until the principal party to the transaction is laid where he can no longer assist the living. If State protection could properly be invoked at any point along the whole line of insurance, this would seem to be the very point and place of its most important application.

The public attention has been strongly directed for a few years past to what is presented as a new system of life insurance which appears under a great variety of names; such as, Mutual Aids, Reliefs, Benefits, Protections, Unions, Societies, Councils, Courts, Arcanums, Knights, etc. Many of them are run as adjuncts to the leading secret societies, and some of them are run directly, making co-operative insurance their leading object. The term co-operative is the best descriptive term applied to them. The methods of all of them are essentially alike. It consists in levying assessments upon the surviving members of the body in case of the death of one of their number. They are spreading rapidly and are involving such immense interests that it becomes important to look into them and see if they are likely to perform the great obligations assumed.

To look at the subject we will take the case of the ANCIENT ORDER OF UNITED WORKMEN.

This society has now in Wisconsin six thousand or more members, each one of which expects in case of death that his widow or heirs will receive $2,000. The average age of the class is about thirty-five years. We will assume that sixty-five years is the average life of men who have once reached maturity, which will give an average continuance of life of thirty years from the time of joining the society. These figures are approximately correct: near enough to enable us to discuss the principles involved.

Now, in fact, the death rate of such a class of selected men will not be uniform through the thirty years. There will be far fewer deaths in the first ten years than there will be in the third ten years, but in the thirty years they are all to die. This fact, of the present death rate being small, with the consequent light assessments, is the all-prevailing argument in favor of this method of life insurance; men seem to be oblivious to the fact that a small death rate at first must be followed by a correspondingly great one in the end.

To reduce this matter to a reliable business basis, we will suppose the death rate to be uniform. That 200 of this number, which is one-thirtieth of the whole, die each year, and that their places are promptly filled by suitable additions. This will test the principle correctly, for any change in the total number of the class will increase or decrease its ultimate responsibility as the case may be. While increasing in numbers, the order will have a source of revenue, but these are intended to meet the running expenses and do not need to be considered.

In accordance with the established mortuary tables, in thirty years the order will be overtaken by the deaths of its 6,000 original members, and this will require the payment of twelve millions of dollars. This would be an average payment of $400,000 per year, or of $66.66 annually from each member. But, says an objector, the facts are against you, for our payments so far have been but fourteen dollars per year.

This is doubtless true, but it only indicates that the death rate has not yet reached its necessary average. At this rate of payment of fourteen dollars per year there will be raised in thirty years two million five hundred and twenty thousand dollars. The liabilities will be twelve million of dollars, leaving a deficiency of nine million four hundred and eighty thousand dollars.

This shows that the present rate of payment is totally inadequate to meet the responsibilities assumed and must end in the great disappointment of those who pay the longest and depend the most upon the insurance hoped for.

Look at it again. To pay this twelve million dollars at the rate of fourteen dollars per annum from each member, would require 142 years, which added to the thirty-five years average age on the start would make the average age of the class at death 177 years, in which case we could see clearly where the title of "ancient" would come in. There is no sound business man who can expect something to come from nothing. Money cannot be paid out, until it is first collected. When men have invented perpetual motion, or have learned to lift themselves over fences by their boot-straps, then they may hope to get something, for nothing and not until then.

One of the strangest aspects of this case is, the stubbornness with which men, trusting to this method of insurance, refuse to look the thing squarely in the face, and apply to it the business principles which govern them in all of their other dealings. The results which I have indicated grow out of the legitimate and honest management of the business when the officers work without salary and furnish their own offices. There is probably as much temptation to fraud in the management of this insurance business as in the management of any other.

In my supposition that 200 die annually, I have reduced the thing to a uniform rate, on which basis alone it can be run with ordinary business safety. In the course of time it will necessarily reach this ratio of deaths. If at any time it falls short of this, it is at the expense of some future day of correspondingly increased ratio. The longer the time that passes the more imminent are our deaths. If the first assessment was laid at the average of sixty-six dollars, sixty-six cents, which is the lowest possible annual payment which can give the thing a business basis, there is probably no man who would join it on these terms.

In my dealing with the matter so far I have given the society all the benefit of the doubts. I will continue to do so.

We will now suppose that these deaths always occur among the oldest members of the class, and that two hundred die annually at the greatest possible age, which for the first year would be fifty-one years, fifty years being the most advanced age of memberships. This would give a loss of 10,200 years to the order. Two hundred new recruits at the average age of thirty-five years, would introduce 7,000 years. The remainder of the class, 5,800, would have advanced each a year, leaving a balance of age against the class of 2,600 years. So the class is advancing in age as a whole and this points to overwhelming ruin in the end. Younger men can be trusted for preferring to join younger classes where the risks are not so decidedly against them.

By calculations based on the mortuary figures given, it is readily shown that no man dying after the decease of the first set of members composing the class can receive his $2,000 at death without having first paid the same amount in thirty successive installments of over $66 each, the first having been paid thirty years before and annually thereafter, and the sum of these payments reckoned at simple interest will aggregate $5,000. If any one does better than this, it will be at the expense of some one who does worse. I cannot but conclude that these co-operative associations must of necessity be short lived, and only those members who die reasonably soon can hope to have their death losses paid.

There is a startling fact connected with these associations. I have talked with a good many of their members, and I have yet to find the man who would pay the annual payments necessary to give the thing a permanent business basis. They say with the utmost cheerfulness that when their assessments become burdensome they will throw the thing up. About twenty dollars per annum is all they propose to stand. So the whole thing is based on sand. Men do not seem to realize that in this proposition to play false to others, they do but indicate the positions in which others stand to them. It is a vast combination of men whose only bond of union seems to be a common desire to profit at each other's expense. The man who dies first is the lucky fellow; the man who dies last has lost all that he has ever paid, and his surviving friends will no doubt curse the folly which led him into such a fruitless business.

While the death rate is small and men deem it policy to pay their assessments, the occasional risks which mature and are promptly paid, are taken as a fair measure of the society's ability and are triumphantly appealed to as indicating the soundness of the system, while, in fact, they are the baits which entice others into the trap.

I think that it lies safely within the scope of legislative action to place this system of insurance under the jurisdiction of the the insurance commissioners, and that such action would be eminently proper and calculated to subserve the highest interests of the community.

WEEK-DAY SERMON.

BY E. E. FLAGG.

The revelations of the astronomer have their depressing side to thoughtful minds. It must have had some such effect on David. "When I consider the heavens, the work of thy fingers, the moon and stars which thou hast ordained; what is man that thou art mindful of him? and the son of man, that thou visitest him?" Pigmy inhabitant of a pigmy world, worm of the dust, born to sorrow and trouble, and certain heir to but one sure possession on earth—a sepulchre! No wonder that when we read how the Paris observatory has lately photographed a portion of the sky and calculated the number of stars visible to the fourteenth magnitude inclusive, as over twenty millions, the most positive feeling we have is a crushing sense of our own insignificance.

But there is another side to the thought. These twenty million suns with their attendant satellites, are but the veriest fraction of the grand whole, the sum of which is only known to him who "takes account of tangled star-dust." Can we have a plainer commentary on that most sweetly hopeful and suggestive clause in Christ's parable of the wedding feast, "And yet there is room," than this luminous text written by their Creator's own fingers on the night heavens?

Some are born into a large place, with no cramping lack of opportunity, no visible hindrance in the way of their freest and fullest development. But this is not the case with the larger part of mankind. Many of the rarest souls on earth have been shut up in the straitest places. And then do there not come moments to us all when the pressure of daily care and all the petty burdens and annoyances of life so weigh upon our souls, clogging our spiritual lungs as it were till we can scarcely breathe, that we pant for a sense of boundless room; for wide and free horizons? And there is much philosophy as well as religion in Toaber's counsel at such times:

"Keep quietly to God and think Upon the Eternal Years."

A truly great thought is always restful. The sweetest promises on which weary souls have from time immemorial pillowed their heads, are the sublimest; and to think of God's eternity may well be like Almighty arms folding us forever in a safe and sure refuge. But there are eternities of space as well as of time, and to look out of the narrow loop-holes or life's daily round for a moment, and realize the infinite vastness above us is a cure for impatience and restlessness. I don't know that Brother A. who, while he works at a manual trade, sometimes sighs in secret over his youthful dreams of the ministry, or Sister B. who patiently put aside, at the call of nearer duties, her views of going to heathen lands as a missionary, are greatly to be pitied. I know that what has happened is the best for them; yet for all that I like to think what a vast amount of unoccupied room there must be in heaven, for the energy that here so often seems to run in waste channels. How do we know what fields for missionary enterprise may open before their rejoicing souls on some distant planet, when they have fulfilled their earthly discipline, and learned the hardest of all lessons—to stand and wait, while others, given the opportunity denied to them, go in and reap the harvest.

AND YET THERE IS ROOM. Let the sceptic sneer. Nature and Revelation are at one.

EVEN FOR ME.

"She that tarrieth at home divideth the spoils."

And can it he
In the world's harvest field some sheaves for me?
Some guerdon when the heavy task is done?
Some trophy in the hard fought battle won?

The fields are white to harvest; all along
The sunlight paths I hear the reapers' song,
As forth to toil of sweet reward they go.
Is this my work? The Master answers, "No,
For other labor thine, and yet to thee
Some precious tasks I give for them and me,
Send them refreshments 'mid the noontide heat;
The cool o'erflowing cup, the morsel sweet,
That shall give strength and courage all the day;
Sing thou thy songs to cheer them by the way;
And so thou, too, when evening rest shall come,
Mays't share the joy of the glad Harvest Home."

The Lord would build his temple year by year,
His workmen toil the massive pile to rear;
And even now our wondering eyes behold
The walls uprising toward the domes of gold,
Ere long to crown the summit flashing bright
O'er all the earth the glory of his light.
How can I help? I have no offering
Of marble fair, or costly wood to bring;
I may not place one stone, nor to the face
Of carved cherub add one touch of grace;
I cannot set the gems, nor lay the gold,
But the rich 'broidery on the curtain's fold,
Some little part of this my hand may trace,
And so my love find in this work a place.

The trumpet sounds. The hosts are marshaling
For the great conflict, and our conquering King
Calls all to warfare. Let me hasten, Lord,
To meet the foe—not so the Captain's word.
"Thou must abide at home, on guard remain;
There at thy post of service, thou may'st gain
The sure reward; but do not thou forget
Whom in the front of battle I have set,
Give sympathy, send help and loving care,
Watch for the victory, watch with earnest prayer,
Hold up the prophet's hands, and when shall flee
The foe, defeated and despoiled, then she
At home who tarried shall the triumph share."

DR. CROSBY ON WEALTH.

To the Editor of the Sun:

Sir.—You quoted lately a passage from an article of mine en overwealth, and invited me to explain my views. They are simply these:

1. Dangers to the peace and prosperity of the country must be guarded against by the government and laws.

2. Men and corporations, so large pecuniarily as to be able to buy up legislatures, are a danger to the peace and prosperity of the country.

3. The acquisition and holding of such wealth should be carefully hedged about by wise legislation.

There is my syllogism. Now let me add a few notes:

1. A large part of the enormous wealth of individuals and corporations is made by lying, stealing and oppression. The running up and down of stocks what is known as "bulling and bearing," is practical lying, and has nothing to do with real values. Stock-watering is nothing but stealing. Credit Mobilier schemes, by which directors rob stockholders to enrich themselves, are common methods of oppressing the poor who have been fooled into putting their little all into stock.

2. The rich man is protected by law, and what with preferred creditors, and property held in his wife's name, and a hundred other devices, he fails and is as rich as ever. The poor man is thrown out of employment, and has nothing to fall back on. He can be turned out at a moment's notice, and has no redress.

3. We need legislation that will defend the poor; e. g., making a month's notice necessary before discharging a hand, paying him by the year as a salaried man, and giving him a proportional interest in the concern.

4. We need legislation that will make the man, as he grows richer, to bear more of the public burdens. The graduated income tax would be the most equitatable. If that be impracticable, as many hold, then let the nearest practicable plan be adopted, so that with us, as in ancient Athens, the rich shall bear the chief burdens of the state.

5. We need legislation to restrict the power of corporations, forbidding and preventing gifts direct or indirect, all watering, all use of franchises without full payment of value to the state, all interest of directors in side schemes of a parasitic nature, all secrecy of operation, all combinations with other corporations, and all exorbitant dividends at the cost of the public.

6. With such legislation there need be no limitation of property. Justice, equal to all, will give trade and acquisition a natural health, which is now denied by a partial legislation in favor of the rich and of the great corporations. With such legislation property will be naturally limited, and there will be no place for discontent or socialism.

7. If we saw a man a mile high stalking over this way from the west, and discovered that he had already trampled eight or ten towns into nothingness, we should feel called upon to take measures to suppresshim before he could put his big foot on the Sun building and blot out its light forever. He would be a danger which we would be justified in preparing against. Our great corporations are very much like this giant. They crush thousands where they tread. They hire journals, courts, and legislatures, and have everything their own way. It is for the people of our land so to curb this power that it may be only useful and not harmful. If this be socialism, I am a Socialist. HOWARD CROSBY.

LANDLORDISM IN AMERICA.

The North American Review recently sent out a commissioner to investigate this question in the Western States, and his report will surprise a great many people. He points out that with the possession of an apparently unlimited field for settlement the United States have paid no attention to the system of their land-tenure. Each State has regulated this matter for itself with the result that capitalists have bit by bit secured large quantities of land, and then, controlling legislation, have made themselves secure. "Probably the history of constitutional government does not furnish a more one-sided scheme of legislation than the landlord and tenant laws thus manufactured in the Western States. They are implements for extracting rent, as simple, terrible, aud brutally candid in their design as a revolver in the hands of a peremptory road-agent. At any rate, they have resulted in fixing on the free soil of the United States a land system that belongs to the ages of barbarism." These are startling sayings, but the investigator proceeds to show what he has discovered in support of them. The census of 1880 shows that there were 1,024,601 farms rented by tenants in the United States, and a moderate calculation for the intervening years gives 1,250,000 for the present day. In the whole of Great Britain and Ireland, where landlord and tenant is the normal condition of the agricultural interest, there are only 1,069,127, or nearly a quarter of a million less than the numbers in the United States, which has more than three times as many as in England and Wales combined, and more than twice as many as in Ireland. In Illinois alone, with less population than Scotland, there are 20,000 more tenant farmers. This census shows that of the 7,670,493 persons engaged in agriculture in the United States, only 2,984,306 are registered as owners of their holdings, the remainder being tenants paying rents, and agricultural laborers. France, with twelve millions less population, has 5,000,000 small rural proprietors. At the same time the ratio of working proprietors in France is increasing, while it is diminishing in the United States. The meaning of these facts is intensified by remembering the enormous acreage held by bonanza farmers, stock-raisers and others holding large tracts of land. Beyond this is the fact that, of the numbers of small farmers holding land in their own names, only a small proportion are free from debt, the majority of farms being under mortgage. "Every other 'owner' you meet both East and West, is struggling to pay the interest on his mortgage, and seldom seems hopeful of lessening the principal. The grip of the money-lender is fast on the American farmer. His gilt legend 'loans' strikes the eye with too significant frequency in every Western town." In all the principal Western towns there are publications specially devoted to advertising improved farms for sale. The Review's Commissioner then gives a description of the way in which the public domain has been alienated, the methods by which the capitalists have secured the land, and refers to the wholesale frauds that have been committed, and evasions of the law practiccd, which have recently been so animadverted upon by the United States Land Commission under President Cleveland's regime.

The Commissioner says that this is a question of to-day, not one for future consideration. The alienation of the land has been going on at the rate of 20,000,000 acres a year, and that, according to the Land-office reports, there are only 5,000,000 left of a character that makes them available for settlers without capital, and this, he thinks a "generous estimate." Outside of this acreage there remains land totally unfit for agriculture, lands requiring great outlay for clearing or irrigation, coal and mineral lands, lands likely to be segregated for grants still unsatisfied, Indian and military reservations and the unsurveyed Indian Territory, in all about 600,000,000 acres, unavailable for homesteads; and he quotes the Land Commissioner's report, which says that "the time is near at hand when there will be no public land to invite settlement or afford citizens of the country an opportunity to secure cheap homes." He found in the older of the Western States that virgin prairie cost $15 an acre, and even in Minnesota and Iowa $9, which, with the necessary expenditure to begin work, puts them beyond the reach of a poor man. The Scandinavians are the only people, he thinks, capable of struggling with these disadvantages. The ordinary settler must rent a farm and work it as a tenant, with no hope of becoming its owner. One of the results of this is that a landed aristocracy is rapidly being created. In Springfield, Ill., alone there are some two hundred landlords who live upon the rent-roll of properties in the Middle States, one of them owning 40,000 acres in one county alone—about half his property—from which he draws an income of more than $100,000 a year. The children of these landlords "are now picking up the airs of the great world in Paris and London." He contrasts the law regulating these tenancies with that of Ireland to the disadvantage of Illinois, where it is made "altogether for the landlords and by the landlords, without a single one of its thirty odd clauses that can be construed as other than a device to secure that the tenant shall bleed to the full nomination of his bond, whereas in Ireland the land-law is framed with some view to the protection of the tenant." All this leads him to hint at an American repetition of our old friends Licinius and Tiberius Gracchus.—N. Y. Witness.

MICHAEL DAVITT ON WAR.

In his interesting work, entitled "Leaves from a Prison Diary," Mr. Micheal Davitt, the eminent Irish patriot, remarks as follows: "War! Glorious war! Here is a picture of a famous field of battle (by Dr. W. H. Russell). 'Let your readers fancy masses of colored rags glued together with blood and brains, and pinned into strange shapes by fragments of bones. Let them conceive men's bodies without heads, legs without bodies, heaps of human entrails attached to red and blue cloth, and disembowled corpses in uniform, bodies lying about in all attitudes with skulls shattered, faces blown off, hips smashed, bones, flesh and gay clothing all pounded together as if brayed in by a mortar, extending for miles, not very thick in one place, but recurring perpetually for weary hours, and then they cannot, with the most vivid imagination, comc up to the sickening reality of that butchery. No nightmare could be so frightful.' This is only one side of the picture. But there is yet another. About the middle of the Franco-German war, there were in the Province of Westphalia, 11,817 married women, the wives and widows of soldiers, together with 22,713 children, all obtaining relief from the public funds. In Hanover, 9,624 women, and 26,418 children, were dependent upon the public for support. In the Rhenish Provinces there were 14,312 married women, and 29,619 fatherless children, who were utterly destitute. Of course this is only a fragment, even of this side of the picture. And yet when we ask a justification of any of the wars of modern times, we ask in vain. The real reason why Europe has poured out so much blood and treasure, is simply because in every country on that Continent, political power is monopolized by mere privilege and wealth; and incidents which aristocrats and wealthy people would never dream of converting into causes of war,if they had to do the fighting themselves or pay the cost, are magnified into insults to the British flag, or the German flag, or some other nation's bunting, which can only be referred to the arbitrament of war. As matters now stand, so far as Great Britian and Ireland are concerned, with the fighting interests firmly settled in high places, their ramifications extending through both Houses of Parliament, as well as the press; and with wealth and 'British interests' synonymous terms, we can look for little change in the exercise of political power. But with the acquisition of real power by an enlightened and an independent industrial democracy, we may safely look for a very startling and beneficent change. The people of the different nations of Europe, and also of America, have no interest in war. Their highest interests are all summed up in the Divine words: 'On earth peace and goodwill amongst men.' In their present dis organized and subordinate condition, however, the people of Europe are no match for their rulers. And there is only one way by which the inhuman exercise of political power, which characterises the ruling elasses in all nations, can be at all adequately checked. Diplomacy may do much; arbitration may do more; the establishment of a great International Tribunal might do more still; but until the people have real power, all such things will be lacking in the one element of importance—reality. I venture to think that there is more reason to expect an effective check upon war to come from an International Federation of Labor Interests than from any other quarter."

A PRAYER FOR LANDLORDS.

The apostle Paul exhorts that prayers and intercessions be made for all men, and, giving heed to this counsel, there are few classes of people that are not remembered in the stated or occasional petitions of churches that use forms of prayer. It is not generally known, however, that in the time of Edward VI. a special prayer was appointed to be said for landlords. Here it is:

"The earth is thine, O Lord, and all that is contained therein; notwithstanding that thou hast given the possession thereof unto the children of men, to pass over the time of their short pilgrimage in this vale of misery. We heartily pray thee to send thy Holy Spirit into the hearts of them that possess the grounds, pastures, and dwelling places of the earth, that they, remembering themselves to be thy tenants, may not rack and stretch out the rents of their houses and lands, nor yet take unreasonable fines and incomes after the manner of covetous worldlings, but so let them out to other, that the inhabitants thereof may both be able to pay the rents, and also honestly to live, to nourish their families, and to relieve the poor; give them grace also to consider that they are but strangers and pilgrims in this world, having here no dwelling place, but seeking one to come; and they, remembering the short continuance of their life, may be content with that that is sufficient, and not join house to house, nor couple land to land, to the impoverishment of other, but so behave themselves in letting out their tenements, lands and pastures, that after this life they may be received into everlasting dwelling places; through Jesus Christ our Lord. Amen."

FRIENDLY WORDS TO EMPLOYERS.—1. Has it ever occurred to you that your influence over those in your establishment or household involves your responsibility towards God? (Eph. 6: 6–9.) 2. Are you seeking to help any or all of them a little nearer to him? (Matt. 5: 16.) 3. Do you realize, and endeavor to assist them to feel, that their spirits, minds, and bodies are given them by him, and designed for his honor, through the grace of Christ Jesus and the indwelling of his Holy Spirit? (1 Cor. 6: 19, 20.) 4. Are you doing what God requires of you—especially as to the younger among them—in efforts to promote their interest in self-improvement, temperance, health, thrift, purity, kindness to animals, sympathy with suffering humanity, the choice of companions and recreations, the observance of public worship and private devotion? (Gal. 6: 9, 10.) 5. Are you desirous that, when your earthly course comes to an end, your spirit may return to God with the happy retrospect of a fruitful love to him and of a life not wasted? (Daniel 12: 3.)—City Press, London, England.

CHRISTIANS WHO WORSHIP IDOLS.

Canon Farrar in a public address remarked: "Do none of you worship Moloch or Mammon or Baal-Peor? Have none of you in your hearts a secret niche for Belial? When your heart is absorbed in a passion of envy, hatred and rage; when you are determined, if you can, to wound by false words, by bitter attacks, by open or secret injuries; when you display "the eternal spirit of the populace" by giving yourself up to a passion of reckless depreciation of social, political or religious opponents; when you invoke the very name of God that you may emphasize the curses against your enemies; is God the God of your worship? Of your lips, yes; of your life, no. What are you then? Whatever you may call yourself, what are you but a worshiper of Moloch?

"And when you talk of nothing, think of nothing, scheme after nothing, care for nothing, I had almost said, prayed for nothing, but money, money, money, all the day long; hasting to be rich, and so not being innocent; ready, if not downright, to forge, or steal in order to get it, yet ready to adulterate goods, to scamp work, to have false balances, and unjust weights, to defraud others of their rights and claims, to put your whole trade or commerce or profession on a footing which is perhaps conventionally honest, yet goes to the very verge of dishonesty; toiling for money, valuing it first among earthly goods, looking up to those who have won it as though they were little human gods, hoarding it, dwelling on it, measuring the sole success in life by it, marrying your sons and daughters with main reference to it—is God the God of your worship? Of your lips, yes; of your life, no. What are you then but an idolater? a worshiper of Mammon?

"If you are a drunkard, or impure; if the current of your life is absorbed and swayed by unholy impulses: if you have flung the reins upon the neck of your evil passions; if the temple of your body is full of chambers in which wicked thoughts are ever bending before the walls which glow with unhallowed imagery—again is God the God of your worship? Of your lips, yes; of your life, no. What are you then, but an idolater? In what respect are you the less guilty than Zimri, the Prince of Simeon, who worshiped Baal Peor? Not an idolater? Alas! my brethren, every one of us is an idolater who has not God in all his thoughts, and who has cast away the laws of God from the government of his life. I know not that it is a much worse idolatry to deny God altogether and openly defy the brute impulses of your lower nature than it is in words to confess God, yet not to do, not to intend to do, never seriously to try to do what he commands, or to abandon what he forbids.

The tobacco habit has become an evil so great in many ways that serious efforts ought to be made to check it, if not to eradicate it from good society. I do not think there is in the world any custom or habit more absurd than this, or with less reason to be. There is none which shows its victims to be more the abject slaves of foolish example than this. Why should not the Sabbath schools be increased in value and importance to the young by utilizing them in teaching, at proper times and in a proper way, the great evils in many ways coming inevitably from the tobacco habit, while no good whatever results from it.—Neal Dow.

Mrs. Mary Howitt, who was famous as an English writer over forty years ago, at 83 years of age, is in the enjoyment of good health and still engaged in literary work, being a regular contributor to the well-known English periodical, Good Words. She resides at Meran, Austria, in a beautiful old manse, which bears the name of "Marion's Rest."

The Base-ball Leagues of the North should send two or three "nines" to Tennessee as missionaries. The Legislature of that State profiting by the moral effect of the playing of match games on the Sabbath at the North, took time by the forelock and passed an act last April forbidding base-ball, cricket or similar games on that day under penalty of a fine of from $25 to $50. Would it be best to introduce base-ball civilization into that State?

—During the recent destructive floods in the vicinity of Osaka, Japan, when whole villages were swept away and hundreds of lives lost, the Governor had all the American missionaries removed to a place of safety, provided them with every comfort, and had their houses carefully guarded, refusing all compensation for the service.

—The government of Austria has given the American Board the right to buy or build halls for Bible lectures anywhere in Bohemia. This is an important concession, and shows the growing favor of the authorities towards evangelical work.

LITERATURE.

"BETWEEN TWO OPINIONS" continues to receive the warm commendations of the press. The Union Signal last week reviewed the book in an article of over a column, saying: "The author has something to say and says it earnestly, 'without fear or favor,' regarding the great questions of prohibition and the labor movement as championed by the secret unions of working men, which direct the strikes occurring more and more frequently in our cities. The story is rich in heroic characters."

The notice in the Lutheran Standard, by Prof. G. H. Schodde, of Capital University, Columbus, Ohio, is also a valuable endorsement. "This story is written by a young lady who won the favor of all opponents of secret societies by her book published about three years ago, and entitled 'Holden with Cords.' In the book before us the dangerous workings of the lodge is again the thread that goes through the whole story, while the author is just as pronounced in her opposition to intemperance, labor unions and other evils of the hour. The book is well written, and although her wisdom is not always equal to her zeal, nor the remedies proposed sufficient to effect a cure, yet the discriminating reader will peruse these pages not only with interest, but also with profit. The leading idea of the work is that all the evils of our social and religious life, and not one only, or one at a time, can and should be rooted out." ATONEMENT AND LAW, or redemption in harmony with Law as revealed in Nature. By John M. Armour. Price $1.25. Pp. 240. Christian Statesman Publishing Co., Philadelphia.

Bishop Butler's "Analogy" will be remembered for its refutation of infidelity by arguments drawn primarily from the works of God in nature rather than from revelation. Drummond's "Natural Law in the Spiritual World," published a few years since, is regarded by thousands of enthusiastic readers as a work of equal power, and in its scope much in advance of Butler's in demonstrating that the laws of the kingdom of grace do not differ from those of the realm of nature, and hence the law-giver and ruler of both must be one. The present volume has a nobler theme, but is not so general in a purpose. To prove that the atonement, the central glory in the kingdom of grace, is not an exception to the law of God as we read it in nature and revelation, but is as exactly conformed to that law as the movements of the stars in heaven or the growth of blade of grass on earth, is a task which would give honor to any man. Mr. Armour is a minister of the Reformed Presbyterian church, and his work shows the marks of his rough discipline and habit of strong thinking which mark the instructions of that people. His views have not been hastily adopted, nor are they wholly original, nor perhaps largely so; but they are an earnest and logical presentation of the argument that the great Atonement is not an exception to the natural method and order of God's work as we understand it through Scripture or in Nature. The first part is a disquisition on law, both natural and moral—motion, force, life, the "nature of things," the will. The second part, after showing that there is no salvation for the race without an atonement, and that the violator of law cannot atone for himself, proves that the law of substitution is normal and in obedience to law, and that the Son of God, in his character as mediator, will be more fully and gloriously revealed to men from age to age. As John Robinson, the Pilgrim pastor, taught, there is yet more light to break forth from the word of God; and Luther, "I see something which blessed Augustine saw not, and those that that come after me will see that which I see not." The work abounds in strong arguments which sometimes rises to an eloquent pitch, as in the following from the first chapter:

"Doubt comes in where evidence is most abundant. A stone seen moving through the air we can believe was hurled by some lad though we see him not; a cannon ball crossing the bay we do not doubt was sent by persons having skill and power; an ocean steamer driven around the world we know owes its force and motion to skill and power of living beings. When we see mighty orbs moving in space, why do we raise any question regarding the origin of motion and force? The only shadow of reason that can be imagined is that we cannot readily conceive of a being able to produce motion on so grand a scale, a being infinite, ever present and almighty, the source of all motion, all force producing all motion in the universe. In a vastly higher sense than that in which the motion of the steamship in mid-ocean is to be attributed to man, all motion in the universe, including that produced in and by vital organisms, in this world and in all worlds, is to be attributed to the Infinite, the ever-living, the Almighty. In the presence of the moving universe may we not exclaim: 'Power belongeth unto God.'"

Yet one often wishes while reading for the clearness and simplicity of style which characterizes the "Plan of the Philosophy of Salvation." This is one fault of an excellent work which will prevent in some degree its popularity and confine it to the study and the library, while the doctrines discussed and the arguments adduced ought to have a place on the sitting room table. The Statesman Company have done their work well, and the broad margins invite to frequent notes and careful reading.

"Antoine Louis Barye," the French sculptor, is the subject of the opening illustrated article in the February Century. It is a thoughtful and appreciative study of the man and his art, as well as anecdote and information. George W. Cable contributes a paper on "The Dance in Place Congo" which is illustrated with several arrangements of Creole music, and with striking sketches by E. W. Kemble. The paper is a vivid portraiture with pen and pencil and musical notes of the slave character fifty years ago. The short stories of the number are the first part of a humorous novelette, "The Borrowed Month," by Frank R. Stockton; and a dialect sketch of Georgian life, "An 'Onfortunit Crcetur,'" by Mat Crim. Edmund C. Stedman contributes a notable poem, "Hebe," which name is seen from the illustrations accompanying, to belong to a lioness that played the executioner's part in a lover's revenge. "Will the Land Become a Desert?" is a question of the waste of our forests discussed by Joseph E. Chamberlain. In "Open Letters" Bishop Dudley and the Rev. J. H. Hopkins express Episcopalian views in regard to "Christian Union," and H. C. Fuller's comments on the Rev. Lyman Abbott's recent article discussing socialism under the title, "Danger Ahead." A peculiar interest attaches to General Grant's "Preparing for the Wilderness Campaign," for he is dealing with his plan for the last grand campaign. A fac-simile of Lincoln's "God-speed" letter to Grant, written a few days before the Wilderness battle, accompanies the article; also a characteristic anecdote of Grant during the battle, by Charles Carleton Coffin, who observed the incident described. In "Our March against Pope," General Longstreet gives the Confederate view of the Second Bull Run campaign, with some caustic criticisms and amusing anecdotes. He unintentionally confirms Pope's plans of the battle and his judgment of its outcome, and thus gives added force to the arraignment of Porter by Pope in the last Century. Longstreet makes, however, a special plea for Porter, as might be expected. The humors and hardships of a private are described by a rebel straggler from Jackson's army.

The English Illustrated Magazine contains a spirited and thrilling paper on "Life-boats, and Life-boatmen" to which a number of illustrations give additional interest and effect. The invention of the life boat and the tardy favor its usefulness found in England seem remarkable when we remember the constant losses about the British coast in every direction. The same may be said of our own government life saving service. "Ulm," with its cathedral, quaint old streets and art history form another article. The second part of "A Month in Sicily" well illustrated, and "On the Cultivation of Tea and Tea Customs in Japan" close the number. The latter is a very interesting history of the tea trade and of the social customs of those who cultivate the tea plant and are supposed to get most enjoyment from the beverage.

St. Nicholas for February has a richly varied table of contents. Among those articles which may be classed as timely is an outdoor sketch, entitled "Fish-spearing through the Ice," which shows how some clever boys improved on an ingenious Indian mode of fishing. The second installment of Horace E. Scudder's "George Washington;" and the comparison between the governments of England and America, in "Among the Law-makers," will interest all patriotic boys and girls. On another page of the Cynosure will be read a part of this instructive article. Of a somewhat more practical nature is the "Ready for Business," paper on electrical engineering; while Helen Jackson (H. H.) gives a few useful hints in her "New Bits of Talk for Young Folks;" and Frank Bellew, in a clever little story, explains how the brain receives, stores, and uses all its impressions. Frank R. Stockton "Personally Conducts" us into many queer places "Around the Bay of Naples." In the "Agassiz Association," Prof. W. O. Crosby, of the Boston Society of Natural History, begins a free course of instruction in mineralogy, with practical experiments, open to all readers of the magazine.

In the Memoirs of Gustave Dore some interesting statistics are given with regard to his earnings. It is estimated that between 1850 and 1870 his illustrations brought him $1,400,000. A morning's work has been known to realize $2,000. But it was the number of his works, quite as much as the unprecedently high rate of remuneration which he commanded, that made his earnings look so large.

Everything brought grist to his mill, from Dante to an almanac. He was not actuated by a greed of gain, but by the desire to establish a monopoly of talent in his own person. About the age of twenty-three he conceived the plan of illustrating some forty of the great masterpieces of literature, from Homer downward, and by 1865 he had executed seven.

REFORM NEWS.

MICHIGAN COLPORTEUR WORK.

Bro. Tucker's Experience.—No License Needed.—A Legal Opinion.—Michigan, are you so poor?

Bro. Tucker writes me that he is on the move from house to house with tracts and books and an excellent experience in Freemasonry and the salvation of Jesus. He does not find the institution very charitable. They seem to be forgetful to entertain strangers, at least, for he at one time traveled until 9 o'clock, P. M. through a blinding snow storm, before finding a lodging place. Many times the wives and daughters make a desperate effort to defend the old handmaid, but finally cease by saying they wish the father or the brother were present. It certainly is something new under the sun in Michigan, at least, for a person to be traveling about with no other business but to enter into an investigation of Ma sonry.

On the streets of Jackson Bro. Tucker was showing an expose of the lodge, giving out tracts, etc., when a policeman informed him that he must have a license. Bro. T. repaired to the office of a lawyer to make inquiry. There were two of them in. He asked if the policeman was correct, and was informed that a license was not required. Bro. T. said, "Perhaps it makes some difference as to the kind of books exhibited," at the same time showing one of the books.

One lawyer was a Mason, the other was not. The Mason looked at the book carefully for a few moments, and handed it to the other, with a laugh, saying, it was a burlesque gotten up to make money, no truth in it, etc., etc. Bro. T. then informed him that he knew the book was correct, for he had been through it himself. Upon which the lawyer became enraged, and rising up to his fnll height, said to Bro. T.,"If there is a hell, you'll go there, and deserve the lowest place." Query: Why such a demonstration if the book was a burlesque?

Bro. T. seems to be inclined to talk freely on the subject everywhere and always. At Battle Creek the other evening he gave his experience in a meeting at the M. E. church, and writes that next day the craft were quite talkative and demonstrative; but, he writes, "They can't stand the fight." He gave out tracts at the meeting referred to.

We would be glad to keep Bro. Tucker in the field, but shall be compelled to call him in for lack of funds. We hope a spring meeting may develop something in our favor. H. A. Day, Sec. M. C. A.

FROM OHIO.

Victory at Mt. Victory.—Encouragement.—Round about Mansfield.

MANSFIELD, O., Feb. 4, 1886.

DEAR CYNOSURE:—I am now at the house of our State Secretary, Rev. S. A. George. Before accompanying him to call on friends, I will briefly report the past week's work. I was not disappointed on last Thursday evening to find the United Brethren church at Mt. Victory well filled with young men anxious to know all they could about secret societies. The same curiosity which too frequently leads young men to join these societies, makes them eager to see them exposed; and unless the speaker shows clearly the anti-Christian and anti-republican character of these societies, he may, as is sometimes claimed, influence some of the thoughtless to join. The night was dark, the roads were in a bad condition, and the attendance of ladies was consequently small. The notice which appeared in the daily paper helped much in advertizing the meeting. It read as follows:

"There was a disgraceful performance at the Daniel's church last evening in which Isaiah Jenkins took a leading part. Mr. Stoddard, of Columbus, was to deliver a lecture on secret organizations. The whole thing ended in a disgraceful brawl. We understand that the lecture will be given at the Brethren church to-night. Let the citizens turn out and show Mr. Stoddard that we are not all crazy, and that we recognize every man's right to talk."

I should say in behalf of the Band that a large majority were in favor of the lecture, and felt greatly injured by Mr. J.'s conduct.

As I was leaving town the morning after the lecture, I chanced to meet a young man who had become greatly interested. He subscribed for the Cynosure, purchased an exposition of Odd-fellowship which I happened to have, and assured me that he had made up his mind not to have anything to do with secret orders. Some of the Masons became very angry because I was "driving men into their institutions." They swore (I think) a little worse than Peter.

On Monday evening I spoke to a few friends and students in the Wesleyan church at Ada, and on Tuesday evening to a much larger audience in the Wesleyan church at Dunkirk. I expect to work here for a time, then visit Savannah, Ontario and other points near by, where Bro. George has written to have arrangements made for lectures.

KANSAS NOTES.

Snow deeper and deeper.—A representative Kansas druggist.—Mackey discounted.—A fit subject for Masonic Burial.

HIAWATHA Kans.

DEAR EDITOR:—The cold weather and deep snow-drifts have hindered me from doing much for some three weeks; but I will note a few items.

I succeeded in getting through the drifts, after the first week's storm, from Whitney to Bro. C. L. Terry's, near Willis, where my team is still kept on account of the deep snow which has been getting deeper and deeper. I came to Hiawatha Saturday, hoping to speak in the United Presbyterian church. Rev. Mr. Williamson the pastor was at our State convention last September at Willis and committed himself in very severe terms against the secret orders. But when asked for the use of the church he would assume no responsibility in that direction, but referred it all to the trustees; and Dr. J. N. Scouller, a druggist, who, it is believed, sells not only tobacco but "fire-water," and who seems to be at the head of affairs, opposed it, and it was refused. I start on the first train to Sabetha.

At Whitney I had a conversation with a member of the Christian church and a Mason. He claimed very positively that if he lived up to the principles of Masonry, it would be all right with him in the end. I gave him some quotations from Morris and Mackey, showing the anti-Christian character of Masonic religion. He first claimed they were some disaffected Masons, but when I told him who they were he was silent. He knew Morris.

Near Willis, a drink ng Mason was found drowned in a barrel of water where he had his whisky jug, and the Masons took him to Severance and buried him with Masonic honors; and of course sent him to the Grand Lodge above. Surely this is a strong delusion; from which, if possible we should save the deluded ones.

R. LOGGAN.

CORRESPONDENCE.

BEREA COLLEGE.

EDITOR CYNOSURE:—In your paper for January 21st the senior editor says, "Berea College was born of the American Missionary Association, and is manned by radical Congregationalists."

Berea College was born before the American Missionary Association did any work of planting schools or colleges; and when solicited through its secretary to aid in the purchase of lands, as a site for the college, the reply was, "That is not our work: our work is to preach the Gospel."

Also, a by-law of the constitution of the college declares, "This institution shall be under an influence strictly Christian, and, as such, opposed to sectarianism, slave-holding, caste and every other wrong institution or practice." Also, the college, in its official utterances to the world, has declared itself "undenominational." Also, the church with which all the professors in Berea College are connected is undenominational, and ever has been—organized 1853. The church here desires to be the warm bosom in which all true Christians may come to be cherished without even the name of party.

Bro. Blanchard is right when, in another place, he says, "Berea, like the first churches of Christ, knows no nationalities or sects."

JOHN G. FEE.

A CHAMPION FOR BRO. DISSETTE.

CLARINDA, Iowa, Feb. 5, 1886.

EDITOR CYNOSURE:—I am very sorry to read Bro. J. D. Nutting's criticism of Bro. Dissette after his sad persecution at Champaign, Ill; because Bro. Dissette is a faithful, devoted minister who has seceded from the Masonic lodge, taken his life in his hand and is going forth battling with this terrible secret despotism. Such men need the sympathies and prayers and contributions of the friends of the cause, rather than their criticism.

My soul has learned to abhor, to hold in utter contempt, the policy of shutting off all preaching and lecturing on reform topics in towns where some so-called revival meetings are going on. As though our work of reform was something foreign to the Gospel. This idea is the curse of our times. During some three months, while these revivals are going on, there is scarcely a town where anything can be said on the subject of prohibition, national reform or anti-secrecy, for fear it might jeopardize the salvation of souls. Bosh! I positively believe revivals thus conducted do more harm than good. Soul-destroying sins are covered over, cancers that ought to be cut out, and must be cut out if souls are saved, are allowed to remain and fester. An artificial excitement is worked up. People are demoralized physically and mentally by long protracted meetings and then relapse into a condition of insensibility, until the next revival season comes around. I have heard the "Boy Preacher" report 5,000 conversions in Kansas city, and the next winter I have failed to find a single trace of his work.

What is the trouble with these revivals? Just the want of such preaching as Bro. Dissette gave them at Champaign. I heard a doctor complain recently of losing a patient. A child was at a critical stage of the disease. He left very careful directions about giving the medicine, but the parents thought it was too strong, and kept back part. The child died, and who was to blame?

Bro. Nutting, we are standing between the living and the dead—at the death-bed of a dying world. The Great Physician has given us the prescriptions in his Word. Don't keep back any of the truth. If the truth will kill them, why let it kill. There is no more faithful man in the field than Bro. Dissette. We all love to read his letters. God bless him. The account of his outrageous treatment at Champaign causes our blood to boil with hotter indignation against the whole lodge of despotism.

M. A. GAULT.

MORE BLESSED TO GIVE.

COLUMBUS, Miss., Jan. 25, 1886.

EDITOR CYNOSURE:—Permit me through your columns to make some acknowledgements and answer some inquiries. Sister S. B. Allen and all who united with her in the donation of a box of religious books and papers, recently received, have our grateful thanks. They are indeed a very valuable acquisition for the furtherance of our work.

Friends, unless you were here to see, you cannot imagine the pleasure your books and papers give, and doubtless God's blessing will follow your labor of love. To my knowledge great profit has been derived from the perusal of some of the books. Many Sabbath-schools have been encouraged. Some of the books have been used as prizes for those who recite the greatest number of Scripture verses. The Pilgrim's Progress was read with great pleasure. A Bible in large print was gladly received by an old lady who had none in which she could see to read well. One man took a copy of the Psalms, promising to have some read from it every day and pray with his family. Some have been loaned so that many can read the same book. The "Buds and Blossoms" in the last box are a source of great pleasure to the young people.

We have more calls for Bibles, Testaments and hymn-books than we can possibly fill, and we were glad, indeed, to get some for such as could not get them otherwise. The colored people are very fond of singing and are always glad to have a hymn-book. In many houses there are very few books, and in others none. Many of the colored people are continually moving from one place to another, and when some are supplied in part with religious literature and have gone to a distance, we find others near who lack.

The barrel of clothing sent to the young lady student by the Misses Eastman and Flagg, has been received. She is struggling hard to get an education by her own efforts as far as possible, and this aid is indeed appreciated as a great blessing. She told me with a gush of delight of the arrival of her barrel, and said that everything in it was very nice. Many thanks to the friends who sent it.

I have been informed that a plan is under consideration for the publication of those pictorial tracts before mentioned. I hope the friends of this enterprise will continue to ask God that it may be carried into effect. Many more tracts are needed here than can be obtained, and especially a large supply suited to the common people. The kindness of all those friends who have sent, for the furtherance of our work, money, boxes of supplies, tracts, papers, books, etc., is held in grateful remembrance. The secret power is far less in popular esteem here than it once was. Let us labor on in faith until this mountain of iniquity be removed from the land.

M. A. F. TAPLEY,

BRO. DISSETTE IN HIS OWN DEFENSE.

EDITOR CYNOSURE:—An article appeared in the last issue of your paper entitled, "Bro. Dissette Criticized," by one who has himself suffered in a similar manner for the same truth, and who now has had time and opportunity for a fuller view of the case."

This brother pronounces my trial and imprisonment "utterly unjustifiable, and simply a piece of Masonic 'legal' outrage," etc. Thus far I am sure he is right. But when he reflects upon my conduct in a meeting which did not exist in Champaign, and, therefore, I could not attend, and goes back in the history of our race nearly six thousand years to prove that my deportment was unbecoming a minister of the Gospel, we see that a big man with a big gun is stalking a big field.

Suppose that I were in a union meeting during the week of prayer, led by Bro. Nutting, and he were to introduce the subject of secret societies, and make quite a speech against them, then state to the people that the meeting was open for prayer and testimony, and I should arise and give my personal experience, which would go to confirm every word he, the leader of that meeting, had uttered, I believe that he would be the last man to gainsay a word of my testimony. Otherwise, I should believe him to be utterly disqualified for the relation he sustained to such a meeting. If that is not the very place for such testimony, where can it be found? So our good brother has only to wipe his spectacles and read my Champaign experience again and he will see that it was no "revival meeting;" simply a prayer and experience meeting, and that subject was introduced by the leader.

While I do not entirely agree with our friendly critic respecting the introduction of such testimony in a "revival meeting," I assuredly am ready to have him or any other give us light respecting the proper time and place for such testimony which they may possess. He has much the advantage of your humble correspondent in that he has "himself suffered in a similiar manner for the same truth, and now has had time and opportunity for a fuller view of the case." It is unnecessary for any one to waste ink and paper in stating that, generally speaking, such testimony is hardly appropriate at a fire, a wedding, or a funeral, and yet I can conceive of exceptions to such a rule, especially in the case of a Masonic burial.

I must say that he has the advantage of me again in what he is pleased to term "the somewhat widespread idea which he once possessed, also that anti-secrecy must take the precedence of everything else, · · · it was our duty to push it ahead regardless of time, place or consequences," for I should never have thought of arraigning him thus. But he is competent to testify for himself, whatever exceptions we may claim for others.

Permit me to ask our good brother a few questions which I trust he will answer from his "fuller view."

1. Do Masons, Odd-fellows, and secretists in general, who profess Christianity now, take part in your revival meetings?
2. Do you call on them to pray?
3. After meeeting, do you shake hands with such an one and call him brother?
4. When is your "time" if not now? and where is your "place," if not from your pulpit, that you expose "the things which are done of them in secret?"
5. Will you be kind enough to read or relate my Champaign experience to your revival meeting, and then quote the first division of your criticism, as published in last week's Cynosure, to your people, then ask them to engage in one season of prayer for God's blessing on this anti-lodge reform and on all who are engaged in it? and call on that class of men to whom you would consider it to be the greatest cross to engage in such a prayer?

I assure you that your criticism is taken in a kindly spirit' for I believe that you labor under a misapprehension of the facts. I appreciate the free, open manner in which you write. It stands out in pleasing contrast to a disposition manifested on the part of some who are more closely allied to this work, who take counsel of the craft respecting this very experience, and voice that counsel where it certainly does no good, adding that they are "satisfied that he (Dissette) is misrepresenting the work." When I die I want no scars to be found on my back. While I live, brethren, remember I wear no armor there—at least, it has never been tested. So in the future I hope all will take the course which brother Nutting has done, and "let us look each other in the face."

An old Indian came into his camp one evening boasting how he had berated the white men in a town across the river. "Oh! me call him dog, houn', and me cuss him heap!"

A young Indian, thrilled by the success of his chief, essayed to do likewise, and was terribly mauled for it. Next day he met the old chief, who inquired how he came to present such an appearance. He related his adventure and asked the chief how he escaped so well. He responded, "Ugh! Me did not cuss him till me cross the river!"

The policy of the old chief is the policy of too many to-day who occupy the pulpit and rostrum. "Cry aloud and spare not, lift up thy voice like a trumpet and show my people their transgressious and the house of Israel their sins."

"If thou hast whispered the truth, whisper no longer; Speak in the trumpet tones, louder and stronger."

G. T. DISSETTE.

HE NEED NOT FEAR.

ST. PAUL, Minn., Jan. 28, 1886.

EDITOR CHRISTIAN CYNOSURE:—Rev. Dr. Christie, pastor of the House of Hope Presbyteriau church in this city, takes issue with the secret orders in the following ambiguous sort of a way. He says in a sermon: "Beautiful as are their streams of benevolence, they cannot save the soul." The Masonic, Odd-fellow, and other secret fraternities at large will not like that sermon of Dr. Christie. But uo doubt, sopped as it is with the false sentiment, "beautiful streams of benevolence," it will be very gratifying to the Masons and Odd-fellows of his own church. The secret orders, as the Masons, Odd-fellows, and others, do reject Christ from their rituals and proclaim salvation without him. The secret orders will perhaps attribute Dr. Christie's denial of their faith to his ignorance, and spare him the "black shirt" on the ground of his patronizing and false eulogy of their societies.

Dr. C. need not fear the fate of a "Daniel come to judgment" while he fawns for a piece of bread and butter at the feet of the Sir Knights of the hood-wink, cable-tow, and fifth libation blasphemy at his communion table. W. FENTON.

STUDIES IN JEWISH HISTORY.

LESSON VIII, Feb. 21, 1886.—The Second Temple.—Ezra 1: 1-4: 3: 8-13.

GOLDEN TEXT.—They praised the Lord, because the foundation of the house of the Lord was laid.—Ezra 3: 11.

[Open the Bible and read the lesson.]

COMMENTS ON THE LESSON BY E. E. FLAGG.

1. Practical lessons taught by the return of the Jews. vs. 1–4. Isaiah, Jeremiah, Ezekiel and Daniel had all prophesied of the return of the chosen people, the former more than two centuries before the event; so that we have here one of those wonderfully literal fulfillments of prophecy which infidels have never been able successfully to gainsay. We learn from it: (1) That God's promises are always kept. (2) That divine chastisements cease when they have accomplished their purpose. Israel became eventually a nation of formalists and bigots, but never was there another national relapse into idolatry. (3) That God often makes use of most unholy instruments in the work of building up Zion. Humanly speaking, what stranger or more unlooked for thing could occur, than that the spirit of a heathen prince should be stirred up to release a whole nation from captivity, and the hearts of their conquerors be touched to give substantial aid to the returning exiles? History is full of marvels and surprises because it is full of God. A generation ago the most astute statesman would hardly have ventured to predict the adoption of home rule for Ireland by an English parliament. It is a matter of history that Cyrus was once shown the prophecies of Isaiah regarding his future career, and that they made a profound impression on his mind. There is certainly something very striking in his humble acknowledgement of God as the giver of all his imperial power, and our own nation may well learn a lesson from this heathen prince. God has given us this fair land; do we give him in return due homage? Have we not rather allowed the government to become secularized, till public officials have, to a large extent, forgotten to rule in the fear of the Lord? Contrast this document of Cyrus with our Constitution which does not contain so much as a mention of God.

2. The foundations of the house laid. vs. 8–13. Our regard for Zion is a good thermometer by which to test the warmth of our heavenly affections. There was occasion to rejoice. The founding of this second temple meant spiritual revival. There was occasion for weeping. The inferiority to the first made it a monument of the nation's sin. The Shekinah glory had gone forever along with the Ark of the Covenant, and the spirit of prophecy was well nigh extinct. But the second temple had a glory superior to the first in receiving within its walls the incarnate Son of God. We may well mourn the decadence of the church, the loss of spiritual life and power; yet we are certainly nearer the day of Christ's coming, and we know not what glorious manifestations of himself we may be privileged to look upon.

LIGHT FROM THE WORD.

How was Jerusalem, even in ruins, regarded by the devout Jew? Psa. 102: 14. How should we feel towards the spiritual Zion? Psa. 137: 5. Have we any real reason to be dissatisfied with the age in which we live? Eccl. 7: 10.

From Peloubet's Notes.

The captivity of the Jews was begun B. C. 604, by the capture of Jerusalem by Nebuchadnezzar. But there were several other times afterwards when captives and treasures were carried to Babylon. (Less. 4)

The moral causes of the captivity were,—first, the sins of the Jews; idolatry being the chief, and the fountain from which flowed many sins and crimes against God and man: so that every ordinary remedy failed, and only by an almost entire destruction of the kingdom could the people be saved from their sins. Second. The object of the captivity was not only to punish the Jews, but to renew and purify the nation; that it might hold and spread the true religion.

Probably not more than 100,000 were carried away to Babylon; but doubtless there was a large increase during the seventy years, and many of the descendants of the exiles from the kingdom of Israel (B. C. 721) joined with those from Judea (Neh. 7: 34; Jer. 50: 4).

The length of the exile was exactly seventy years, as foretold by Jeremiah. It was a due punishment for the neglect of God's law,—one year of exile for each of the Sabbatic years in which the people had refused to rest (2 Chron. 36: 21; Lev. 26: 33–35). And the exile could not come to an end till the affliction had so far accomplished its moral work on the people as to give assurance that they would not fall back ihto their former sins.

"The Lord stirred up the spirit of Cyrus." (1) By the direct influence of his Holy Spirit upon the king's mind. (2) There is good reason to accept the Jewish tradition that Daniel, occupying a high position in the court of Cyrus, brought to his attention the prophecies of Isaiah, which even name Cyrus as God's servant (Isa. 44; 26–28, and 45: 1–4). And perhaps, also, the prophecies of Jeremiah above referred to (Jer. 25: 12; 29: 10), as showing that God had, for this purpose, given Babylon, in so wonderful a way, into the hands of Cyrus.

"Let the men of his place help him." Let the people among whom he dwells—the heathen population—help him.—Cook. Cyrus finishes his decree by calling upon his heathen subjects to come to the aid of the poorer Israelites, and assist them with money, cattle, and other commodities, in order that none may be hindered by poverty, or by want of beasts of burden, from joining the band of emigrants, and setting out on their return to Jerusalem.—Pulpit Com.

"Besides the freewill offering." The "offering" here intended is probably that made by Cyrus himself. (See vers. 7–11.) Cyrus required his subjects generally to follow his example, and to "help" the Jews out of their stores.—Cook.

"The return." (1) Their numbers. As the fruit of the proclamation a large number of the Jews went up to Palestine. There were 42,360 Jews, with 7,337 servants, including a band of 200 singers to aid the worship and cheer the march. The total was just about 50,000 (Ezra 1: 64–67), so that more remained than went. (2) What they took with them. Cyrus sent with them the treasures taken from the temple, numbering 5,400 vessels of gold and silver (Ezra 1: 8–11). Their personal property must have amounted to considerable; for on their arrival at Jerusalem they contributed $400,000 in gold and silver for the rebuilding of the temple. "Nebuchadnezzar little thought that he was unconsciously preserving the sacred vessels of Israel in a safe and inviolable stronghold, till the day when Jehovah would bring about their restoration to his people." (4) Their leader was Zerubbabel, of the royal line of David. (4) Their journey must have taken over four months (Ezra 7: 9).

"Wept with a loud voice." The weeping was not because the new temple was smaller than the first, for it was at least one-third larger in every dimension (compare Ezra 6: 3; 1 Kings 6: 2): but in magnificence of structure and adornment it promised little in comparison (Hag. 2: 3; Zech. 4: 10). The returning captives had but too little to spend upon it, in comparison with the wealth of Solomon in his glory.—Todd. The Ark of the Covenant, the sacred fire on the altar, the Urim and Thummim, were absent. All the associations that gathered around the old temple were wanting in the new.

—At the late meeting of the Presbytery at Steubenville, Ohio, an item of considerable interest was the transfer of the bequest of $10,000 in C. & P. R. R. stock from the executors of Rev. Charles C. Beatty, D. D., to the Presbytery. The interest of this fund is to be used in evangelistic work within the bounds of the Presbytery.

—Rev. T. H. Candor, who has been a missionary in Bogota, S. A., for nearly four years, has returned with his wife and child to his home in Aledo, Ill. He has come home to have a surgical operation performed on his eyes, which have been failing him for some time.

AMERICAN PLATFORM.

Viewing with deep concern the corrupt and unsettled condition of American politics, and witnessing with alarm the fearful prevalence of caste and clannishness by which our citizens are being arrayed in hostile bands, working secretly to compass political ends, a method directly and powerfully tending to increase corruption, to destroy mutual confidence, and hasten disruption and bloodshed; and having no hope of adequate remedy for these evils from existing parties, and believing the foundation of a party based upon the fundamental principles of the Declaration of American Independence, both inevitable and indispensable:

We, therefore, a portion of the American people, believing with our fathers that we have our rights and liberties, not from men or parties, but from God; believing in the Christian marriage, and not in Mormonism; believing in the religious democracy of the New Testament, and not in the despotism of the lodge; believing, also, with our Scotch and English ancestors, that civil government, though ordained in God, is "founded in nature, not in grace," and, therefore, that all have equal civil rights; while we abhor the idea of enforcing religion or controlling conscience by human laws and penalties as calculated to make hypocrites, not Christians, and savoring of the days of priestism, the fagot and the stake, we at the same time as firmly believe that atheism and priestcraft are twins and both alike foes to human liberty and welfare. We further most firmly believe that a government without God has none but lynch power, and is destitute of all legitimate authority to maintain civil order, to swear a witness, to try a criminal, to hang a murderer, to imprison a thief; and while we consider government without God as a mere usurpation, we regard all religions and worships invented by men, and so having no higher than human origin, as mere swindling impositions and cheats. We believe in peace and in national arbitration as a means of perpetuating it; yet we as profoundly believe that the bravery and blood of our soldiers have bought us the peace which we enjoy, and we honor the memories of the dead and will be just to the claims of the living; and we take up and prolong the strain raised by the women of this country: "For God, and home, and native land," and trust that this beautiful and patriotic motto will soon be not only echoed by their voices, but sustained by their votes.

We, therefore, solemnly adopt and present the following, as containing a brief synopsis of the principles of our government, by which we intend to be governed in casting our votes. We hold:

1. That ours is a Christian and not a heathen nation, and that the God of the Christian Scriptures is the author of civil government.

2. That the Bible should be associated with books of science and literature in all our educational institutions.

3. That God requires, and man needs a Sabbath.

4. We demand the prohibition of the importation, manufacture, and sale of intoxicating drinks.

5. We hold that the charters of all secret lodges granted by our Federal and State Legislatures should be withdrawn, and their oaths prohibited by law.

6. We are opposed to putting prison labor or depreciated contract labor from foreign countries in competition with free labor to benefit manufacturers, corporations or speculators.

7. We are in favor of a revision and enforcement of the laws concerning patents and inventions; for the prevention and punishment of frauds either upon inventors or the general public.

8. We hold to and will vote for woman suffrage.

9. That the civil equality secured to all American citizens by Articles 13, 14 and 15 of our amended National Constitution should be preserved inviolate, and the same equality should be extended to Indians and Chinamen.

10. That international differences should be settled by arbitration.

11. That land and other monopolies should be discouraged.

12. That the general government should furnish the people with an ample and sound currency.

13. That it should be the settled policy of the government to reduce tariffs and taxes as rapidly as the necessities of revenue and vested business interests will allow.

14. That polygamy should be immediately suppressed by law, and that the Republican party is censurable for the long neglect of its duty in respect to this evil.

15. And, finally, we demand for the American people the abolition of electoral colleges, and a direct vote for President and Vice President of the United States.

The Christian Cynosure.

EDITORS.

J. BLANCHARD. HENRY L. KELLOGG.

CHICAGO, THURSDAY, FEBRUARY 11, 1886.

The stock doves, called also mourning or turtle doves, in Florida are about the size of robins. In all other respects they are exact copies of the orchard pigeons of the North.

If the drinkers' vote could do it, they would kill the saloons; and if the railroad hands could decide it, they would have a Sabbath. In both cases those who make the money compel the sin.

The railroad through North Florida runs through woods, by decayed cabins and slender cows, averaging in value $9.50 a head. But saw-mills along the road are new-covering the cabins, and feeding the cows.

The devil is like an alligator, which lives in air or under water, with food or without food; and Masonic ministers are like the alligator and the devil: in the church or in the world, in prayer meeting, lodge or bar-room—everywhere at home.

A principle of compensation runs through the earth. In Labrador fur and feathers screen life. In Florida lizards, alligator, salamanders, different species of the same animal, go naked because the climate permits it. So human society has its climates and thermal lines; and the higher one ascends in life, as in the atmosphere, the colder he feels, and the more he is shaken by the wind.

Car conductors, being deprived of a Sabbath, are most exposed to lodge sorcery and taxation. Our conductor, through the Kentucky and Tennessee mountains, said there were three secret societies: "The Old Reliable Association," "The Order of Railroad Conductors," and another whose name is forgotten. And the impression prevails that none are secure in their places who do not belong to them. "That none may buy or sell," etc. But the Pullman conductor from New Orleans to Florida belonged to none. He was a native of Washington, D. C., the son of a Lutheran mother; and he said he needed no such secret aid to get and keep employment.

Those who visit new countries, or new American States as California or Florida, find

New wonders brighten, and new charms surprise.

But persons in whom local attachment is strong, miss and mourn the familiar objects where all their young imaginations were born, and so, for a time, mourn as exiles in their new homes. Not so with those who seek new homes, because they "seek first the kingdom of God." These look into the kaleidoscope of eternity and see new beauties at every turn: and their past projects itself into their future, softened and sweetened, as the natural heavens project themselves in clear water below.

"Everything runs into infinity," says Burke: and the weather is no exception. Two months ago oranges were a "sure crop;" to-day tens of thousands of acres of orange groves have lost their glossy green beauty, and the ground is covered thick with great, nice oranges, mouldering and going to decay. God scattered the "hoar frost like ashes," and they could not "stand before his cold." "The oldest inhabitant" has not seen the like here. Like the potato-rot in Ireland, frost in Florida has taught men that the natural, as well as the moral law is "ordained of angels in the hands of a Mediator." There are no "sure crops;" men are dependent upon God.

EDITORIAL CORRESPONDENCE.

THE GREAT FREEZE.

PAOLA, Florida, Jan. 30, 1886.

DEAR CYNOSURE:—This is Saturday. I am to preach here and at Sanford to-morrow and start for Washington, Monday morning. I came to Florida on the heel of what will be remembered as "The great freeze of 1886;" as 1816, when not a sound ear of corn was raised in New England, and there was frost during every summer month, is still spoken of as "The dry cold season." Of course Florida wears a funereal aspect. The swamp oaks had shed their little round leaves on either bank of the St John's river; the dark grey moss-switches hung sadly or swung dolefully; the swarms of migrating waterfowl slunk away abashed, and hid themselves in caves, and the four-legged snake-like alligators ("American Crocodiles," Webster), and the whole lizard tribe were sunk out of sight under the cold black waters.

A GOOD TIME COMING.

But like the funeral of the good, in spite of the freeze, Florida has a bright future before it. Its staple is the orange groves, in the midst of which I am writing, which are beautiful in spite of frost, and as the increase of orange lands bears no proportion to the mighty spread of the Northern markets, one sees nothing but certain prosperity for this State. Railroads are rushing through and over it; and as riding in cars will soon be as cheap as 'boarding at home,' populations are beginning to weave North and South like the migratory birds, thus making life cheerful at both ends of the route. Our Wheaton townsfolk Mr. and Mrs. Landon, are so delighted with good health and good prospects, that they have bought to build here; and they but follow the example of thousands.

The cause of this long delayed rush to this oldest and first settled portion of America is the fall of the slave power, and consequent emancipation of white people as well as black.

Dr. J. N. Bishop, whom Wheaton graduates will remember, as a sometime student there, and who married Mrs. Marsh, a lady officer of the college, came in here some thirteen years ago, and has already accumulated a handsome property. Pine shrubs, palmettos and even alligators do homage to his energy and perseverance; as will be seen by his FIGHT WITH AN ALLIGATOR.

Driving out from Sanford toward midnight, he passed between two little lakes connected by a grassy run where the water was two to three feet deep. His wheel struck an alligator seven feet long, and the brute seized one of the spokes, his teeth cutting into the solid hickory. The horse started, and turned the monster's head up by the side of the buggy, and he lashed the bottom with his tail. The doctor, jumped into the water, caught up a pine knot and struck the alligator a stunning blow on the side of his head. This discouraged the beast and he lay flat on the bottom; but the water was clear, and by faint moon and star-light the Dr. could see his eyes. He then got a crooked limb from a decayed pine log, and aimed a hard blow between the eyes, and so stiffened him that he pulled him out on the sand by his tail; which, while alive, is their chief weapon, as is the elephant's trunk. He made a slip-noose of his horse-halter, hitched the animal to the axle, and drove home over the rough road. When he got there the beast was stone dead. We drove through the run, and I saw where the savage scuffle took place.

This, like some encounters with Cinnamon bears in California, was so marked an event that the press gazetted it far and wide. The depth of the water, the darkness of the night, the nature of the beast and his savage attack, and the single-handed victory, proved uncommon nerve and courage, and made up a rare and memorable occurrence like that of Gen. Putnam and the wolf.

A SOCIAL CIRCLE

met here at Dr. Bishop's last night. Thirty-five or forty interesting people were present, citizens and sojourners. Among them an interesting young couple from Canada, just married. The groom is a younger brother of Dr. Bishop, and the bride Miss Carrie Blanchard, who does credit to her maiden name. I have not seen a more rational and agreeable set of Christians than those who were here last night, and if Florida is peopled with such, her prosperity is assured. I expect to preach to most of them to-morrow, as also the Presbyterians of Sanford: and as I shall discuss the lodge, I hope God may give candor to them, sincerity to myself, and success against an enemy much worse than an alligator in two feet of weeds and water on a dark night.

The lull of politics is portentous. There is scarcely a partisan or partisan paper left. The growth of the prohibition vote from 8,000 for Schumaker, to 30,000 in Ohio last fall; the great State of Georgia gone prohibition except six counties; prohibition in Natchez; prohibition in New Orleans; and the secret temperance lodges every where relegated into shady back seats; all these herald the coming of a party, Christian by its prayers, and American in fact; perhaps so in name.

LEAVING FLORIDA.

I go down the St. John's to-day. It is Monday noon, February 1. The day is warm and the sun bright, but "the land of flowers" has not shown me a single blossom. All have died by the touch of frost. But the orange groves are green, though thinned of their thick foliage, and the great, beautiful oranges almost cover the ground, while enough still hang on the trees to give an agreeable picture of huge orange balls on a beautiful background of green.

A SOBER ESTIMATE.

This newest, oldest State has not been over praised. It is now sad looking enough, as New England was just seventy years ago. This Florida freeze is like that, beyond all precedent. But though the weather prophets and scientists can give no explanation of it, believers in the Bible will remember that God rules the weather, and droughts, and tempests, and hoar frost and stormy wind "fulfil his word." I know not what brought down his judgment in "the dry, cold season" of 1816. Prosperity had followed the war of 1876, and "Independence" had for thirty-six years—from the peace of the Revolution—probably brought the people into fancied "independence" of God. Besides eighty-three years had passed since the advent of the Masonic lodge in Massachusetts, and it had spread like the cholera. Fifty counties had been inoculated with the lodge virus, and the odious abomination had set up its temples everywhere between Canada and the Gulf. Ten years after the "dry, cold season," Morgan was killed; and such was the horrible power of the lodge over mind that Presbyterian elders and deacons justified his murder! The sorcery of the secret worships had actually enslaved their minds. When the most enlightened Christians had enthroned the Christless order in and over the human conscience, no wonder that and for aught we know the false Christless lodge-worships have put Florida into mourning. There are five of these impious lodges in this nice little city of Sanford. But two good congregations yesterday heard, with apparent interest, sermons exposing the lodge. Whatever has or has not called down this freeze on Florida, we know by history, geography and the Bible, that forsaking God for strange altars, will surely bring on nations "wrath to the uttermost."

"Heaven gave signs of wrath;"

THE FLORIDA LANDSCAPE

is unique. Tall pines, straight, as ship-masts and as tall; sandy soil, covered with shrub palmettos; orange groves gleaming through the pine trees, standing wide apart, with no underbrush; and the whole country gemmed with lakes from rods to miles across, and from sixty feet to no findable depth, clear, with no green slime on their surface in the hottest weather,—such is the Florida landscape; and when the flowers come out and the climate gains its level, all there is wanting is a pious, God-fearing population to make Florida an earthly paradise, such as the first discoverers fancied it.

THE POPULATION

have come here for health, business and enjoyment, and I have seen no congregations superior to those I preached to yesterday, at Paola and here in Sanford.

Dr. J. N. Bishop has been here some twelve or thirteen years. His house is a mansion of peace under the hand of his wife, who is remembered with respect by all who knew her in Wheaton. He has secured a neat and tasteful church and a settled minister. He has a handsome property in Sanford, and has a railroad graded twelve miles beyond his home at Paola which is six or seven miles away, and all this besides an active medical practice, and he but 42 years of age. He needs but the continued blessing of God, to make him one of the most important factors in Florida society, and a help to spread Christ's gospel over the United States.

A few Masons have dared to quibble, evade, shuffle and "make a lie" by attempts to conceal; but they are generally from the North. A doctor of this stamp is now in the room, seeking a location and practice in the South. The Southern men whom I have met, are too out-right and straight-forward for such paltering. The lodges defended by such unmanliness must surely "be rooted up."

HON. JOHN R. LYNCH.—SECRET TEMPERANCE LODGES.

WASHINGTON, D. C., Feb. 6, 1886.

Hon. John R. Lynch (colored) of Natchez, Miss., was in Congress when Mrs. Blanchard and I were here two years ago. He was temporary chairman of the National Republican Convention which nominated Blaine in Chicago. He has a home and plantation in Mississippi, and was married (I think) here in Washington. He lives in an elegantly finished and furnished house in this city, is thirty-eight years old; never drank liquor; never joined any secret society; and is altogether a superior young man. He is of course, an ardent Republican, and strives to believe in the future of that Janus-faced party. I have said to him, after hearing his clear, calm, able defense of the Republicans, and utter condemnation of the Democrats, "My dear sir, I do not wish to be discourteous; but, as an older man than you, I will take the liberty to say that your views of parties will not remain what they are now!"

Ten minutes since, I was conversing with the president of the Prohibition Union for this district, who is also a member of the National Committee of the Prohibition party. He is an honest, earnest prohibitionist, who has boxed the compass of the secret temperance lodges: having belonged to them all. I do not give his name or his words; but this is what he said to me: The secret orders did seem good at first, but they are now a hindrance to the temperance cause; like the churches which pray one way and vote another. Why, the N. Y. State Good Templar's lodge came very near voting square against St. John! He adds much more to that effect. And yet I see the Lever (Chicago) is blazing with John B. Finch, and the Good Templars; though if every lodge was dead its editor would not turn a hand over to bring them back to life. J. B.

THE LODGE LIST.

The attention of every reader is called to the "Secret Empire" department on page 13, which is an attempt to give the names of all the secret societies which curse our American society. It is by much labor and research that this list has been made up, and yet we fear it is not nearly complete. Let all the readers of the Cynosure examine it and send us corrections and additional names. Send also any information respecting the orders which will be valuable for publication. It is not a pleasant task to make this collection, nor is it a cheerful column to read. If the Cynosure has printed any thing for ten years which reveals more of the depravity and selfishness of the human heart we do not remember it. But as Sumner said of slavery, "The worse it gets, the better it gets." The more arrogant and heaven-defying and wide-spread and powerful for evil the lodge becomes, the sooner are we assured the Lord God will arise for the deliverance of the church from this curse. Indeed, the devil has more to fear as the secret orders become numerous than we, for they will fall upon and devour each other; and we may in all charity pray for this, for thousands will thus be soonest led to see the evil and renounce it. We have this glorious promise in the face of this foe, "When the enemy shall come in like a flood, the Spirit of the Lord shall lift up a standard against him."

The switching off of the colored people in Virginia from Mahone and the Republican party betokens an awakening to their true interests, and if Woodsmall, Imes, Brinkley and Countee in Memphis, aided by the A. M. A. schools scattered through the South, shall, by prayer and endeavor, push the colored people out from whisky and the lodge, upon a Christian, American platform, 1888 will be a memorable year in the history of the United States.

—As was intimated last week, there will be several things said about the Champaign case in reply to Bro. J. D. Nutting. Bro. Dissette seems able to hold his fort, and he will not lack for defenders. See the correspondence this week, and there is more waiting.

—We request a careful reading of the article on Co-operative Insurance on the first page. Mr. Wood has taken his ground carefully, and makes a strong case against the very object for which a score or so of secret lodges are formed.

—Pres. J. Blanchard reached Washington City last Thursday at midnight, after being snow-blocked at Richmond, and may remain there during the present week. He writes that Bro. Hinman, who has given up the charge of Central Union Mission, went to Baltimore Saturday morning, probably on his way to Chambersburg, Pa.

—Bro. A. M. Paull, of Providence, kindly sends a copy of the Evening Journal of that city, containing a grand account of the dedication of a new Masonic temple in that city on the 3d inst. Bro. Paull promises a review of the address on the occasion, by Rev. George McClellan Fiske.

—The Mercury of Manhattan, Kansas, opens its columns to Elder H. S. Limbocker, a faithful friend of Christian reform, who feels impelled in his old age to thus give his fellow citizens a few words of loving caution and remonstrance respecting the secret lodge.

—Bro. Dissette, after spending a day or two with his family in Wheaton started on a new trip to the south-west by way of Aurora on Wednesday last.

—The College Church, Wheaton, voted to send a missionary collection of some $8.00 to Bro. Countee in Memphis last week.

—A large audience listened to the address of Pres. C. A. Blanchard in the Presbyterian church at Bloom near this city. Many members of the lodge were present, and listened respectfully, and members came from adjoining towns. The Sabbath sermons which followed deepened the excellent impression made by the evening lecture.

—"The History of Berea College" now for sale by the National Christian Association is a history of the power of faith and love for truth, that may be well placed among the first chapters of the great record of our slavery struggle. The story of the rise of Berea is told in plain and honest words, with no effort to arouse by exaggeration or sentimental appeals. The little volume is worth a wide reading.

—Rev. W. P. McNary, editor of our Western United Presbyterian paper, the Midland, St. Louis, was a schoolmate of Dr. George P. Hays, late moderator of the Presbyterian General Assembly from Denver, and now pastor of a prominent Cincinnati church. He loves to recall the days of the old double wooden benches when their pencils scratched harmoniously together through the intricacies of Adams on "vulgar fractions" and the "rule of three."

—Pastor F. L. Grundtvig, of the Danish Lutheran church, Clinton, Iowa, is one of the warm-hearted workers in our cause. He has lectured against the lodge in several Danish congregations, and will, we presume, answer any reasonable calls for an address in that language. He has also prepared and printed a neat 16-page Danish tract against the lodge, which we would we had the power to read. Any who can circulate this tract among Danish-speaking people will do well to get a supply of the author.

THE Chicago Grant Memorial Committee have decided to spend $50,000 on an equestrian monument in Lincoln Park, and Congress has voted half a million toward the New York monument, but Grant reared two great monuments that will have a more lasting effect upon the world than any of bronze or stone. The one is a white column towering toward the skies, engraven with his short, pungent sayings, his brilliant achievements, his unselfish efforts in reorganizing the nation after the war, and his modest demeanor while America's guest abroad. The other is a black and broken shaft, and stands as a warning to every American boy and man to avoid the breakers on which Gen. Grant's life was finally wrecked—the breakers of speculation. He yielded to the desire which is ruining thousands of men in this country every year—the desire for great riches whether honestly obtained or not. They go into stock gambling, grain gambling, lotteries and other like swindles with the hope of getting the better of somebody; but often, as in the case of Grant, they get used up themselves. It looks respectable to "deal" in stocks or grain, but the way it is practiced it is the rankest robbery.

WASHINGTON LETTER.

The Death of Mrs. Bayard.—The Cause of Peace—An Able Presentation.—Congressional Propositions for Disarmament.—The President and the Senate.—The Reward of Official Criminals.—The Central Union Mission.

DEAR CYNOSURE:—The sudden death of the wife of Secretary Bayard just two weeks from the death of their eldest daughter, has cast a gloom over Washington society and brought a supreme sorrow to the man who, by recent legislation, is brought into more important relation to the Presidency than any preceding Secretary of State. In case of the death of Mr. Cleveland, Mr. Bayard would be his successor.

On last Sabbath, the 31st ult., Rev. R. B. Howard, brother of Generals C. H. and O. O. Howard, and secretary of the American Peace Society, preached in the First Congregational church of this city on the subject of "the spirit and practice of war not those of Christianity." I have rarely, if ever, heard so able and excellent a presentation of this very important subject. His text was, "Thy kingdom come, thy will be done, on earth as in heaven." This prayer, which is going up from millions of hearts, and is lisped by infant lips in every Christian household, can never be answered while war prevails. That this prayer will be answered is the assurance that war will cease. Not only the commands to render "to no man evil for evil," to "love your enemies, bless them that curse you, and do good to them that despitefully use you and persecute you," forbid the practice of war, but the whole spirit of the Gospel is one of love, its great object is reconciliation of man to God and men to each other. He held that Divine revelation is progressive, and that while polygamy, slavery and war were tolerated under the Old Dispensation they were forbidden under the New; that Sinai and the Sermon on the Mount were the extremes; Elijah calling down fire from heaven and Jesus forbidding his disciples to follow that example, were the two opposite illustrations. He said it would have cost more than being called a "fanatic" to have gone into the family of David and Solomon and preached against polygamy and war, but that we were to meet the conditions of the present and not of the past ages. He showed that the results of modern science had vastly increased the expensiveness of war, so that a single war ship costs a million dollars, and not one of her guns could be fired for less than a thousand dollars. The excessive burdens of war taxes and the growing intelligence of the people forbid that they should longer be made the tools of despots to fight their duels. Coming from one who fought at Gettysburg and drew his illustrations from that dreadful carnage, and whose brother has becomc eminent as a soldier, it was a somewhat remarkable discourse, and must have left a profound impression on the great congregation who listened most attentively.

More noteworthy even than this are the two bills introduced, one into the Senate by Mr. Wilson of Iowa, and one into the House by Mr. Pettibone, asking that provision be made for international arbitration, a congress of nations, and eventually a general disarmament. These measures have the approval of the President and of the best moral sense of the nation. They can hardly fail of a favorable consideration by Congress. Heretofore the evangelical ministry and Christians of this city have failed to actively co-operate with the Arbitration League of this city, and mainly because it was conducted by men who have no faith in Christianity, and by methods that were not regarded as Christian. It is greatly to be hoped that we have a new era in the peace reform.

There is a growing disposition to compromise the dispute between the President and the Senate about removals. The Republicans are not quite a unit in persisting that Mr. Cleveland shall tell the reasons why he has removed men from office, and if it was insisted on, it would establish a precedent that a Republican President would find it hard to follow. It would imply giving up party secrets, and political parties are to a large extent secret societies, so far as the leaders are concerned.

The verdict of the court-martial in the case of Paymaster General Smith has been published. Like that of General Swaim it may be regarded as a reward rather than punishment. He has a furlough with salary for three years, and loses no chance of preferment. During those three years he has his option to live on his salary in idleness or pleasure-seeking, or to engage in other business. Forty years ago Carlyle wrote his essay on "Model Prisons," in which he showed the folly of rewarding criminals instead of punishing them. It would be profitable reading for the lawyers and jurists of to-day.

The Central Union Mission has taken on a new phase of activity. For fourteen successive nights the meetings have been and are to be led by the pastors of the city. So far the attendance has increased to the full capacity of the rooms. Last night (the 1st) Rev. Dr. Sunderland of the First Presbyterian church conducted the meeting It is hoped that these meetings will result in an increased activity in the churches. Whether this will be the result, or whether on the other hand the mission work will be checked and embarrassed by being made popular and formal, is a question not yet determined. To my mind the simple words of the devoted laymen who have heretofore had charge of the meetings are more likely to be blest to the conversion of souls than the studied eloquence of men who are devoted to one sort of religion in the lodge and to quite another in the church. The Fourth Presbyterian church is having a marked revival. It is hoped that other churches may be awakened to like activity.

H. H. HINMAN.

THIRTY-FIVE years ago the name of St. Paul, Minn., was unknown to map-makers, and neighboring Minneapolis could not boast of a single building. To-day each of these cities has a population of over 100,000 souls, and each is the center of a robust growth in trade, manufacturies, and intellectual activity. There were buildings erected in the twin cities during the past year at a cost of nearly $15,000,000, and there would seem happily to be no interruption of any sort in their career of solid prosperity. Truly in no other country could so amazing and proud a sight be seen as St. Paul and Minneapolis now present. Among other nations progress in city making is the growth of centuries. With us a first-class metropolis may sometimes almost magically arise in the course of a single generation.

THE HOME.

FEBRUARY.

"But Thou hast kept the good wine until now."

Sweet are the last slow hours,
With the sound of flying rain,
That beats its time to a dream of flowers,
As it tinkles on the pane.

Dear are the latest days,
With their story-song of spring,
The melting ice and the soft gray haze,
And the hopes that wake and sing.

Dearer for all the snow,
The bitter, biting frost,
For the short day's work and the long night's woe,
For the living and the lost.

Sweet was the May-time past,
And longed for every day,
When the blossoms all abroad were cast,
And the birds were all at play.

Lovely was summer's time,
With roses blown at noon:
The year stands still in its maiden prime,
When the roses tell of June.

And sad and fair as life
Were autumn's golden strands,
With its days of sun and its days of strife,
And the harvest in our hands.

But best and blest of all
Are the latest wintry days,
When the voice of hope is the Spirit's call,
And the soul in silence prays.

When the work of earth is done,
And the days of exile here,
When the loved are all before us gone,
And heaven is drawing near.

When the pilgrim's toil is through,
And the stranger finds his kin,
When the flesh hath failed but the heart is true,
And the quiet days begin.

Dearer than joy or love,
The rest of life's last hour,
With the dawn at hand in the skies above,
And the coming of His power.

EXTRAVAGANCE IS THEFT.

Every man before God and on his knees must judge what is extravagance. When one goes into expenditure beyond his means, he is extravagant. When one buys anything he cannot pay for, he is extravagant. There are families in all our cities who can scarcely pay their rent, and who owe all the merchants in the neighborhood, and yet have an apparel unfit for their circumstances, and are all the time sailing so near the shore that business misfortune or an attack of sickness prepares them for pauperism. It is well known that there are thousands of families in our great cities who stay in neighborhoods until they have exhausted all their capacity to get trusted. They stay in the neighborhood until the druggist will let them have no more medicine, and the butchers will let them have no more meat, and the bakers will give them no more bread, and the grocery man no more sugar. They find the region unhealthy, and they hire a carman, whom they never pay, to take them to some new quarters, where the merchants, the druggists, the butchers, the bakers, and grocerymen come around and give them the best rounds of beef, and the best sugars, and the best merchandise of all sorts, until they find out that the only compensation they are going to get is the acquaintance of their patrons. If a man buys anything he does not intend to pay for, he is a thief. Of course sometimes men are flung of misfortunes, and they cannot pay. I know men who are just as honest in having failed as other men are in succeeding. I suppose there is scarcely a man who has gone through life but that there have been times when he has been so flung of misfortune he could not meet his obligations. But all that I put aside. There are a multitude of people who buy that which they never intend to pay for, for which there is no reasonable expectation that they will be able to pay. Now, why not save the merchant as much as you can? Why not go some day to his store, and when, nobody is looking, just shoulder the ham or spare rib, and in modest silence steal away? That would be less criminal, because in the other way you take not only the man's goods, but you take the time of the merchant and the time of his accountant, and you take the time of the messenger who brought you the goods. Now if you must steal, steal it in a way to do as little damage to the trader as possible. John Randolph arose in the American Senate, when a question of national finance was being discussed, and stretching himself to his full height, in a shrill voice cried out: "Mr. Chairman, I have discovered the philosopher's stone which turns everything into gold: Pay as you go!" Society must be reconstructed on this subject, or these times of panic and defalcation will never end. You have no right to ride a carriage for which you are hopelessly in debt to the wheelwright who furnished the landau, and to the horse-dealer who provided the blooded span, and to the harness-maker who caparisoned the gay steeds, and to the livery-man who has provided the stabling, and to the driver who, with rosetted hat, sits on the coach-box. The finer the carriage, the better I like it; the quicker the horse you have, the better I like it; but if you are hopelessly in debt for them, get down and walk like the rest of us. It is not the absolute necessities of life which send people into dishonesties and fling them into misfortunes; it is almost always the superfluities. God has promised us a house, but not a palace; raiment, but not chinchilla; food, but not canvas back duck.—Dr. Talmage.

THRIFT.

Thrift began with civilization. It began when men found it necessary to provide for to-morrow as well as for to-day. It began long before money was invented.

Thrift means private economy. It includes domestic economy, as well as the order and management of a family. While it is the object of private economy to create and promote the well-being of individuals, it is the object of political economy to create and increase the wealth of nations.

Private and public wealth have the same origin. Wealth is obtained by labor; it is preserved by savings and accumulations; and it is increased by diligence and perseverance.

It is the savings of individuals which compose the wealth—in other words, the well-being—of every nation. On the other hand, it is the wastefulness of individuals which occasions the impoverishment of states. So that every thrifty person may be regarded as a public benefactor, and every thriftless person as a public enemy.

Economy is not a natural instinct, but the growth of experience, example and forethought. It is also the result of education and intelligence. It is only when men become wise and thoughtful that they become frugal. Hence the best means of making men and women provident is to make them wise.

Prodigality is much more natural to man than thrift. The savage is the greatest of spendthrifts, for he has no forethonght, no to-morrow. The prehistoric man saved nothing. He lived in caves or in hollows of the ground, covered with branches. He subsisted on shell-fish which he picked up on the sea-shore, or npon hips and haws which he gathered in the woods. He killed animals with stones. He lay in wait for them, or ran them down on foot, then he learned to use stones as tools; making stone arrow-heads and spear-points, thereby utilizing his labor, and killing birds and animals more quickly.

Man would have continued a savage, but for the nseful labors of those who preceded him. The soil was reclaimed by them, and made to grow food for human uses. They invented tools and fabrics, and we reap the usful results. They discovered art and science, and we succeed to the useful effects of their labors.

Our birthright, therefore, consists in the useful effects of the labors of our forefathers; but we can not enjoy them unless we ourselves take part in the work. All must labor, either with hand or head. Without work, life is nseless; it becomes a mere state of moral coma. We do not mean merely physical work. There is a great deal of higher work—the work of action and endurance, of trial and patience, of enterprise and philanthropy, of spreading truth and civilization, of dimishing suffering and relieving the poor, of helping the weak and enabling them to help themselves.

Having said so much of the importance and necessity of industry, let us see what uses are made of the advantages derivable from it. It is elear that man would have continued a savage but for the accumulations of savings made by our forefathers—the savings of skill, of art, of invention, and of intellectual culture.

It is the savings of the world that have made the the civilization of the world. Savings are the result of labor; and it is only when laborers begin to save that the results of civilization accumulate. We have said that thrift began with civilization; we might almost have said that thrift produced civilization. Thrift produces capital, and capital is the conserved result of labor. The capitalist is merely a man who does not spend all that is earned by work.

But thrift is not a natural instinct. It is an acquired principle of conduct. It involvs self-denial—the denial of present enjoyment for future good—the subordination of animal appetite to reason, forethought and prudence. It works for to-day, bnt also provides for to-morrow. It invests the capital it has saved, and makes provision for the future.

But a large proportion of men do not provide for the future. They do not remember the past. They think only of the present. They preserve nothing. They spend all that they earn. They do not provide for themselves; they do not provide for their families. They may make high wages, but eat and drink the whole of what they earn. Such people are always poor and hanging on the verge of destitution.

It is in this way that society mainly consists of two classes—the savers and wasters, the provident and improvident, the thrifty and the thriftless, the Haves and the Have-nots.

The men who economize by means of labor become the owners of capital which sets other labor in motion. Capital accumulates in their hands, and they employ other laborers to work for them. Thus trade and commerce begin.

The thrifty build houses, warehonses and mills. They fit manufactories with tools and machines. They build ships and send them to various parts of the world. They put their capital together and build railroads, harbors and docks. They open up mines of coal, iron and copper; and ereet pumping engines to keep them clear of water. They employ laborers to work the mines, and thus give rise to an immense amount of employment.

All this is the result of thrift. It is the result of economizing money, and employing it for beneficial purposes. The thriftless man has no share in the progress of the world. He spends all that he gets, and can give no help to anybody. No matter how much money he makes, his position is not in any respect raised. He husbands none of his resources. He is, in fact, the born thrall and slave of the thrifty.—Dr. Samuel Smiles in "Thrift."

SIGNS OF PROGRESS.

[Translated from the Chinese.]

Where spades grow bright,
And idle swords grow dull;
Where gaols are empty,
And where barns are full;
Where field paths are
With frequent feet outworn,
Law court-yards weedy,
Silent and forlorn;
Where doctors foot it,
And where farmers ride;
Where age abounds,
And youth is multiplied;
Where poisonous drinks
Are chased from every place;
Where opium's curse
No longer leaves a trace.
Where these signs are,
They clearly indicate
A happy people
And a well-ruled state.

CASTING ALL YOUR CARES UPON HIM.

In the summer of 1878 I descended the Rhigi, with one of the most faithful of the old Swiss guides. Beyond the services of the day, he gave me unconsciously a lesson for my life. His first care was to put my wraps and other burdens upon his shoulder. In doing this he asked for all, but I chose to keep back a few for speeial care. I soon found them no little hindrance to the freedom of my movements; but still I would not give them up until my guide, returning to me where I sat resting a moment, kindly but firmly demanded that I should give up everything but my alpen stock. Putting them with the utmost care upon his shoulders, and with a look of intense satisfaction, he again led the way. And now, in my freedom, I found I could make double speed with double safety. Then a voice spoke inwardly: "Ah, foolish willful heart, hast thou indeed given up thy last burden? Thou hast no need to carry them, nor even the right." I saw it all in a flash, and then as I leaped lightly on from rock to rock, down the steep mountain side, I said within myself: "And ever thus will I follow Jesus my Guide and Burden-bearer. I will cast all my care upon him, for he careth for me."—Sarah F. Smiley.

The "power that maketh for iniquity" has gained no inconsiderable advantage from this trial. Instead of the revelations of the Pall Mall Gazette overstating the case, we have reason to know that it was greatly understated, although enough to call forth strong public indignatio n. It is the trick of the advocates of immorality just now to represent the revelations as all based upon the evidence of Jarrett. Let us not be misled. There were altogether fifty-seven columns of closely printed matter in the narratives given. If every line for which Rebecca Jarrett is directly or indirectly responsible were expunged, there would remain fifty-four columns intact.—London Freeman.

THE BRITISH GOVERNMENT.

The fathers and mothers of the little readers of the Cynosure are just now greatly interested in what is being done by the statesmen and politicians of England. William Ewart Gladstone, now an old man of 75 years, has just been called by Queen Victoria to administer the British government as premier. This is the third time he has had this great honor—of being really chief ruler of the greatest nation on earth. No other man has been so honored. Young people like to know something of the public affairs that interest their parents, and so the Cynosure gives them a little sketch collated from a long article in the St. Nicholas, by Edmund Alton, who is writing a series of articles for that magazine on our government at Washington:

"As far back as 1536, in the reign of Henry VIII., the dominion of Wales was merged into the Kingdom of England, to which the Isle of Man and other adjacent territory already belonged; on the 1st day of May, 1707, the Kingdoms of England and Scotland were, by formal articles of union, united into one kingdom under the name of Great Britian; and by similiar articles, which took effect on the 1st day of January, 1801, Great Britian and Ireland were joined into one kingdom, under the name of The United Kingdom of Great Britian and Ireland, with one common government seated at London. This common government is in the form of a limited monarchy, with a Queen (whose title is hereditary, and whose power is limited), a Parliament, and a Judiciary. By the articles of union, both Scotland and Ireland were stripped of their local governments; they accepted as their monarch the king then occupying the English throne, and agreed to the 'succession' (that is, the line of hereditary reigning sovereigns), as the English Parliament had declared it. In short, the English Parliament merely opened its door to allow a certain number of representatives from Ireland and Scotland to enter, and, with this exception and its extended power, the English government went on as if nothing had happened. So that to-day, after centuries of disturbance and struggle, the authority of that government is supreme not only in the Kingdom, but in the colonies and dependencies throughout the world.

"The people of Great Britian are divided, politically, into two general classes called the clergy and the laity. The former comprises the ecclesiastics of the established Protestant Episcopal church. The laity is subdivided into three classes, the military, the maritime, and the civil state. The military and maritime states are composed of the army and navy—the soldiers and sailors in the public service. The civil state is subdivided into two classes: the nobility, a class especially honored with titles and rank derived from the Crown and chiefly hereditary; and the commonalty, embracing all other subjects of the kingdom. The clergy, the nobility, and the commonalty are represented in the administration of the common government, yet not with equal power; and these class distinctions arrange the nation into one long line, with a regular order of superiority recognized and observed in social as well as official circles. First in the order of precedence, as it is called, stands 'Her Majesty the Queen,' or the reigning sovereign. The heir apparent to the throne ('His Royal Highness the Prince of Wales,' as he is designated) stands second; next come other princes and princesses of the blood royal; then follows the Archbishop of Canterbury, and then a regular succession down through the line of clergy, nobility and commonalty, with slight variations in favor of high officers of the state, ending with 'gentlemen, yeomen, tradesmen, artificers and laborers.'

"In England, three great powers of government are not distributed among the distinct and independent departments. The Parliament, as the legislative department of the government, is the supreme power in the realm; yet, its authority is more than simply legislative. It possesses judicial functions, and practically wields all the rights and powers of the sovereign. The title to the crown is hereditary; the succession, however, may be changed by Parliament at any time. As the head of the nation, the Queen is, in theory, vested with the executive powers of government, and she is also part of the legislative power, but, as a fact, the executive functions of the Crown are exercised by the ministry, or cabinet, chosen from the political party that has a majority in the House of Commons. They exercise these functions in the name of the sovereign. The Queen is said to be the fountain of honor, of justice, and (by a feudal fiction invented by William the Conqueror) of property. But the real, personal power of the sovereign in the important affairs of government has long since been absorbed by Parliament and the courts.

"The courts of justice are composed of judges selected from the legal profession. In theory, they are the agents of the crown; they are created by the exercise of the royal prerogative, in the hands of the parliamentary ministry, and are, in fact, subordinate only to the supremacy of Parliament itself.

"The Parliament consists of the Crown and the 'three estates of the realm,'—the Lords spiritual, the Lords temporal, and the Commons. It is divided into two bodies—the House of Lords and the House of Commons. The House of Lords is composed of the first two estates of the realm—the Lords spiritual and the Lords temporal. The Lords spiritual are the archbishops and the bishops; they represent the church. The Lords temporal are the dukes, the marquises, earls, viscounts, and barons; they represent the peerage, or nobility. Most of the English peers sit in Parliament by right of inheritance; but, as in the case of the Lords spiritual, their titles are derived from the Crown, and their number may be increased at any time by the sovereign, acting through the ministry. The peerage of Scotland is entitled to elect a certain number of its members to seats in the House of Lords, but the terms of such members expire upon the dissolution of a Parliament. The peerage of Ireland has a similar right; the members elected by it, however, holding their seats for life.

"The House of Commons is composed of the third estate, and consists of knights, citizens, and burgesses, representing the counties, cities, and boroughs of the kingdom. They are elected by the great body of the commonalty, subject to certain property and other restrictions.

"The Queen may also dissolve the Parliament, the effect of a dissolution being to bring it to an absolute end; and then a new Parliament must be summoned and the members of the House of Commons elected as before. The duration of a Parliament depends upon enactments, and, unless dissolved, it may, under the present law, run for seven years. When dissolved, there is no specified time for convening another.

"The House of Commons is practically the Parliament. Its majority controls the ministry, and it can force the House of Lords into an agreement by the threat of creating new peers. This power of the Lower House, therefore, proves that the commonalty of the kingdom really run the government.

"Enough has been said, perhaps, to show that the Queen has little real power. She can declare war, but the ministry does it for her. Hence the power is that of Parliament. She is supposed to have a 'veto' power over parlimentary legislation; but she never exercises it. Her privileges extend to her private revenue and personal security. She receives a large income, has noble palaces and a brilliant court. It would be treason to attempt her life. So also would it be treason to attack other high persons in the realm."

TEMPERANCE.

THE KITCHEN SCHOOL OF PHILOSOPHY.

My servant is a German girl, bright and intelligent, a devoted Roman Cataolic; my laundress is a colored woman but a few weeks ago from South Carolina, a "Methodist sister," happily married to a "Methodist brother," both husband and wife earnest temperance advocates, and in the past loyal to the Republican party, which they say "set them free." This morning found the German girl and the colored woman eurnestly talking, and as I caught the words from the "colored sister's" free lips, "Oh, I tell you, I wish them colored folks down home knew all about this new party and what it wants to do for them! Wouldn't they work and vote for it!" I could not stay out any longer, so I "jined the meetin'." Here was our school of philosophy—German, African and Anglo-Saxon joined in heart touching the curse of intemperance and the true freedom for all people.

The German girl, in answer to my question, said: "Yes, indeed, Miss Mary, my mother and every German woman would vote the saloons away if they had a chance. My mother has wept so often because of the beer that she hates it, and my grandmother left her old home in Germany to get my grandfather away from his companions and to save her children and husband from being beer drunkards."—Union Signal.

One bushel of the best corn will only make three gallons of whiskey; but a little strychnine raises the quantity to four gallons. This is so universal that four gallons is now an average yield. One drug house in London in 1867 sold more strychnine to a liquor house than the whole city could use medicinally. Mark the progress in evil. A distiller adds a fourth by the use of strychnine. The wholesaler takes this adulterated stock and doubles it by the use of belladonna. This brings ten cents a drink, and here is the motive power. This is the practice all over the land.—Dr. Fowler.

The Decatur (Illinois) Sentinel says: "Cornell, a town in Livingston county, during a dram-shop rule of ten years, paid a pauper bill of $1,100 a year. Then it changed to prohibition and at the end of four years the pauper expense was reduced to $2.50, which was paid for medicine. Yet some people claim that prohibition doesn't pay."

It is stated that, "as the immediate and direct result of the ten unions established by Mrs. Leavitt in New Zealand that country is deciding to abolish bar maids, and petitions are being circulated asking parliament to prevent liquor sales to children, and to give woman an equal ballot with man on the liquor question."

Senator Colquitt has declared in a public address that he will introduce a bill into the Senate to allow the people of the District of Columbia to vote upon the liquor question, and will press it to a vote. It will be interesting to see how the Conscript Fathers vote on allowing the people to say what they wish.—Christian Advocate.

It is stated that Chinese firemen are now employed on all the Glen Line steamers trading between London and China. The engineers were averse to employing Asiatics, but were compelled to do so, on account of the unreliability, through drink, of the British firemen. The gain is not represented as consisting in saving of wages by employing Chinamen, but in the absolute regularity with which they performed their work.

The prosecuting attorney of Jersey City, Mr. Winfield, has been greatly annoyed by the opening of a saloon within a stone's throw of his residence on Danforth avenue, and the proprietor, in spite of all protests, has persisted in keeping it open on Sundays. Not being able to suppress the nuisance either by an appeal to the saloon-keeper, or by invoking the action of the grand jury, Mr. Winfield at last determined to prosecute the man for selling without a license. This is a new issue which will be pressed on the ground that as the sale of liquor on Sunday is prohibited by a State law, a license given by the city to sell liquor cannot protect a man in selling on Sunday.

The National Brewers' Association is using its influence with members of Congress to prevent the admission of Dakota as a State. The reason for their opposition is not far to seek.

When the constitution of the proposed State was submitted to the people several provisions were submitted separately. One of these, Article 24, prohibits forever the manufacture and sale of intoxicating liquors. It was adopted by the small majority of 233. But it must be remembered that while 36,000 votes were cast, there were 30,000 citizens engaged in threshing and plowing at a distance from the polls, who did not cast their votes. The larger towns cast their full votes, so that we may say that a very full vote against prohibition was cast, while the vote for prohibition was small. Prohibitory legislation can be enforced in Dakota, as it contains not a city of ten thousand inhabitants, and Minnehaha county, which contains the largest city (Sioux Falls), voted for prohibition.

The enemies of Dakota are doing their best to convey the impression that the people of the proposed State are not agreed among themselves in desire for a State Government. This is certainly not the case. The vote stood 30,000 in favor of the State Constitution, to 6,000 against it.

A dastardly attempt was made by a saloon-keeper, on the 13th inst., to assassinate Hon. J. B. Livingstone, president judge of the courts of Lancaster Co., Pa., at his home in Lancaster, Pa. He boldly called at the Judge's residence, knocked, was admitted into the library, when he presented a revolver with an oath, and a deadly struggle ensued, the Judge succeeding in disarming his antagonist, and securing him as a prisoner. This is the price the Judge had to pay for refusing to grant his assailant a license.

A Philadelphia girl declined to "kiss the book" before a magistrate because the witness who preceded her had sore lips and the one before that chewed tobacco. She was sensible and her testimony could be relied upon without this formula of a forgotten age.

THE CHURCHES.

—The Free Methodist publishes the names of thirteen missionaries belonging to that denomination or receiving most of their support from it. They are located at Burhanpur, Indiа; Mourovia, Liberia; Inhambane, E. Africa; and Estcourt, Natal, S. Africa. These are independent or faith missions.

—Christian, make a note of this: The net gain in communicants the past year was nine times greater in foreign missions than in Christendom!

—A large excursion of Quakers from the United States are now in the City of Mexico, and as part of their errand a permanent Quaker mission will be established in that city. Among the party are some prominent members of the Society of Friends in Chicago. Editor Pritchard of the Christian Worker is one of them.

—Rev. C. W. Hiatt, pastor of the High Street church, Columbus, Ohio, is rejoicing amid the confessions of many new-born souls. Special meetings have been held for some four or five weeks. There has never been such an awakening in the history of the church. Of the fifty or more conversions about one-half are adults.

—Dr. George F. Pentescost has been conducting special services in the Reformed church, at Fifth Avenue and Fifty-eight street, New York, every afternoon and evening, except Saturday and Sunday, from January 25th to February 5th. The singing was led by Mr. and Mrs. George C. Stebbins.

—Rev. C. L. Goodell, pastor of the Pilgrim Congregational church, delivered a lecture, Sabbath evening Jan. 31st, on "The Holy Land" at his church, entertaining one of the largest audiences ever gathered there. After returning home from the lecture he fainted away, and afterwards had a stroke of apoplexy. Physicians were immediately summoned, and they used all means in their power to restore their patient to consciousness. The efforts, however, were unavailing, and at 8 o'clock Monday morning he died. Five years ago he was struck on the head with a slung-shot, while on the street on his way home in the evening. His death resulted from that blow. Dr. Goodell had occupied the pulpit of Pilgrim church some twelve or more years, and was one of the most popular clergymen in the city. As a writer and preacher he was one of the first Christian ministers in the country. He was exceedingly attractive as a man, by his genial manner, his humor, his terse sayings, and his abounding sympathy toward all classes of men. He was a well-known and active supporter of mission and revival work, and in the fall of 1883 President J. Blanchard presented the cause of the national recognition of Christ in a Sabbath sermon in his church.

—A very successful revival meeting was conducted a short time ago in College Hall, New Haven, Conn., under the care of Colonel Geo. R. Clark, of the Pacific Garden Mission, Chicago, assisted by Mr. and Mrs. Stebbins, of Brooklyn, N. Y.

—W. F. Davis, the evangelist of Chelsea, Mass., who presumed to preach the Gospel on Boston Common, along with H. L. Hastings and Dr. Gordon, without permission from the authorities of that so-called Christian city, has been fined $40 and costs for his audacity.

—The Illinois Y. M. C. A. gives some startling statistics. There are in the State 600,000 young men between the ages of sixteen and forty. At least 550,000 are non-church members. Ninety-five per cent of the frequenters of saloons are young men. Sixty-nine per cent of the convicts in Joliet are under 30 years of age. In fifty-seven only of the 313 towns and cities is there any special organization to care for this neglected class. To reach these young men the independent associations united in 1880 to carry on a State work. Their success has been remarkable. In important features the gain has been 200 per cent. Over 1,000 professed conversions were the direct results of this work for the year ending October, 1885.

—A young man on the Island of St. Mary's, one of the Azores, who before his conversion was addicted to gambling and worse evils, has lately been arrested for the crime of telling his neighbors of Jesus, the only Saviour of sinners.

—There are in Italy some 300 churches and mission stations of the evangelical order, and it is estimated that 10,000 of the members have been converted from Roman Catholicism.

—The distinguished Oriental traveler, Prof. Arminius Vambery, says the "only two mediums in the world capable of bringing a better life into the dark recesses of barbarism is the missionary and the bale of goods." The bale of goods invariably follows the missionary as the records of every mission show.

—A colporteur who has been laboring for two years in Seoul, the capital of Corea, reports seventy desirous of joiuing a Christian church, and one in another city reports tweuty. The last door closed against the Gospel is opeuing wide in Corea.

—The Loudou Tract Society has sent out to the Fiji Islands an edition of 3,000 of an attractive volume prepared by Rev. J. Calvert, for nearly forty years a missionary there.

—The treasurer of the Presbyterian Board of Foreigu Missions sends out the welcome announcement that its debt incurred last year is all gone, leaving but $10,700 incurred the previous year.

—A clergyman near Philadelphia being disturbed in the singiug of the doxology by the men putting on their overcoats, quietly said: "Now that you have your overcoats on we will sing the doxology over again."

—There are now in Cambridge University forty men or more who are looking toward missionary work in the foreign field; a large number, also, in Oxford. From these old universities fresh streams are issuing forth to gladden the desert wastes.

—Since its organization, the Chinese church in San Francisco has received on confession of faith 158 persons. The Oakland church reports an encouraging attendance at the six weekly services. There is also a Chinese Presbyterian church in connection with the Presbytery of Los Angeles, and mission work is carried on in connection with the Presbyterian churches of Placerville, Sacramento, Napa, San Rafael, Alameda, San Jose, San Buenaventura, Anaheim, Orange, etc..

—While the average proportion of churches to the population in the United States is one to every 516 people, it is in Boston one to 1,600, in New York one to 2,400, in St. Louis one to 2,800, while in some it is but one to every 5,000.

—Bishop Warren, of the Methodist Episcopal church, says Utah is the hardest missionary field the church has. We have had fifty missionaries who have from time to time gone there full of zeal, full of faith and the Holy Ghost. One by one they have been discouraged. But the new day has dawned, the governmeut is asserting its power.

—The Government of Austria has given the American Board the right to buy or build halls for Bible lectures anywhere in Bohemia. This is an important concession, and shows the growing favor of the authorities toward evangelical work.

—Rev. Mr. Johnson, Presbyterian missionary to India, has taken temporarily the department of theology in the Western Theological Seminary, Allegheny, in the absence of Prof. S. H. Kellogg, who has gone to Florida on account of ill health. When Dr. Kellogg was called to his professorship he was just returned from missionary work in India.

—Rev. Dr. Clark, in reviewing the work of the American Board of Foreign Missions during the last twenty-five years, says: "As a result we note an advance in churches from 103 to 292; of church members from 3,500 to over 23,000; of pupils in common schools from 8,000 to 85,000; of native pastors from 25 to 147, not to speak of the growth of a large and efficient body of native preachers and teachers acting as colaborers with us in the evangelization of their people."

—The native pastor at Lagos, West Africa, reports as the result of a recent spiritual revival in his large Yoruba congregation that not less than 436 persons, young and old, "have professed to receive forgiveness and peace."

—There is a school in London called the Zenana and Medical school, from which sixty women have been sent out as missionaries to India in connection with the Baptist, Episcopal and Wesleyan churches. Lady Dufferein, wife of the Viceroy of India, is said to be enthusiastic in advocacy of sending more well-trained women as missionaries to that country.

—Among the Mohammedans of India notable conversions to Christianity occurred last year—a famous preacher against Christianity at Calcutta, a medical man in the Punjab, a medical man from Bombay, and others from Peshawar, Madras and in Cashmere. These are only prominent cases among many others.

—According to Dr. Wilder, of Princeton, whose statistics are generally correct, the growth of the Christian church in Europe and America last year, was only 155,553, about one-half of one per cent; while the mission churches, sustained by these home churches, increased 127,149, about nineteen per cent. The home churches only exceeded the foreign churches by 28,404 increase. And this, notwithstanding the fewness of the laborers, and the opposition of the ignorant and depraved heathen around them. Truly, it is not by might, nor by power, but by my Spirit, saith the Lord. If the church at home increased as fast as the church in heathen lands last year, when the next census is taken, we would have twenty millions of evangelical Christians in our land.—Christian Press.

—The "Herald," the mission ship of the Moravians on the Mosquito Coast of Nicaraugua, Central America, has been damaged beyond repair. A new ship is indispensable, as there are no practicable highways, and all communication has to be by water. It will cost $3,000, but that sum is beyond the power of the native Christians to raise.

LODGE NOTES.

—Ex-Governor Lucius Fairchild, of Wisconsin, was Thursday elected Department Commander by the G. A. R. convention at Milwaukee. Mr. Fairchild is a Freemason, and took part in the establishment of the Egyptian Masonic rite in Chicago in 1868–71. Fairchild was then a K T., a 90 degree Mason and "Grand Captain of the Guard."

—The Trade and Labor Assembly of this city finds that its tobacco using members interfere with the performance of business and so prohibited smoking.

—The same body has unanimously ratified the action of the State Assembly of Knights of Labor, recently held in Decatur in relation to the boycotting of prison made boots and shoes, and has added a committee on Contract Convict Labor to the list of standing committees.

—The colored Masonic lodges of Buffalo, N. Y., about a year ago consisted of St. John's lodge 16, F. and A. M. with a membership of forty; Erie Chapter 10, Royal Arch Mason, twenty-one members; Simon Commandery 10, Knights Templar, twenty two sir knights; Rose Croix, Scottish Rite, seventeen members. Beside these there are six Sublime Princes of the Royal Secret.

—Charles E. Newton, a colored Mason, 32nd degree, tells the Buffalo Evening Republic that "The colored Masons in the South are making rapid progress: in fact, they are more progressive there than the white Masons. They have fine lodge rooms, the finest I have ever visited, and they have the best drilled commanderies there in the country. Their ranks are filled with the most intelligent portion of the colored population of the South, physicians, lawyers, judges, and senators are all Masons. To the best of my information there are now about 130,000 colored Masons in this country, fully one-half of whom are working south of Mason and Dixon's line. The best regulated grand bodies I have been in, and the best informed men I have met are connected with the order in the State of Ohio."

—The Louisville Masonic Home Journal publishes in one number the names and descriptions of over thirty persons which are designated as Masonic imposters.

—The State Grand Council of Royal Templars of Temperance held their seventh annual session in Erie, Pa. January 26th. Their report shows a membership of 2,760, of which 1,138 are beneficiary females. The figures show a loss of 113 members. Two councils were instituted during the year, one at McKeesport and the other at Wayne, Erie county. The councils at Bradford, Lincoln, and Allegheny City surrendered their charters, while those at Waterford, Ridgeway, Susquehanna, Brockwayville, and Dubois virtually died out. The charters of four other councils will be revoked. This leaves sixty councils in good standing in Pennsylvania.

THE
A NEATLY PRINTED SIXTEEN PAGE WEEKLY JOURNAL, UNSECTARIAN AND OPPOSED TO SECRET SOCIETIES.

THE POLE STAR OF REFORM.

EVERY Christian, every Prohibitionist and every Patriot should read it for the following among other reasons:

1. Because it meets the wants of the general public by giving in brief the latest reliable information on all questions of Reform, having the special object of exposing and opposing organized secrecy. Besides able editorial, contributed and selected articles upon this topic, which is of more than national importance, it has interesting sketches of progress and incidents from the reform lecturers in all parts of the country, reform news and notes, letters from the Old World, etc., etc. It is the especial organ of this movement in America—a movement which is sustained by the utterances of some of the ablest statesmen and divines whom the country has produced. Every person interested in either the family, government, or religion—the most sacred interests of humanity—is directly affected by secret societies, and needs to keep posted in this movement.

2. Because it is uncompromising on ALL questions of the day. On temperance, tobacco, Sabbath desecration, Mormonism, the Southern and Indian questions, civil-service reform, monopolies, the rights of labor, and every other question, its only aim is to be RIGHT, and advocate the TRUTH. It is hence FEARLESS and OUTSPOKEN.

2. Because it emphasizes the fact that political action should be directed by conscience enlightened by the WORD and SPIRIT of God and that Christ must be acknowledged KING of NATIONS, and presents a platform epitomizing the science of civil governments based on the supreme authority of the DIVINE WORD.

4. Because, in addition to these features, it contains a choice selection of wholesome reading for the family, from oldest to youngest, with religious and secular news, market reports, etc.

It is now owned and published by the

THE SECRET EMPIRE.

[Mackey gives thirty-seven different rites in Masonry. Those which are best known in this country are the Ancient York Rite of three degrees; the Modern York or American of nine degrees, to which are generally added the three degrees of Templar Masonry—which latter degrees can be taken by an R. A. Mason, omitting the 8th and 9th degrees;—the Rite of Perfection, which is the same as far as it goes (25th degree) as the Scottish Rite of 33 degrees.]

BUSINESS.

J. W. Thompson, Dadeville, Mo., sends in a good list of subscribers which would have reached us sooner but for the sickness of Bro. Thompson.

Rev. D. A. Johnston writes: "The Cynosure is a great help to me. I am fighting the secret orders here, both in the English and Swedish languages. The American ministers here are, to a great extent, mum on this question."

Bro. Johnston received the Cynosure free at first, but now subscribes for it because he finds it a "great help." Is your minister supplied with this help?

F. R. Hill writes: The Cynosure is gaining ground wherever it is read. I might safely say that two thirds of all the ministers in the M. E. church have ceased paying up their dues, and have taken a back seat. I am looking for the time when ministers are convinced of the wickedness of idolatry. Will call upon them to warn the people against anything that is sinful. I think I will be able to send you a few subscribers this year.

From Geo. W. Clark, the "Liberty Singer:" "I wish to compliment the N. C. A. on the nice appearance of the song book, 'Lyrics about the Secret Lodge.' It is really 'well done,' and makes a very respectable showing. It ought to be got into all our reform families, and every other family, for that matter, where there are any to sing."

M. L. Worcester writes: "Those two song books came to hand last Saturday. I am pleased with them, and now order six more. I can afford to give these away better than the others."

If you have none of these books already send 10 cents for one, or better, get up an American party choir and send $1 for a dozen "Lyrics about the Secret Lodge." Address W. I. Phillips, 221 W. Madison street, Chicago, Ill.

FARM NOTES.

WHAT A YOUNG LADY DID.

The Delaware county (Pa.) American gives the following account of a young lady's success in poultry raising:

"In Concord a farmer's daughter during the past year had the care of his poultry-yard. In the spring she commenced with about sixty fowls of the common breeds, including one Dominique rooster and several hens of that stock. She also had two roosters of the patridge Cochin breed. From these she raised three hundred and fifty chickens. When young she fed them on cracked corn, but when fattening them gave whole corn and Indian-meal. During the season she sold eggs to the amount of $90, and from September 20th to January 17th she got ready for the market one hundred and fifty pairs of chickens, which she sold for $260. She thinks the Dominique much the best for market, but they are not hardy when young. She has some hens of the patridge Cochin breed which weigh six, seven, and eight pounds each. It will be seen from this statement what may be done by proper attention to poultry, the profits being perhaps larger than any branch of farming. It also shows that the business is one in which females may engage with success. The time occupied in caring for sixty to a hundred hens does not average more than an hour or two a day. The exercise is light and pleasant, and the change from household duties rather agreeable than otherwise. Indeed, we consider the poultry business, as an occupation, both profitable and interesting. Gathering eggs, setting the hens, watching the hatching, and tending the young, has a charm which, in connection with the profit, is calculated to please every lover of nature's great working world."

POULTRY FOR THE FARM.

The continual advocacy of fancy poultry for common farm use is an error. The poultry papers, and most agricultural papers, advise the breeding of certain pure breeds, as if they possessed merits superior to the barn-door fowls, and common poultry. This is a mistake. No one advocates the use of thorough-bred horses, well-bred trotters, pure Percherons or Clydes, pure-bred pigs, or sheep, or cattle, to the exclusion of common ones, but farmers are urged to improve their common stock by breeding-up, by gradually introducing better blood and breeding, with some definite aim. Thus our common mixed sheep, which are regular breeders, good mothers, and have plenty of milk, are crossed with pure rams of one of the established breeds. If size is wanted, with long wool, the Cotswald is perhaps employed; if the wool is to be improved in fineness without so much reference so the mutton, one of the Merino breeds will be selected, while if early lambs of fine quality are desired, one of the Down breeds is chosen by the raiser. This is precisely the course which should be followed by farmers in poultry raising. The advantage of grading up common poultry is, however, not so profitable in most cases as cross breeding. This is, properly, the interbreeding of two pure varieties. We have, however, usually no pure breed of fowls upon the farm, and of course wish to utilize those which we have Therefore, the first thing to do is to grade up the flock. After two or three years, when they have the looks and qualities of pure-breeds, the hens may be crossed with cocks of another breed, and then most of the advantages of cross-breeding will be realized. In this use of pure-bred cocks which we recommend, no male bird should run with the same flock more than two years. If he is healthy and vigorous, and his progeny of the first year take strongly after him, in form as well as feather, he may well be kept the second year to run with pullets of his own get. After three years the blood of the original flock will be reduced to one-eighth; after four years to one-sixteenth.—American Agriculturist.

COMPARISON OF BREEDS OF POULTRY.—Isaac Lynde, of Ohio, writing to the Poultry World, describes an experiment tried by him last season. At the 1st of September he took ten pullets, each of five breeds, each within a week of six months old, and placed them in yards forty feet square, with comfortable houses. For the next six months he kept an account of their food and egg production, with the following results: The Dark Brahmas ate 369½ quarts of corn, oats, and wheat-screening, laid 605 eggs, and weighed 70 pounds. The Buff Cochins ate 406 quarts, laid 591 eggs, and weighed 73 pounds. The Gray Dorkings ate 309½ quarts, laid 524 eggs, and weighed 59½ pounds. The Houdans ate 214½ quarts, laid 783 eggs, and weighed 45½ pounds. The Leghorns ate 231½ quarts, laid 807 eggs, and weighed 36½ pounds. It will be seen by the above comparison that the Leghorns laid the greatest number of eggs with the smallest weight.

A correspondent of the Poultry World, Doyleston, Pa., says: "I have had many breeds of fowls during the last ten years, but none that have given as great satisfaction as the Creoles. As layers, they are most prolific of any known variety. They are plump, compact and beautifully marked, which, added to their great reputation as layers, should commend them as general favorites. There has been a great deal said by some about the Creoles not being winter layers. Where this is the case, there must be bad management somewhere on the part of the owner. A single hen, under favorable circumstances, will lay from 200 to 300 eggs in a year."

A writer in the Poultry Yard says: Having had all the breeds of fowls, I do not hesitate to advise those who wish to keep fowls in a village or city to keep nothing but Light Brahmas. Get the best and purest you can find, and keep them so. Don't mix them up. They are both winter and summer layers, are large, quiet, will not fly over a fence two feet high, and the best fowls for the table I ever saw. If I was on a farm I might conclude to keep either Plymouth Rocks or Dominiques. The latter are good fowls; furnish an abundance of eggs, and are a splendid market fowl. Don't keep Brahmas for eggs when they are over two years old.

Middlings and fine feed are usually sold for several dollars a ton more than the price of bran, but the laboratory work teaches that though finer and more floury the value is not above from $1.75 to $2 higher than that of the coarser grades. The finer feeds are a trifle more digestible, and may be more palatable to the animals, in which case the laboratory and the cow may not fully agree as to actual values. The manurial value, however, of bran is $1 or more per ton greater than that of middlings. The manurial value of all these products is much nearer that of commercial fertilizers than most farmers realize. A carload of bran (twelve tons) contains as much fertilizing material as is in three tons of ground fish, 1,200 pounds of Charleston ground rock, and 700 pounds of muriate of potash.

BETWEEN TWO OPINIONS.

BY E. E. FLAGG.

Author of "Holden with Cords," "A Sunny Life," "Little People," etc.

This latest and best of Miss Flagg's works is now ready in handsome print, neatly bound. The story begins in a quiet New England home, and paints its homely joys with a delicacy and truthfulness worthy the hand of Harriet Beecher Stowe. The scene then changes to a thriving, growing, palpitating young Western city, and with great power and startling accuracy the writer leads us behind the scenes that we may see the machinery that works the liquor traffic and labor troubles. The story of the strike, the mob, the attempted assassination, the saloon-keeper's wiles, the curse of his trade, the power of the Christian faith to change him to a messenger of mercy, the criminal and the hidden power that shields him from justice, the land robbers tricks, the dark and secret conspiracies of the lodge—these and all the incidents of the book are portrayed with rare tact and great power of description. It is emphatically a book for the hour. And what is better and yet more striking, the incidents are facts, and every one a powerful and convincing argument against the lodge and the saloon.

Every temperance man and woman should read this book. No temperance story like it was ever planned, much less ably executed. A wonderful light is thrown upon the difficulties in the way of prohibition. Learn how they may be avoided.

Every one who loves to read a good story, chaste and elegant in expression, pure in thought, true in incident, deeply interesting in its narrative, should read this book.

READ THESE NOTICES FROM THE PRESS:

Law and Order, Boston.

The book takes high ground for prohibition of the liquor curse, for woman's ballot for home protection, and for a better and more honest brotherhood than is forced by their obligations upon the members of secret orders. It is, therefore, a valuable book for several large classes of American readers.

Christian Instructor, Philadelphia.

There are important questions pressing upon American politics to-day; two of them are prohibition and the labor question as connected with the secret unions of workingmen. This work is an expose of the twin evils, secret societies and the saloons. The truths are given in the form of a story; not startling, but thrilling experiences of home life that are vouched for as facts. The evidences presented of the impossibility of reaching the saloon keeper so long as he and the officers of the law are sworn brothers in the den of some secret society, are conclusive enough to awaken the most careless and obtuse member of society. It is a valuable book for the masses to read.

Evangelist, Berea, Kentucky.

The object of the volume is to illustrate the practical workings of Secret Societies, and especially to show how the Lodge upholds the saloon, and this very important design is wrought out with much skill, clearness and power. By reading it temperance people may learn much about the difficulties in the way of prohibition.

The Standard, Chicago.

It is written in the interests of reform, more especially temperance and Anti-masonry. The title of the story suggests the special aim of it, which is to protest against all "halting between two opinions;" in other words, is a plea for radicalism. The story is vigorously written, and will interest even readers who do not altogether believe in its doctrine.

The Pacific, San Francisco.

It is a story intended to do service against the saloons, and in favor of Womans' Christian Temperance work, and especially against the secret orders—Freemasons, Odd-fellows, the Knights of Labor, etc. No reflecting man can doubt that any combination of picked classes and individuals is liable to great abuse. It is obvious, also, that secret orders are specially capable of being used in a selfish and unprincipled way. Whether because of this liability the method of reform should be one that would exterminate such orders, is a question. But it must do good to have books written which show the excesses and dangers to which these societies are exposed; for our civilization is honey-combed with them, and in many places citizens, who really don't care for them, appear to be obliged to join a half dozen of them for fear of losing some business.

The Free Methodist, Chicago.

"Between Two Opinions" is a story, its incidents vouched for as facts, which presents a powerful argument on these questions and must attract thousands of readers among our thinking and observant people. The plot of the story is neither startling nor novel, but it develops a wonderful strength in following the experiences of people in the common, every-day walks of life.

Free Press, Birmingham, Iowa.

It differs from the popular story, "The Bread-winners" of a year ago. It greatly differs from that book in that it is written from the Christian standpoint, and its beautiful and touching descriptions of home life and home duties and heroic self-denyings will waken a responsive echo in every heart, that has not by dissipation lost the taste for the pure joys of home.

The Religious Telescope, Dayton.

The author, Miss Flagg, is a brilliant writer. The stirring questions in American politics are undoubtedly prohibition and the labor movement as championed by the secret unions of working men, which direct the strikes that with more and more frequency occur in our cities. "Between Two Opinions" is a story, its incidents vouched for as facts, which presents a powerful argument on these questions, and must attract thousands of readers among our thinking people.

The Christian Conservator, Dayton.

This is a charming book, written in an attractive manner. It is so full of sunshine and so radiant with light that one is enlightened, warmed, and, before they are conscious of it, set against the lodge. The style gleams, glows and sparkles. It is dignified and simple. It is the right book to place in the hands of your wife or daughter to superinduce co-operation with you in anti-secrecy work. Every minister's wife should read it, and then, if her husband is not an Anti-mason, he should take his turn next and become one.

The American, Washington.

We are reading, in spare moments, Miss Flagg's new book, "Between Two Opinions," and the estimate we have thus far put upon it is that it is masterly both in style and argument. One is insensibly made to feel that he is reading facts and not fiction; that the book is not a play upon the imagination but an unraveling of mysterious circumstances which have an important bearing upon current events. It is a book for thoughtful men and women to read, not light in style, yet pleasing in narrative; not startling in plot, yet full of bright surprises and interesting episodes. Written to discuss profound themes, it nevertheless contains touches of true domestic sentiment and vibrates sweet and tender chords.

Sing the Reform

Into the Hearts of the People!

One of the most popular books against lodgery is the latest compilation of GEORGE W. CLARK, the Minstrel of Reform, a forty-page book of soul-stirring, conscience-awakening songs appropriate for lectures, conventions and the home circle. What can add more to the interest of a meeting than a song well sung? What means will more quickly overthrow the power of the secret lodges than to sing the truth into the popular conscience?

HOME AND HEALTH.

WRAPS FOR SCHOOL CHILDREN.

In sending our little children to school we can greatly add to their health and comfort if we make sure that they have overshoes that they can easily put on themselves, sacks that are buttoned without difficulty, and, in general, garments that they can manage themselves. We send them to school in the morning all properly "bundled up," and rest assured that the chilly winds and damp walks cannot affect them. But go by that school in recess, and you will find half the children insufficiently clad, simply because they cannot put on their own garments. Even the best of schools cannot attend to this matter for thirty or more children each recess, unless a special attendent is appointed for the purpose. In the kindergarten these matters are looked after as a part of the general care, but in the common primary school it is often impossible to attend to them, and we find our carefully dressed children with widely-blowing cloaks and capes, and overshoes in hand, in the bleak north wind or the driving rain. This is simply because we have provided them with such elaborate garments that they can be put on only by experienced hands, or have failed to teach them to fasten what they have. If we attend to this, many of the usual mysterious coughs and colds will fail to appear the next winter. We all remember the little child with a mysterious cold, in Hans Anderson's story of the "Elder-Bush," to whom "the merry old man who lived at the top of the house" would not tell a story till the boy had answered this question: "How deep is the gutter in the street opposite that you pass through in going to school?" He is merely the type of an ordinary child; not by any means a bad child either, only like most other children, quite forgetful of consequences.—Babyhood.

GOOD MANNERS AT TABLE.

Eat without noise and the lips nearly closed. To make any sound with the mouth in eating or drinking is disgusting. Do not lean the elbows or lay the hands or arms on the table, and play with knives or forks or glasses, or longue or tilt back the chair. Do not scrape your plate, or tilt it up to get the last drop, or wipe it dry with a piece of bread. It is bad taste to mix the food on your plate; it shows a coarse appetite and want of a nice appreciation of flavor of each particular dish. The mouth should not go to the food, but the food to the mouth. It is very uncouth to take up chicken bones in the fingers when eating the meat from them.

When dining at your friend's house, it is not considered refined to talk much about the food, or to watch dishes as they are uncovered, or blow soup to cool it, or soak up gravy with bread. A loud voice and uprorous laugh are extremely out of place in the dining-room; as is also any conversation that could possibly be offensive to the most refined taste. It is no place to talk of distempers or medical treatment, though some obtuse people drag in such topics wholly regardless of the feelings of others.

Never sneeze at the table. It can always be prevented by pressing the finger firmly against the upper lip, under the nose. Talk in a low, but perfectly distinct tone to your neighbor, but, avoid anything that might seem like private conversation.

Whatever renders a person disgraceful, should in common charity be avoided. Nowhere is the distinction between the gentleman and the boor more marked than at the table. To have good manners set well, they need to be every-day, home affairs; and mothers greatly err, who allow children to grow up without them.

ALL-NIGHT INHALATION!

"A positive revolution in the treatment of Air-Passage Diseases of the Nose, Throat, and Lungs, and, for the purpose designed, as valuable a discovery as vaccination."

THE PILLOW-INHALER.

A Speedy, Positive and Permanent Cure for Catarrh, Bronchitis, Asthma, and Incipient Consumption.

It is a hair pillow, with reservoirs of evaporating liquid, the fumes or vapor of which is inhaled all night long, whilst sleeping as usual, and without any discomfort. It is used only at night, and is perfectly safe to the most delicate. There is no stomach-dosing, douching or snuffing; but just as a smoky lamp will leave a deposit on a whitened wall so the PILLOW-INHALER, for say eight hours at a time, spreads a powerful healing balm or salve on the inflamed inner coating of the diseased air-surfaces, from the nostrils to the bottom of the lungs, and hence into the blood. Old-fashioned inhalation, through a tube, for a few minutes a day, sometimes cured. Think of eight hours constant action, on the same principle, but intensified a hundred-fold! There are no pipes or tubes. The medicine is breathed in, not swallowed, and goes right to the diseased parts.

CATARRH. BRONCHITIS. CONSUMPTION.

HON. E. L. HEDDEN, Collector of the Port of New York, says: "I take pleasure in stating that the PILLOW-INHALER has been of the greatest relief, and I believe of permanent benefit, to my wife, who has been a great sufferer from Bronchial and Catarrhal Troubles, accompanied with distressing Asthma. I recommend its use to all persons afflicted with such maladies."

E. L. HEDDEN, 38 West 49th St., New York.

MR. H. G. TEELE, 50 Bryan Block, Chicago, Ill., says: "I suffered fifteen years from a severe case of Catarrh; coughed incessantly day and night. I bought a PILLOW-INHALER, and since using it my cough is gone; my lungs are no longer weak and sore, and I am in better health than I have been for years."

During the six years of its existence the PILLOW-INHALER has wrought cures of Catarrh, Bronchitis, Asthma, and Consumption, that have been more like miracles than the usual treatment of disease. It is not expensive, and is within the reach of every one. Send for Explanatory Pamphlet and Testimonials, or call.

NEWS OF THE WEEK.

WASHINGTON.

The Senate on Friday passed the bill admitting South Dakota into the Union by a vote of 33 to 20, only one Democrat, Mr. Voorhees, voting in the affirmative.

Official reports to the Mexican Minister at Washington state that the recent encounter of Mexican troops with Crawford's command was the result of a mistake. The Mexican loss was four men killed and four wounded. Complaint is made in regard to the alleged lawless acts of American scouts.

Commissioner Sparks has made the discovery that 10,000,000 acres in North Dakota, embracing the Bismark. Grand Forks, Mouse River, Turtle Mountain, and other districts, are still vested in the Indians, and surveys have been ordered suspended. This controverts a ruling made by Secretary Teller in 1884.

COUNTRY.

Reports up to Saturday indicate that the weather continues intensely cold in the South and East, while another heavy snowstorm is reported raging in Michigan. Navigation is closed at Baltimore, and in the Shenandoah (Pa.) section collieries have suspended work and schools have been closed owing to the low temperature. In New York City suffering among the poor is reported. The weather along the Atlantic coast is unusually severe, and vessels arriving are covered with ice. In Pennsylvania railroads are blocked by huge drifts; the snow in some instances overtopping the cars. A fierce blizzard is in progress on Cape Cod, while throughout New England the mercury ranges from 10 to 40 below zero.

Two passenger trains were in collission on the Iron Mountain road, near Piedmont, Mo., Friday, three employes being killed and several travelers slightly injured. Both engines and eight coaches were wrecked.

An unknown man poured coal oil down the chimney of a railway shanty at East St. Louis Thursday night, exploding the stove, round which seven persons were sitting, and enveloping them in flames. The door to the structure had been fastened, and when rescued, the victims presented a shocking sight. It is believed that none of the men are fatally burned.

The snow throughout Kentucky and Tennessee ranges from six inches to two feet in depth, while a fall of fourteen inches is reported at Wilmington, Del. Country roads are almost impassable. Another cold wave prevails throughout the South, the temperature ranging from 5 to 15 degrees below the freezing point

An interesting feature in the increase of real estate values is shown in Sandersville, Georgia, a town of 3,000 inhabitants. While the increase for the year of property owned by whites was 16⅔ per cent that of the colored people was 36 per cent.

In October last the Rev. T. L. Smith (colored) and a party of friends were refused refreshments at a restaurant in Keokuk, Iowa. Suit was brought under the civil-rights law for $10,000, and the jury Thursday brought in a verdict for $1. The defense was that it was late at night when the party called, and that the defendent was anxious to close his shop.

The census of Nebraska, just completed, shows an increase of 298,243 in population in five years. The value of live stock is $83,000,000, against $33,000,000 in 1880, and the acreage under cultivation has doubled. The value of farms has been increased from $105,000,000 to $285,000,000, and manufactured products are valued at $13,000,000, against $12,000,000 at last report.

Unusually heavy snowstorms are reported from the Southern States, a depth in excess of two feet being noted at some points. Snow fell in the vicinity of the City of Mexico Tuesday, for the first time in thirty years.

A snowslide near Frisco, Col., Sunday, swept away three men, burying them under 100 feet of snow and rock.

Within a few days the Chicago, St. Paul, Minneapolis and Omaha railroad has sold to the Superior Lumber Company of Ashland, Wis., 30,000, acres of standing pine, embracing 150,000,000 feet.

Several thousand miners, mostly Hungarians, are on a strike in the coke region of Western Pensylvania. Twenty of the striking miners were evicted from the houses of the companies last week during the progress of a furious snowstorm, and other evictions will be made unless the men return to work. Trouble is imminent. There is considerable destitution among the miners, mostly on account of fuel, as the operators will not allow them to mine coal enough to keep them from freezing. The demand for coke is now great, and furnaces and mills are shutting down all over the country for want of it.

A petroleum well that will yield in excess of 150 barrels daily was struck Tuesday in Moore & Brotherton's territory near Lima, Ohio.

The blunder of a sleepy brakeman caused a collision on the Chesapeake and Ohio road at Scranton, Va., early Tuesday morning, one man being killed and three others possibly fatally injured.

FOREIGN.

Gladstone arrived at Osborne on Monday, and received the personal command of the Queen to form a Cabinet. It is reported that the aversion for Gladstone was rather a dread lest Granville again come into office as Foreign Secretary.

The text of the treaty between France and Madagascar has been submitted to the Chamber of Deputies. The document consists of nineteen articles of agreement. The treaty leaves Frenchmen in Madagascar free from the native laws and subject to those of France only. Frenchmen are to have the right to freely trade, travel, and reside in Madagascar, as well as to acquire lands for an indefinite period; also to employ native labor. French property in Madagascar is to be inviolable without the sanction of the French consul. Religious liberty is guaranteed. France is bound to assist the Queen of Madagascar in defending the country, and to supply military instructors, engineers, professors, and artisans for civilizing purposes. Complete amnesty is granted to the prisoners taken on both sides during the recent war.

MISCELLANEOUS.

THROAT WEAKNESS.

Clergymen, Teachers, Singers, Lawyers, Public Speakers, and all who have occasion to use their vocal powers more than ordinarily, will find the little treatise entitled "CHRONIC SORE THROAT" very useful. If those who are troubled with hoarseness after speaking or singing will read this book any follow its instructions they will be greatly benefited and relieved. Dr. Shuldham, of England, the author, has himself a reputation as an elocutionist of no mean powers, and he writes on the human vocal economy with the double experience of the physician and reader; especially is this experience noticeable in the Chapter on THE ART OF BREATHING, for it is on the proper modes of inspiration and expiration that the whole secret of managing the voice without causing any undue strain to the throat organs depends. Nor can we speak less emphatically in praise of the Chapter on THE HYGIENE OF THE VOICE, in which Dr. Shuldham lays down what in the way of solids and fluids a public speaker or singer should take, so as to avoid on the one hand throat irritation, and on the other any derangement of the stomach, which must react unfavorably on the whole system.

"Dr. Shuldham has given information and suggestions which will be of priceless value to every public speaker."—Interior. "The chapter on the art of breathing, the inspiration and expiration, without unduly straining the throat and vocal cords will be found a good study for all public speakers."—Inter Ocean.

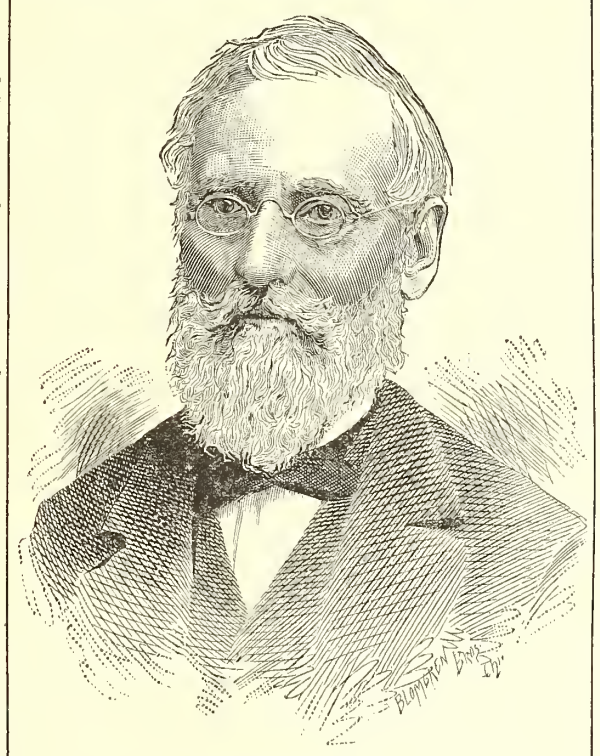
SKETCH OF THE LIFE AND LABORS OF GEORGE W. CLARK.



BY REV. CHARLES C. FOOTE.

Whatever of recovery and reform has been wrought by Providence in lapsed human nature, has been largely through human agencies. Moses, Aaron and Joshua translated the Israelites from Egyptian bondage to the freedom of the Promised Land. The prophets restored them from their apostacy. Apostles, martyrs and confessors proclaimed a reformatory and regenerating Gospel to a world enslaved in sin. Luther, Knox, Wesley, Whitfield, Edwards and an army of like men were raised up to substitute a living salvation in place of the dead formalism of their day. And God who knows the power of song gave to the sweet singer of Israel the inspiration of psalmody; and the psalms of David have quickened the wavering affections of Christian pilgrims for thousands of years. To put an end to the colonial slavery of Great Britain there was brought upon the stage of action an army of philanthropists unrivaled in the history of the East. But was there ever a nation considering the light enjoyed that had imposed upon itself heavier crimes or more deadly than was resting upon the American nation half a century ago? And was there ever a more herculean task to be accomplished than the removal of these deadly crimes of slavery and the liquor traffic?

To accomplish this work ordinary means were inadequate. The pen, the press, the lecture, argument and reason were all inadequate to arouse the nation. A new thing, therefore, under the sun was to be brought into action as a motive force. It was to be known what song could do to rouse the leaden hearts and fire the deadened sensibilities.

This new instrumentality God was preparing in a youth whose early wrongs and sufferings were, for a period of his life, well nigh equal to those of the bond slave. Early, and for years an orphan boy, in the clutches and subject to all the outrages of a drunken tyrant, the subject of this narrative learned how to sympathize with the wronged, the outraged and suffering as could have been learned in no other way.

George Washington Clark is by birth a New Englander, born in Bangor, Me., in 1812. His father was Capt. Noah Clark; his grandfather, Seth Clark, was an ensign in the Revolutionary war. In 1817, Capt. Noah Clark with his family removed to Rochester, N. Y., entering into a contract with the Hon. Charles Ingersol, Member of Parliament, of Ingersol, Canada, to build mills and other buildings. It was at this place Captain Clark lost his life by falling from a building he was erecting, and some six years after the subject of this sketch returned to Rochester, N. Y., a fatherless and penniless boy. It was in that city he heard the first temperance address that ever greeted his ears. The renowned Theodore D. Weld was the lecturer. George, then about sixteen years of age, was converted to temperance principles, signed the pledge, and immediately became an enthusiastic advocate of the cause, in which he has continued for over fifty-eight years. He not only renounced the use of all intoxicating drinks but gave up also tea, coffee and tobacco; and to this day uses neither; and to this avoidance of all alcoholic, narcotic and nicotine poisons he attributes his remarkable preservation of health, strength and power and flexibility of voice; for though 74 years of age his singing is the wonder and admiration of all who hear him.

GEORGE W. CLARK.

During the great revival under the labors of Rev. Charles G. Finney in Rochester, N. Y., in 1830, he became a subject of saving grace, and entered at once on studies for the ministry. But so deeply impressed was he with the frightful evils of intemperance and the need of laborers for its overthrow, that he soon to that mission, whereby the temperance cause has gained more converts than by any one hundred ministers in the country, and through the power of his temperance songs many drunkards have been reclaimed.

He was a sweet singer in early childhood, and delighted in everything that made music. Wholly self-taught, with native genius and with the aid of the best books he could obtain, he qualified himself for public teaching. His popularity was soon widespread. His schools were thronged with pupils. But he had turned aside from his mission only for a season to obtain means, thus utilizing his vacations, and at the close of his schools resumed his work. During his experience in song service he had observed the effect of music in stirring the emotions of his pupils. He therefore introduced singing with his lectures on temperance, and was the first in this country to bring this influence to bear as a motive in winning people to the temperance reform.

WHEN THE ANTI-SLAVERY SHIP

was launched on its perilous and momentous voyage, Bro. Clark was on board. His life work was now doubled. There was no other man in the nation whose songs produced such mighty results. There could be no considerable gatherings or reform conventions in the country without his presence. Thus he was kept swinging to and fro from the "Atlantic to the Father of Waters," filling any spare time with lecturing and singing enroute. Finding very few hymns or songs appropriate for these occasions at that early day, he compiled and published a book of temperance songs; and very soon after he published the famous "Liberty Minstrel," a collection of anti-slavery songs.

These became the "revival song books" of the reform conventions. The songs were sung by the author at his lectures and at mass meetings and by reform associations and bands of singers and at great conventions throughout the country and had the effect to arouse the consciences, awaken the sympathies and quicken the sensibilities of the people as nothing else could have done.

In 1856 Mr. Clark published "The Harp of Freedom," a larger and more complete work, from all the best poets of freedom, to which he also adapted music. The first of Whittier's poems set to music by Mr. Clark was "The Slave Mother's Lament." Referring to the effect of this song upon audiences many observed "you could have heard a pin drop in those great crowds and see the tears fall from their cheeks like rain!" Mr. Clark next composed music to Whittier's "Yankee Girl," which he sang with great applause and which became very effective and popular throughout the country. His next was that grand production of Whittier's, "Stanzas for the Times." This he was invited to sing at a great convention at the Capitol in Boston. The State House was packed from bottom to top and there was no place for the singer to stand but on a rich rosewood table in front of the speaker's desk. A Boston gentleman spread his big silk handkerchief for a protection, and two men stood Mr. C. upon the table from which he poured out his soul in that thrilling song—

"Is this the land our fathers loved?
The freedom which they toiled to win?"— pointing as he sang to the portraits of the old heroes alluded to in the song as they hung around upon the wall. The effect was electrical, and can be better imagined than described, the vast audience bursting out in rapturous applause at the end of every verse.

Lack of space compels us to condense and omit many thrilling incidents in this interesting history. At another time Mr. C. was invited to Boston to attend a great convention to remonstrate against the annexation of Texas as a slave State. He arrived a few days before the convention, and while in the office of Joshua Leavitt, editor of The Emancipator, a poem written for the convention by Whittier was received by Mr. Leavitt with this note; "Tell friend Clark this is Quaker measure and can't be set to music." Mr. Clark replied: "Tell friend Whittier poetry and music are twin sisters, and what God has joined together let no man put asunder." This rousing appeal against the insolent demands and aggressions of the slave power was set to music by Mr. Clark the next day, and sung in the convention with tremendous effect, Mr. Whittier acknowledging "he had no idea of the power that could be put into those lines by music." The Boston Emancipator said:

All who attended the recent New England Convention will agree with us in saying that one of its most gratifying and effective exercises was the singing of Mr. Clark. Among the many able and eloquent speeches delivered during the sessions, there was not one which touched the deep cords of the soul like any one of the songs sung by Mr. Clark. Even pro-slavery bowed its head and wept for the first time in an anti-Slavery meeting. Hearts were thrilled by this vocalist which never felt the woes of the slave before; and the indescribable expression which he gave to the sentiment made every song an irresistable argument, insinuating its truths through the thickest mail of prejudice until they found a lodgment in the heart of the listener.

This same year Mr. Clark was invited to attend the great Southwestern Liberty Convention held in Cincinnati, where his thrilling songs had a most wonderful effect over that vast throng of 3,000 to 5,000 people gathered from day to day in the great tabernacle. Hon. James G. Birney presided. Salmon P. Chase, Rev. J. Pierpont, Hon. Owen Love-

BY REV. HALLECK FLOYD.

Under this title Prof. C. J. Kephart, of Toledo, Iowa, defends the Commission appointed by the General Conference at Fostoria, in May last. But it is not a United Brethren Commission. In its inception, and work, it is distinctively anti-United Brethren. Opposition to secret societies is a distinctive feature of United Brethreuism; but the Commission was appointed to destroy our ecclesiastical testimony against the orders. Our constitution is this: "There shall be no connectiou with secret combiuations." Their proposed constitution reads as follows:

"We declare that all secret combinations, which infringe upon the rights of those outside their organizations, and whose principles and practices are injurious to the Christian character of their members, are contrary to the Word of God, and that Christians ought to have no connection with them.

"The General Conference shall have power to enact such rules of discipline with respect to such combinations as in its judgment it may deem proper."

With respect to the substitution of this proposed article for the present article of constitutional law, the Professor asks, "Does it indicate a desire to depart from the distinctive feature of the church in the past?" I answer unequivocally, Yes. The Professor also, answers, Yes. He is advocating a change of law, which, he says, has its origin in a change of sentiment in the church from the "exclusion," to the admission of secret societies. Does not this indicate a desire to depart from the distinctive feature of the church? Certainly it does.

As it pertains to the matter of conferring power on the General Conference to enact such rules as it may deem proper, I have only to say, that this is the most hollow pretense of conferred anthority. The General Conference would certainly have such a right if the constitution was as silent as the grave on the whole subject. The reader will observe that it requires nothing in the line of prohibitory legislation. But authorizes them to repeal all law on the subject if they "deem it proper to do so."

The whole thing is deceptive, as any unbiased mind can see. There is not one word of condemnation of secret societies iu it. It is an apology to secretists for our historic position on this question. The most charitable view that can be taken of it is, that it is an evasive declaration against secret societies, but it points out nothing. It is unworthy of the seal of the church, because it is a timorous attempt to evade responsibility.

The present constitution is clear, manly, and honest. The proposed constitution is lacking in all of these elements. It falsifies the life and history of the denomination. God is not pleased with it, for it expresses a desire to cease opposition to these worldly orders.

Two of the members of the Commission proposed to record their testimony against the orders by inserting a statement that, "secret societies in their nature and tendency are evil;" but the majority were opposed to it, and one of their number said, "We do not believe they are evil, and we will never sign such a declaration." Dr. Hott in speaking on the paper said, "There is nothing in it. I cannot defend it. It cannot be defended." This inside view of the Commission shows the intent of the proposed change.

The Professor is mistaken as to the facts when he says, "Since the appointment of the Commission there has been a division of sentiment as to the authority of the General Conference to make such an appointment, or to provide any measure looking to the amendment of the constitution." The law men deny the right of the General Conference to make such an appointment. That is true; but they do not deny the right of the General Conference to provide constitutional methods of change. The Com mission was appointed not to provide a method of bearing the request of the people to the General Conference for their action, but to formulate a law, and to call an election to ratify their legislation. The right of a General Conference to delegate its responsibility to a select committee to legislate I deny; and this attempt to confer power on an irresponsible committee to legislate for the church is that which is creating division in the church.

The people may, by petition, request the General Conference to alter or change the constitution, stating in their petition specifically what changes they desire; or the General Conference may formulate amendments and submit them to the people, and if the required number vote for them, they may go to the next General Conference and by it be considered.

The constitution, he says, "received only the tacit acceptance of the church." Again, the Professor is mistaken. The truth is that the General Conference of 1837 made a provisional constitution, but felt that they had no authority to pass it to its final adoption. So it laid over until 1841, and a circular was issued notifying the church to elect delegates with the view of the final adoption of a constitutiou in 1841 to either reject, amend, or adopt, the provisional constitution agreed upon by the General Conference of 1837. So that the Geueral Confereuce of 1841 was not only a General Couference, but also a Constitutional Couvention fully authorized by the church to act on the final adoption of a constitution, which they did. And it has stood, and has been recognized by the church ever since, and it still stands, to the great annoyance of the Commissiouers of 1885.

The somewhat lengthy and ingenious statement that the constitution never was a constitution, but that each General Conference since the General Conference of 1841 has had the right to annul it, is too presumptuous to command the respect of law-abidiug citizens in church or state. It is as if the members of the Congress of the United States, now in session, should declare that the Constitution of the Uuited States is not binding as organic law, because the people of the United States had never voted on its adoption, but had only accepted it tacitly: and on this presumption should proceed to make such alterations and changes as they might desire, in violation of its provisions for change.

The Professor urges in justification of this revolutionary movement that the constitution does not define what two-thirds of the whole society means, and suggests that it may apply to the classes or couference districts. United Brethren everywhere kuow that this theory of applying it to the classes or confereuce districts is so entirely new and original that the inventor ought to have letters patent on it. The "whole society" means the entire membership of the church, of course. It can mean nothing else. It is held by some that it should be applied to the aggregate number of votes cast. But the constitution does not provide for a vote. It simply provides that the General Conference shall make no change until two-thirds of the whole society request it.

My brother has been but recently drawn into this unprecedented and unlawful movement to violently open the doors of the church to the lodge. I must do him the justice to say that he is an anti-secret man, as I verily believe, but his apology for the commission act, the real purpose of which is to destroy our ecclesiastical testimony against the orders, shows that he is now in the mælstrom of revolution.

SECRETISM IN THE CHURCH.

BY REV. LEVI KELLY.

A few days since I heard a Methodist Episcopal preacher, who is a Freemason, discourse on the "Water of Life." On the whole it was good, but it seemed to me greatly in need of oil to cause the machine of the discourse to revolve smoothly. The services lacked spirituality. While listening I thought, "How can he, in conscience, talk of the water of life, while he drinks at quite another fountain." As a Mason he is just where he must serve God and mammon, that is the god of Masonry and money. The order gives such men power and influence and the unsuspecting church members furnish the pay.

Another thought came into my mind, namely, that some church organizations are similar to the Masonic order. I do not wish to be understood that they are necessarily wrong, because they have their central powers, but merely, that there is so much likeness in their governments that sometimes a gravitation to a common interest seems natural.

Bro. Edmond Ronayne in his "Master's Carpet," compares popery with Masonic lodgery in a striking manner. Though popery opposes Masonry, it does so because it cannot control it. Popery is secretism throughout. But does not any church government which centralizes power, even in a modified form, contribute to supremacy? I am confident that the more republican a church government is, the less danger there is in secretism controlling it. We have protested again and again against the Masonic system, not simply because of its barbarous oaths and death penalties, but because its organization binds men blindly to a central wheel of despotism, from which there is no appeal. This has been declared anti-American and anti-republican. It is of course imported. Now if this is the case, why not admit that all centralized ecclesiasticism is the same? I do not here condemn any form of church government, but simply suggest that it is very possible that one largely may aid the other in lording it over the consciences of its members. One thing I am aware of, that Masonry is much more at home in a church whose head center embodies almost dictatorial authority.

I am sure that no amount of exposure of its secrets, though correct in every particular, will uproot this gigantic evil. Its roots penetrate the morals of its members, and create a cloak to cover the deeds of villainy, and contribute almost regal power to the Grand Lodge. This very power has forced the church to silence. Here at her very hearth this secret despotism has erected her strongest fortifications. The preacher, deacon, and influential members have bowed their knee at the altar of Baal and sworn eternal friendship. The church is run to please the religiously scrupulous, but these gentry care not a fig for her sacred and holy memories. Touch their order and you touch the apple of the eye. They show more real indignation when their order is questioned than when Christiauity is assaulted.

But then, what seems more unaccountably strange is that many whose eyes are open will quietly submit to the insult of fellowshiping a religion antagonistic to Jesus and the blood of his atonement. An altar of Baal in the heart and Christ merely on the lips, is a contrast so daring and insulting to God that human lips are not able to express it.

But let me here state simply what I think is now the policy both of Satan, and secretism as his agent, that a voluntary gag-law is coming into use. The churches which are anti-secret are to some extent compromising. This is evident because they say less against it in their church periodicals, and less from their pulpits. There is not half so much said against these secret orders in the Free Methodist church as there was ten years ago. There are several reasons why: first, the smaller organizations of secretism, especially the G. A. R., have in some measure contributed to this end. Secondly, the formation of said church was the result, in part, of the opposition to Masonry, and the new preachers, or those who had no personal contact at that time with the lodge, are not so fully informed on the subject. It is not uncommon to hear nothing said against secretism during a whole campmeeting. Two campmeetings which I attended last year were totally silent on the subject, except what I said, and that created such a storm that some weak-kneed ones feared it might have a bad effect. I do not say this to reflect on any particular ones, but to call them to a renewed engagement of the conflict.

Any one who is in harmony with God's method of saving souls must abhor the secret society devil. It has no fellowship with holiness or purity. Its origin was conceived by bad men, fostered by such, and is the great support of the rum power. Unless the church cut loose from this conspiracy against Christ and his church, the result will be more dreadful in the future to poor perishing souls, "who have no hope and are without God in the world."

LIBERAL RELIGION.

BY WM. BROWN.

Rationalism is like a ladder of delusion which has been erected on the earth, having for its top step Arianism and Atheism at the bottom. Arius stands on the highest stair and denies the Godhead of Christ, while Hume stands at the bottom disclaiming his own existence, except as an idea.

Who would not become bewildered in looking at that ladder and hearing the many theories of those standing on a thousand steps? some of whom embraced Arianism with a view to perch themselves at the top of the ladder, but they began to descend, and continued to do so, until not a few have reached the bottom.

Many fall into unbelief by a single misstep, while others approach infidelity in a gradual manner as did Dr. Priestly, who says "he was once a Calvinist, and that of the straitest sect; then a high Arian; next a low Arian; then a Socinian, and in a little time a Socinian of the lowest kind." He said further, that he knew not when his creed would be fixed.

There is then much reason for Christians to be cautious. Bad men would gladly induce us to embrace their schemes and throw away our Bible, because it contains teachings which they think to be oppositions of science. But men who spend their lifetime in attempting to discover errors in the handwriting of God, finish their course without accomplishing anything, and all their supposed discoveries prove to be delusions.

Iowa Falls, Iowa.

Why is sworn secrecy employed by those societies which have been formed ostensibly for the benefit of men? If the benefit of the needy is the real object for which such societies are organized, can that object be accomplished any better under a terrible oath of secrecy than out in the clear sunlight of heaven? Are the benefactions conferred upon the needy any more meritorious when hidden behind the veil of secrecy, than when they may be known and read of all men? We question whether the benefit of the needy be the aim of these societies; their benefits are only intended for such needy as are found among themselves or dependent upon them. It is, then, evidently, a benefit limited to themselves, practically, that is aimed at; or, in other words, they exist fer selfish purposes. This being the case, the object of their secrecy must be to blind outsiders as to the real purposes of their existence. As we have often intimated in these columns before, that which is really good, needs not secrecy to enhance its value.—Record, Blanchard, Iowa.

HOW LEE BECAME A REBEL.

"Did I ever tell you," said ex-Senator Pomeroy, of Kansas, to me the other day, "that I was present when the command of the Confederate army was offered to General Lee?"

"No."

"Well, I was; I stood within six feet of him. Nobody in the party knew me, as I had just arrived in Washington from Kansas, and was almost an entire stranger here. Kansas was admitted, you remember, during the last days of Buchanan's administration, and Lane and I were elected to the Senate. We came to Washington with a lot of Kansas fellows to see what the secessionists were doing, and were on the cars when he heard that Fort Sumter was fired upon.

"When we arrived in Washington the Kansas people serenaded us at the Kirkwood House, and Lane, Cassius M. Clay, and I made speeches from the balcony. There was such a mob and so much excitement that the proprietor of the hotel came up and ordered us to stop speaking for fear the Secesh would tear the house down. We got off the balcony and went into the street, where we stood on a dry-goods box and finished our speeches. I remember Lane's speech very well. He was interrupted by some Southern sympathizers while he was talking on the slavery question, and said: 'Gentlemen, you can howl all you want, but your divine institution has gone to hell. Six months from now all the slaves in the South won't be worth a handful of silver dollars!'

"Clay and I both made similar speeches, and that night we organized a company of Kansas volunteers for the defense of Washington. Lane was captain and I was a private. I served thirty days in the army, and got an honorable discharge.

"But I was going to tell you about Lee. I kept a diary then, as I have ever since, and do now. Only the other day I was reading it over, and it recalled to me that about the 16th or 17th of April, 1861, a committee of twelve men came up from the secession convention, then meeting at Richmond, and stopped at the hotel where I was. I used to circulate around among them, trying to find out what they were up to, and discovered that they had come to see General Lee, who was over at Arlington. One afternoon, about 4 o'clock, they started off in carriages, and a friend of mine and I got a buggy and followed them. We joined the procession before it got to Arlington, and acted just as if we were a part of their crowd. When we reached the old mansion General Lee, who was evidently not expecting any callers, came out in his dressing-gown and slippers, and I tell you he was as noble looking a man as I ever saw. He had been sent for by General Scott, and came from California, you remember, to use his influence to prevent Virginia from going out of the Union, and while he had not made any public declaration, people generally understood that he was opposed to secession, so we watched what was going on with a good deal of interest.

"The chairman presented the delegation to the General one by one, and when they had been introduced he began a speech, which I wrote down as nearly as I could remember it in my diary that night. It was very nearly in these words: 'General Lee, we are authorized by the convention now in session at Richmond to convey to you an expression of their confidence and esteem, as one of the most distinguished citizens of Virginia, and to tender you the command of the troops that have been raised to protect the old State from the peril which now confronts her. We are encouraged by the belief that you, as a son of Virginia, will respond to her call and direct the military forces so as to prevent the invasion of her sacred soil. We know that large bodies of troops are being organized in the North for the coercion of our people, and they will be resisted by every patriotic citizen of the commonwealth. The convention at Richmond is awaiting anxiously for our return with your answer, as your acceptance will give strength and encouragement to the people.'

"To this Lee responded briefly and directly. He stood a moment with a determined expression upon his face, as if his mind was fully made up, but he was not certain how to express himself. My friend and I, from what we had heard, expected that he would decline and tell the committee to go home and abandon the secession programme. He started out all right in his reply: 'Gentlemen,' he said, 'I am opposed to war, although bred to the profession of arms. I am especially opposed to civil war, to strife between brother and brother. I regret that one section of this country is arrayed against the other.'"

"Up to that," continued Mr. Pomeroy, "I thought he was going to decline, but his next words scared me. 'I hear the voice of Virginia,' he said, 'of the mother that bore me, whose soil is as sacred as the ashes of my father buried here.' 'He's gone,' I said to my friend; 'he's made up his mind,' and his next words were: 'I cannot resist the call of the sovereign State to which I owe my first allegiance; but remember, gentlemen, I shall draw my sword only in her defense, and with the prayer that we, in defending our rights, may not be compelled to shed the blood of our brethren.'

"He then said that he would go to Richmond at once and report in person to the government."

"I drove back to Washington," said Mr. Pomeroy, "and went right up to see Mr. Lincoln. He would scarcely believe what I told him, as he had understood from General Scott and others that Lee was loyal, and was doing all he could to prevent the secession of Virginia. I asked Mr. Lincoln to order our company of Kansas volunteers over to Arlington that night to arrest Lee before he could get to Richmond, but he said that Lee had committed no overt act of treason, and it would create a great excitement, and perhaps complicate affairs if he was arrested. I urged him so hard that he finally told me to go and see Seward about it. I had been a student in Seward's law office, and knowing pretty well what sort of a man he was, I didn't expect to accomplish anything. But I found him more conservative than I had any idea of. He wouldn't believe a word I had told him, and thought I had gone crazy. He said that General Lee was as loyal a man as there was in the District of Columbia, that he had been with General Scott all day arranging for the defense of Washington, and was using his influence to prevent the secession of Virginia. He said that he (Seward) was fully informed of everything that was going on at Richmond, that Lee was recognized as a Union man down there, and that the Virginia rebels would not dare offer him the command of their army. I went back to Mr. Lincoln and told him what Seward had said. He replied that he had a great deal of confidence in Mr. Seward's sources of information, but didn't want to disgrace Lee or do anything to show his disloyalty was suspected. The next morning everybody knew that Lee had gone to Richmond, and within twenty-four hours the newspapers contained his order upon assuming command of the Virginia troops."—Washington Correspondence of the Inter Ocean.

PAGNISM CONFESSED.

Under the title, "Are We Freemasons?" a writer in the Detroit Freemason makes some remarkable confessions and claims, which are stunning as to their etymology and ought to shock Masonic dupes out of the order:

"Our title is Freemason, and the fraternity, taking but little thought on the subject, suppose themselves, on their admission to their order, to become 'Free and Accepted Masons;' but the title is misleading as it has been translated into our language, and the reverse is the truth. The profane and uninitiated are free. Masons are bound together by the most sacred ties, and can never be free from their vows to each other. The word freemason is evidently borrowed from the Egyptia-Coptic language. It is not an English word, nor is our order of English origin. Says brother J. H. Little, the G. H. P. of Virginia, 'It is not found in the classic tongues of Greece and Rome, nor that of Syria, Tyre or Hebrew. More ancient than all, it comes from Egypt.' It comes from a nation that had organization, architecture, and a knowledge of the arts and sciences before the Children of Israel came down into Egypt, and before Abraham first beheld the stars glitter above the plains of Shinar. It came from the wonderful land of the pyramids, the imperishable glory of her ancient kings erected over forty centuries ago, to commemorate their mighty deeds, where a system of priestly and kingly rule was carried out which has been the wonder of the world; where the arts and sciences were preserved by a close and secret organization, where they created a mystic language and communicated the grand secrets in allegories known only to the initiated, and communicated orally from one Hierophant to another in their secret lodges and temples, and erected those mighty works of architectural skill whose undestroyed firmness still amazes the world. Says Bro. Little: 'Among these ancient sages the sun was an object of veneration as the visible power of life and light. In their language it was called Phre (the sun) Mas (a child); Phre Massen (children of the sun); hence, being born of light, they called themselves Phre Massen, or Sons of Light. These Sons of Light, or of the Mysteries of Osiris and Isis, inculcated and practiced purity and perfection of the body, control of the passions, and advancement of the intellect, devoting themselves to the study of all acquirements to benefit the race.' Now, this is Freemasonry. We are true 'Sons of Light,' and the name Phre Massen should have been interpreted Sons of Light."

CHRIST OR HEATHENISM?

The issue of the hour is one between the heathen lodge and the Christian church, which shall get the control of men's hearts and the service of their lives. The Christian will spend his money, give his time and use his influence to build up and deepen the foundation of the church. The man of the world will, of course, go to his own company and use these things for the building up of the lodge power in the land. Reader which will you choose? Better stand by church and Christ and Christianity and let the lodge alone. You have enough to do as a Christian in serving Christ, without wasting any of your talents or time in fostering the lodge which so many thousands regard as the anti-Christ of the last times. You do not need the lodge either in traveling or business, and those who say you do, either do not know what they are talking about or willfully misrepresent the facts. It is the most absurd nonsense for a man in this age of liberty and law amid the light of the Gospel and the progress of the age in civilization, to hold on to the idea that anybody needs lodge grips, pass words and all the tomfoolery of Freemasonry, Odd-fellowship and the like, to help him to either travel or make an honest living. Pay your fare, don't dodge board bills, or steal your way like a tramp on the trains, mind your own business and let other people's alone and you, even though an unprotected female, may travel around the globe and there will be uone to molest or make you afraid. It is the rankest cowardice to go sniveling around saying you must join a secret lodge to get on well in life.—Sandy Lake News.

The present anti-Coolie excitement on this coast is simply a contest between two classes of aliens. The Irish and Germans who have come here since the Chinese came are the men who raise and keep up the cry, "The Chinese must go." A few of our politicians who want German and Irish votes join in the cry. But the better class of native Americans, and the foreigners who have been here long enough to get their eyes open, take no stock in the excitement. They are not in favor of unrestricted immigration, but they are in favor of treating fairly those who are here, and letting them stay if they want to. The anti-Coolie League in San Jose induced the city council to pass an ordinance that all wash-houses within the corporate limits must be in one-story fireproof buildings. The object was to drive out the Chinese laundries that were cleansing, weekly, the soiled linen of over 15,000 inhabitants. The league and the daily papers said that there were plenty of of poor women who would be glad to do the washing. Well, when the ordinance went into effect last week, the Chinese laundries suspended. Only half a dozen white washer-women put in an appearance, though the papers offered to advertize them gratuitously. The result is that the closets all over town are full of soiled clothing and bedding, and the ladies are circulating petitions to the council to repeal the new ordinance. I would not like to be one of those councilmen when the ladies get after them. —California correspondence of the Interior.

We are not in favor of sending young men abroad, either to get or "finish their education," unless their habits are good and their principles are of the best sort. But we would like to import and introduce into our schools and colleges the late anti-tobacco regulations named in the following: "The use of tobacco is to be prohibited in all the Government schools in France, on the ground that it affects injuriously the ability to study. The regulation is based on the recommendation of a commission of men of science, and meets with great approval."—Independent.

joy, Hon. Samuel Lewis, Judge Julian, Rev. Ichabod Codding, Rev. J. Blanchard, and Rev. J. G. Fee were among the eminent speakers. This was a convention of great interest and power.

There were very few reformers whose friendship Mr. Clark did not enjoy, as bushels of preserved letters will now testify. Though not of their party, he often met Mr. Garrison, Wendell Phillips, S. J. May, Abby K. Foster and their associates in anti-slavery labors, and was often invited and sang in their conventions. Mr. Clark believed in action for the overthrow of slavery, and was in sympathy and co-operation with Gerrit Smith, Wm. Goodell, Alvin Stewart, President Green, James G. Birney, Joshua Leavitt, the Tappans, J. C. Jackson, Col. Chaplin, C. T. Torrey, Chas. C. Foote and their associates in the Liberty party.

POLITICAL AS WELL AS MORAL

He was also acquainted and sympathized with John Brown, attended conventions with him, and presided at the last public meeting he ever held in the city hall, Rochester, N. Y., before going to his "rented farm" in Virginia to show the slaveholders the advantages of free over slave labor, and which has been since practically demonstrated, and the wisdom of the old hero established.

In 1846 Mr. Clark was invited to attend the great Northwestern Convention held under the great "Oberlin Tent" in Chicago, where he formed the acquaintance of the Western Abolitionists, inspiring them with new zeal and filling them with delight and enthusiasm by his earnest devotion and his eloquent and inspiring songs. Here was then Hon. Owen Lovejoy, Hon. Jas. H. Collins, Philo Carpenter, Z. Eastman, Rev. Ichabod Codding, Isaac Preston, Dr. Dyer, Allen Pinkerton, Seth Paine, and a host of strong men and women pushing forward the cause in the West, and with whom Mr. Clark held conventions throughout Illinois and Wisconsin, forming many strong friendships and securing the high esteem of all.

In 1844 a national nominating convention was held in Buffalo, N. Y. When it became evident that James G. Birney would be the choice, Prof. Elizur Wright of Boston, who sat on the platform, wrote the words of the once famous campaign song, "We hail thee, Birney! just and true!" handing them to Mr. Clark who sat by his side. He scanned the words, taking in their spirit, then wrote the music on the margin of the same piece of paper with a lead pencil. When the final ballot was announced, Mr. Clark arose and sang the song amid the wildest applause. It afterwards became the popular song of the campaign.

Mr. Clark remained with the Liberty party until it was merged in the Republican, with which he acted during the war, being represented at the front by his second son, Geo. W. Clark, Jr., who was captain of one of the companies that captured Jeff. Davis. But the Republican party, being controlled by and becoming subservient to the liquor power and refusing to take ground for prohibition, he left it and now devotes much of his time and talents to the success of prohibition, and longs to see the union and triumph of the "American and Prohibition" parties.

When the "white slave," Milton Clark, brother to "George Harris;" and when Father Josiah Henson, of Mrs. Stowe's story, escaped from slavery, Mr. Clark took them through New York and New England, holding conventions with them and exposing the wrongs and cruelties of slavery. He also traveled through these States with Hon. Henry Highland Garnet, late minister to Liberia, with the famous Jonathan Walker of the "Branded Hand," with Samuel Ringold Ward, and others. Jonathan Walker, a New Englander, was a "sea coaster," a noble and generous-hearted man. After loading his vessel at Pensacola, Florida, and after setting sail for the North, some colored persons came out from the shore, intercepted his vessel, and asked to be taken on board. For befriending these "God's poor ones," he was followed by a U. S. revenue cutter, seized, taken back to Pensacola, and imprisoned. His vessel was confiscated, himself put into the stocks, pelted with rotten eggs, and every indignity heaped upon him; and finally had the letters "S. S." branded into the living flesh of his right hand, meaning "Slave Stealer." On his liberation and return to New England he was given a grand ovation in the city of Providence, R. I. Whittier wrote that grand poem of "Welcome," which was sent to Bro. Clark, who was present in Providence on that great occasion, and standing upon the platform with his right hand upon the broad and generous brow of the old hero, and with 3,000 people crowding the seats and aisles and doorways before him, he poured out the thrilling strains of that soul-stirring Quaker song welcome. The wildest excitement fol lowed which can never be forgotte by those who witnessed the scene.

THE ORIGINAL "UNCLE TOM"

In 1884, while in New York publishing his "Liberty Minstrel," Mr. Clark was urged to join a secret order. He had been more than ever opposed to all secret, oath-bound societies since the murder of Captain Wm. Morgan by the Masons. He was told, however, this was not an "oath-bound, secret order," but was a simple organization for the better promotion of the cause of temperance; and by joining he could have access to many more people and influence many more for good. He accordingly joined, and visited various meetings of the order, to speak and sing for the "cause" (the lodges). At the close of one of his lectures for the "cause," one night in Buffalo, he invited all who would to come forward and "join." Among a number who came up to enlist in the good work was a nice looking colored man. To Mr. Clark's surprise and mortification this man was "black-balled" because he was a "nigger!" He said at once, "If you exclude the colored man, you exclude me!" He soon found this was a standing rule of the "order." For this reason, and finding it to be virtually a secret, oath-bound order; and finding the "lodges" were doing more for the "order" than for the cause of temperance, he left them, and ever since has steadily opposed all secret "orders," believing them unnatural, unchristian, unnecessary, anti-republican and dangerous. His views on this subject may be found in one of his latest works published by the National Christian Association, entitled, "Lyrics about the Secret Lodges."

THE "SONS OF TEMPERANCE,"

We now turn back from these reminiscences to gather up the threads of events that gave to the entire life of Mr. Clark. While prosecuting his studies in New York, he went to Canada to spend his vacations, teaching day schools and music. In one of his classes was a young English girl of rare beauty and intelligence who won his heart at first sight, and who reciprocated his affections. In due time—after a most romantic love affair—(for she had another suitor who was in favor with the parents) they were married, and settled in a business way in the upper Province. At the breaking out of the "patriot war," a few years later (1837), Mr. Clark was arrested and imprisoned on suspicion of complicity with the rebellion, as he was known to be in sympathy with the "reformers." His wife, who came into the jail bringing their little daughter to see her father, was also made a prisoner, because she took her husband's pocketbook and accounts home to take care of. It is a long and thrilling record for which there is no room here. Finally released on bail, Mr. Clark was exiled to Michigan in the winter of 1838, followed soon after by Mrs. Clark and her young child. He settled in the then little village of Ann Arbor, where he started the first temperance paper ever published in Michigan. He finally removed to Jackson, it being more central and greater facilities offering. Here he published such an array of statistics, giving the number of drinking places, the number of drunkards, of families ruined, of men who beat their wives and children, of shocking crimes committed through liquor, which so stirred up and enraged the rum-sellers that they gathered a mob and attended his next lecture, intending to kill him, but his friends came also in strong force to guard and rescue him; and when the mob, at a given signal, blew out the lights and rushed for the pulpit, his friends on each side pulled him out into the darkness and took him to a place of safety, on an eminence near the village, where he heard the hooting and howling of the frenzied mob all the livelong night. One of these whisky-crazed and deluded creatures swore "he would be the death of cold-water Clark before one week from that day or he would be damned." Just one week from that day Mr. Clark assisted in bearing that man's lifeless body to his family! Two words tell the awful story—

DRUNK! DROWNED!

So intent were these rum-fiends on thwarting Mr. Clark's philanthropic efforts that they dug up from the grave a colored man's corpse and placed it in an upright position in the pulpit of the church where friends of temperance and freedom were to hold a Fourth of July celebration! Nothing daunted, however, by this outrage, the ghastly corpse was re-interred, and the celebration was held all the same, though a second attempt was made to break up the convocation by firing a cannon over their heads, amid the afternoon's exercises.

In 1840 Mr. Clark was appointed commissioner from the Jackson Presbytery to the General Assembly at Philadelphia, when the Southern slave-holders, with old Dr. Hill at their head, menaced and cowed the Northern members by their threats and thus carried the day, defeating the resolution declaring slavery a "sin against God and a crime against man!.' Upon this Dr. Cox, of New York, exultingly shouted, "Thank God, for another four years!" Whereupon Mr. Clark entered his protest against the cowardly and un-Christian proceedings. From that time he left the pro-slavery Presbyterian church, and united with the Free Church or Independents.

WE'VE CAPPED THE VESUVIUS

In 1842, completely broken down from the effects of the malarial climate of Jackson, Mr. Clark turned over his paper to others and removed with his family back to New York, two of his children being near death's door at the time. A visit to Saratoga Springs for a time, and a residence in a healthier climate soon restored the family to fairly good health, and from that time to this he has devoted himself almost exclusively to reform work in the different States, in the mean time having compiled and published some seven different reform song books.

There is no one on this continent to whom of right and merit belongs the appellation of

as to George W. Clark. Prima Donnas have delighted with their sweet voices, pretty faces, and pleasant songs; but who of them all have really benefitted society? But what has our National Reform Singer done? He has covered the land from east to west, from north to south, not only with his reform song books, setting many thousands to singing for temperance and freedom, but with the web of his reform travels as thick, well-nigh, as the web of the weaver's beam. He has traveled by water and by rail, in carriage and saddle, on runners and on foot; plowing the night long through the snow and drifts, now on the uplands and hills, now wallowing through the mud of the valleys and lowlands, by day and in dark and stormy nights; drenched to the skin with rain, turning betimes under a wayside shed to rest his weary horse and catch a respite from the pelting storm, or enjoy a brief nap while the water was dripping from his saturated garments. He has encountered the dust and broiling summer's sun, hungry and faint, while hastening to some distant appointment. Thus has he traveled for thousands of miles, now with Gerrit Smith, then with the martyr Torrey, then with Henry Highland Garnett, Frederick Douglass, Samuel R. Ward, Alvin Stewart, Col. Chaplin, James C. Jackson, C. C. Foote, Jonathan Walker, and many other reform workers.

What other singer ever shook, as by an earthquake, such vast audiences with irrepressible and ever-varying emotions, like unto the sound of great waters? and then the flashing of those piercing eyes, and a voice that never can be imitated or described, as he drove home to our deepest conviction, as with shafts of lightning and bolts of thunder, the great truths that fired and blazed in his own soul. Can the millions that saw, and heard, and felt, ever forget these truths, sung with an eloquence never surpassed from pulpit or from platform?

WASHINGTON LETTER.

Talmage and Optimism.—Notable Pleading for Temperance before the Congressional Committee.—The Question becoming National.—President J. Blanchard Welcomed.—The Son of Jim Mace an Evangelist.—The Lodge Attacked in the Baptist Minister's Meeting in Baltimore.

DEAR CYNOSURE:—The address of Rev. T. DeWitt Talmage in the First Congregational church of Washington was largely attended and said to be one of marked ability. His theme was the ever-recurring question, "Is the world growing better?" He held that it is growing better, and presented many evidences that were flattering to the age in which we live. It would be difficult for him to have proved that our moral advancement had been in proportion to the vast increase in knowledge. If it be "required of a man according to that which he hath," and if our external virtues and deeds of benevolence are to be tested by the intelligence and wealth of the 19th century, surely there is small occasion for boasting. The optimism that blinds us to the evils of to-day is scarcely better than the pessimism that can see no good except in the past. This was the special sin of the Jews in the time of our Saviour, and Jesus said unto them, "If ye were blind ye should have no sin; but now ye say, we see, therefore your sin remaineth." It is greatly to be feared that such addresses tend rather to Pharisaism than to moral activity.

Not so with the able and eloquent speeches of Mrs. Hunt of the W. C. T. U. and Gen. Cutchen of Michigan before the House Committee on Education and Labor, and in advocacy of the bill providing for instruction in the public schools on the physiological effects of alcohol and narcotics. I have rarely, if ever, listened to more cogent argument or such impressive eloquence. Mrs. Hunt's address of about an hour was a glowing appeal, both to humanity and patriotism, fortified by the logic of current history. Gen. Cutchen's speech of half an hour was a most compact and powerful statement of the reasons why such legislation is demanded. Fourteen States and one Territory have already placed on their statute books laws that require such instruction and it seems highly probable that it will be adopted by the present Congress. Gen. Cutchen said that while the evils of intemperance were abundantly obvious, the efforts for its removal had not anywhere been a complete success, and the reason was that the law had not been sufficieutly fortified by public conviction. The legislation asked for was that the coming generation should have a just comprehension of this question. It was like the omnipotent word that that changed Chaos to Cosmos—"Let there be light." He said that for ages the rocks we called Hell Gate had obstructed the navigation of East River. By and by those rocks were undermined; a vast supply of explosive material was placed beneath them, and when the baby hand of little Mary Newton touched the button that made the electric connection, there was an explosion that tore down the great barriers to commerce. He said that the liquor traffic was the Hell Gate of civilization and humanity. We propose to mine it, and to begin in our public schools, and when the mighty upheaval shall come, as come it must, there will be no more Hell Gates on which the young men of our land shall be wrecked.

The whole city is being canvassed by the W. C. T. U. to procure signatures to petitions asking for this legislation. It is a noteworthy fact that Senator Ingalls has introduced a new bill which makes the license fee $500, instead of $100 and $150 as he first proposed. He is evidently following what he thinks is the drift of public sentiment on this question. Christian conviction outruns slow-paced expediency, and Mr. Ingalls is likely to find himself left.

Senators Colquitt and Blair, who recently addressed a large and enthusiastic meeting in the First Congregational church, it is said, are preparing a bill to secure local option in the District. It is said to be very stringent in its provisions, and under it we may, by and by, have prohibition. If this and Mr. Blair's education bill shall become laws, it will mark the present session of Congress as one of far more than ordinary utility.

It was with great pleasure that we greeted the venerable senior editor of the Cynosure on his return from his extended tour through the South. It is a matter of profound congratulation that the cause of reform has had so able an advocate in the cities of the South. I had but brief opportunity to converse with him before leaving for Baltimore, where I am spending a few days looking after the interests of reforms and the papers which advocate them.

Yesterday (Sabbath) I listened to two able sermons by Mr. Alfred Mace, recently from London, England. He is the son of the notorious London pugilist of that name, and is laboring here as an evangelist, preaching about seven sermons a week, including one in Washington. I had a most pleasant visit with his interesting family, and was specially glad to make the acquaintance of his co-worker, Rev. Z. P. Nutting, formerly a Baptist pastor in New York City, but now preaching and making disciples in the name of Jesus only.

I to-day called on Hon. Wm. Daniel, and also on the secretary of the Maryland Temperance Alliance. They are hard at work and in full sympathy with all who "abhor that which is evil."

At a recent meeting of the Baptist Association of this city an able paper was read by Rev. A. Brown, pastor of Leadenhall Street Baptist church on "Secret Societies an Obstacle to Gospel Work." Bro. Brown is an able colored minister and editor of the Baptist Messenger. His paper was supported by Bro. Harvey Johnson, who first commenced the agitation in this city, and whose church now numbers 2,200 members, the largest in the city. Two of the white pastors also gave a hearty endorsement to the principles set forth. I found, too, the young pastor of the Covenanter church, Rev. Mr. Glasgow, to be an earnest, practical reformer. I expect, D. V., to go from here to Chambersburg and spend a little time in Pennsylvania.

CORRESPONDENCE.

SOUND WORDS ON A DISPUTED POINT.

BARABOO, Wis., Feb. 5, 1886.

DEAR CYNOSURE:—In your issue of Feb. 4th there is a criticism of Bro. Dissette by Rev. J. D. Nutting, of Ohio. This sounds so much like what I hear in Wisconsin, that I feel inclined to take my place among the score who are likely to reply.

The rulers of the darkness of this world are never ready for the light. It is always premature when it comes. In our temperance work we are spoiling everything by haste. God's patience is always quoted. He once allowed of easy divorce, "because of the hardness of your hearts." So men turn around to him and say, "Lord, don't you know that our hearts are still as hard as ever, and you must wait 'till they get soft, so that we will be willing to hear, before you have the full truth preached to us."

It is under the eye and fostering care of our pastors that the world is ripening with such tremendous speed for the great day of God Almighty. This strife between true and false worships has been the conflict of the ages. It constitutes the whole burden of the prophets. It corrupted God's chosen people so that the ancient temple became its hiding place, and contained within its walls the "chambers of imagery." Poor old Moses said, "For I know that after my death you will utterly corrupt yourselves, and turn aside from the way which I have commanded you, and evil will befall you in the latter days." Paul gave us the same picture of an apostate church in the "last days," and spoke of those days as "perilous times." Our Saviour told us that the world would become as it was in the days of Noe, at which time "The earth was corrupt before God, and the earth was filled with violence."

Such states of things have been brought about in every case by the corrupting influence of false worships, and in the last days there is to be renewed and intense activity among the powers of evil, for "Woe to the inhabitants of the earth and of the sea, for the devil is come down unto you, having great wrath, because he knoweth that he hath but a short time." This is typified also by the three unclean spirits like frogs, out from the mouth of the dragon, "that old serpent which is the devil and Satan," and which represents the infidelity and paganism of the world, whose office it is to gather the nations "to the battle of that great day of God Almighty."

Masonic history, as given in Mackey's Lexicon and all other works on Masonry, identifies, with learned and pains-taking care, all the rites of Masonry with those of the old Baal and sun worships of antiquity. Mackey is their most learned expositor, and I find on the 62nd page of his ritualist, which lies before me, in speaking of the symbolism of the point within the circle, this language: "The symbol is really a beautiful but somewhat abstruse allusion to the old sun worship, and introduces us for the first time to that modification of it, known among the ancients as the worship of the Phallus." I will copy no further, for you would not print it if I did. The revelations of the Pall Mall Gazette were not deemed fit to print in the papers of America. But this article in Mackey's ritualist makes a religion out of what the Gazette condemns as a hideous crime against social purity. I do not believe the All-seeing Eye looks down upon anything on earth which is more hateful in his sight than a church, called by his name, and yet abiding in complicity with these modern forms of paganism. It is like a false light on a rocky coast luring vessels to destruction.

We may conceive of God's feelings when we remember that he destroyed the old temple, built to honor his name, and where he had visibly dwelt, with scenes of woe unparalleled in human history. The Mosque of Omar now stands quietly in its place, dedicated to heathen worships, but it does not assail God with any false pretentions. I have witnessed modern revivals which reminded me of boys trying to catch birds under a box. They scatter seed, then retire to a proper distance, prepared to pull the string when the game gets under the box. So ministers sometimes seem to lift up one corner of the meeting house, set a trigger, scatter around the baits of respectability and pleasure, with a few old oyster cans in the rear, and when the game gets under all right, they pull the string, when, presto! "We have had great additions to our church."

Of course it would not do to split kindling too near under such circumstances, but the time was when it was said of Christians, "They were stoned, they were sawn asunder, were tempted, were slain with the sword, they wandered about in sheep-skins and goat-skins, being destitute, afflicted, tormented." In those days men who became Christians surrendered all, and took their lives in their hands in order to serve Christ; but now, forsooth, if a little untimely kindling wood is split in their presence, or Bro. Dissette talks about the sin of this modern Baal worship, the whole thing is gone up. Champaign, Ill., is full of these dark institutions which cannot bear the light. The churches are, no doubt, threaded through and through with them. If there are none in Wauseon, Ohio, it is a wonderful place.

When is there a better time to point out sin to a man than when you invite him to come to Christ? Would you convert a man into sin, or would you convert him out of it? I suppose that Bro. Nutting would get a man into the church, and then if it ever came around right, tell him it was not best to worship Dagon.

I was once in a revival meeting where great agonies were put on. A good Baptist deacon put his hands lovingly on my shoulders and said, "Now, Bro. Wood, don't say one word about secret societies, for I am afraid that you will scare the birds away from the box," or words to that effect; and I did not. I was conscious, and so was he, that a faithful word in that meeting would blow the whole thing higher than a charge of dynamite would. God helping me, I will never put myself in sueh a position again. When will men cease to mock God with pious twaddle, straining at gnats and swallowing camels? Paul speaks of the church of the living God as "the pillar and ground of the truth;" and yet in all of the principal towns of our land it is made to trail its glorious banners in the filth and mire of secretism.

Bro. Nutting says, "God has placed the care of, and responsibility for the religious condition of Champaign in the hands of its pastors and people, not in the hands of any stranger who cannot know the situation and needs of a place in advance, no matter who, or how good or able he may be." Here is a full recognition of the responsibility of pastors, and yet under this same care, secretism has so grasped the vitals of the churches, that they cannot get rid of it without being torn all to pieces—in fact, they do not want to get rid of it. A voice raised in opposition to Masonry, even Bro. Nutting's, would be a very unwelcome sound.

In reference to Bro. Dissette being a stranger. Christ says, "I was a stranger, and ye took me not in; sick, and in prison, but ye visited me not;" but they took Bro. Dissette in,—into their prison, and it seems that they visited him and made him sick. Bro. Countee, in Memphis, was too hasty in speaking about this same thing; as a consequence, he will carry a bullet in his body to his grave. I wonder if he will not be raised up with that same bullet in his body. Christ carries the scars of his wounded hands and side.

It is about time that the curtains were rung down on this tremendous farce which is being played on this world as a stage, in the name of God and religion. In the last chapter of Revelations the Alpha and Omega says three times, "Behold, I come quickly." Shall we not respond, "Even so come, Lord Jesus?"

HEALING THE BREACHES.

CLARENCE, IOWA.

There are many readers of the Cynosure who, I doubt not, will be glad to hear from Dayton church, Iowa Conference.

The enemy of all righteousness has made terrible depredations among the people of God in this place. Once it was a strong, flourishing church, and its influence was felt far and near. Among its membership were some of the most noted workers in the anti-secret cause; and preachers among us, such as Rathbun, Starry, W. S. May, T. F. Blair, and others. Through them it wielded an influence that has been felt all over the conference, and, in fact, both East and West. But, alas! the old "Accuser of the brethren" has been here. Through his influence brother has been arrayed against brother, until it has seemed almost like a war of extermination. But God be praised, the war is at an end, we trust, and the work of gathering up the dead and wounded has begun. There are a few veterans left, who are ready to stand by the principles of the Bible to the last. We have begun a revival meeting, and although the weather has not been all that we could wish, still at the close of the first week, there is a manifest interest, both in and out of the church, for which my soul says, Praise the Lord. I expect, if the Lord wills, to continue this effort until the victory is given to Zion.

God's truth, if presented aright in the name of Jesus, is sure to accomplish good results, although they may not appear as we in our limited judgment, may anticipate or desire. We ask the people of God everywhere to pray for us. Yours in the love of Jesus,

PASS IT ON, OR CRUMPLED NOTES.

HALIFAX, N. S.

EDITOR CYNOSURE:—I went into the study and emptied my pocket of various papers. I found some crumpled manuscript notes, and they awakened thoughts of you and your readers, and the thought came, Hold on! Don't destroy. Look them over and then pass them on; the time and toil will not be lost. The first thought was, Tempus fugit, "time flies," an adage almost worn out with repetition. But it is only as we note the rapid passing of minutes, hours, days, weeks, months and years we learn how quick its flight. Time past is gone. Time present is going. How; to what purpose spent? Friend consider, now is the acceptable time if we would work for Jesus.

We re-open these notes with a desire to praise God from whom all blessings flow, and to record as a wise recorder, the evidences of the continued goodness, grace and help of our God. It may be interesting to our many readers to know that we have tried to do our work in faith and to look specially to God for the means needed to sustain and carry on the various interests in connection with Christ's cause committed to our charge. The church work proper is sustained by the weekly voluntary free-will offerings of the people, who meet and worship at the Tabernacle. These eleven years and more it has been left to the consciences of the givers, whether they would rob God, or cast into the treasury as the Lord prospered them, and in measure as his Word demands. Often with a changing congregation made up largely of passing strangers, the faithful few, not rich in this world's goods, have had their faith tried by the outlook, and have been tempted by outsiders to do as we do, and keep a check for wet Sundays, etc., to keep delinquents up to the mark. But through a year, which in the beginning seemed destined to try us above that we were able, the Lord has proved the true helper, and our treasurer's financial report showing a cash balance in hand in all the funds, enables us to raise another Ebenezer, and to say, All these years our God has supplied our need. Often we heard the wish expressed, Would God we could arise and build the upper structure, especially now that the temporary roof begins to leak. Is it to stir our energies and faith? We are too poor, but our God is rich, and we often think, he may use the press as a medium of finding and communicating help unto us. At least every reader can pray for the work, and in some measure work to this end.

We have spread out these crumpled notes, passed them on to the readers of the Christian Cynosure, because its editor has shown us no small favor in times past, and because we heartily sympathize with all who fight the good fight of faith. Reading its pages has strengthened the desire to be bound by none save Gospel bonds, and call none master save Jesus only. If those who read the lines we now and then write for these columns feel their hearts moved to us in Christian sympathy, we should always be glad to hear from them and to receive their aid in the circulation of our magazine, Buds and Blossoms, so kindly spoken of elsewhere in the Cynosure. The magazine is a child of much toil and faith; in God we trust for our own and its continuance. Brother pray for us. Yours in the Living One.

UNFERMENTED WINE.—HOW TO MAKE IT.

PRINCEVILLE, Ill.

I am supposing that churches that feel it important to use wine at the sacrament of the Lord's Supper that is not of an intoxicating nature, will be pleased to know how it is made and kept through the year in its rich, pure state. Housekeepers who are accustomed to canning fruit can readily see how they can do likewise.

I have used the Concord grapes taken from the vines as soon as they were fully ripe, in September. It takes about fifteen pounds for a gallon of wine. I press them, strain the juice through a cloth, put it into a porcelain kettle over a good fire, let it get hot, and while heating, put in granulated sugar till the taste is pleasantly sweet. The natural juice is very sour, and there can be no objection to sweetening to the taste (as cooks say) with pure sugar. A little scum will rise which should be removed. I use very nice two quart jugs which I heat in water while the wine is scalding, and when the wine is ready, put it into the jugs and cork them tight. The corks have never popped out, and I know the wine never fermented. Housekeepers have sometimes noticed that a bluish scum has formed on the top of their fruit in their cans, and I discovered a similar scum on my wine, and made a practice of taking it out in the Spring, and again in the latter part of Summer, scalding it, and after cleaning the jugs thoroughly, putting back as at the first.

LODGE ADVERTISEMENT.

Jefferson Davis seems to be as much ashamed of his Masonry as he is of his petticoats. It does not help the lodge any to be publicly known that he is a Mason: the fact should be "concealed and never revealed," Lodgemen much rather boast that "Washington was a Mason." Whenever a good man has been so unfortunate as to have joined the lodge through the misrepresentations of Masons, though he may not have "attended the lodge more than once or twice," he is always puffed as having been a Mason to advertise and delude others into the lodge. But it is thought by some to be a very poor advertisement of the lodge to say that such men as Davis, Floyd and Booth were Masons; nor is it an agreeable advertisement for such men as D. L. Moody, C. G. Finney and all Christians to tell the truth about Masonry.—CYRUS SMITH.

JEWISH HISTORY REPEATED.

The Cynosure is becoming more and more of interest to me. The children of Israel leaving Jehovah and running after heathen gods and worship has repeated itself to-day. A spurious Christianity has joined the heathen worship of the lodge, thus making the moral desolation of this world almost complete. The sects and lodges are the rivals of Christ. The kingdom of Satan triumphs now, and will until Christ comes in the clouds of heaven to give the kingdom to his saints.—J. W. RINER, Morrison, Ill.

GLADSTONE AND THE ORANGEMEN.

The real index to the many past reports and newspaper speculations on Irish affairs, is the election speech of Gladstone in Edinburgh, Nov. 9th. Then he weighed the probabilities of the result; and the present condition of parties was then about as clearly estimated as they can be from the facts as they exist to-day. Among other prescient words, Mr. Gladstone supposed it possible that the Liberals might be "a minority dependent upon the Irish vote for converting it into a majority." "Now, gentlemen," said he, "I tell you solemnly that although I believe the Liberal party to be honorable, patriotic, sound and trustworthy, yet in such a position as that it would not be trustworthy." For he had already said that "there are characters in portions of the opponents of the Liberals which excited his mistrust in the very highest degree." Now these words might apply to some of the Tories, as such, or to some of the Parnell party. In either case there can be no union between such and the Gladstone party. Now, what is the reason of this "mistrust" in the "highest degree" towards some of his opponents? Orangemen are a secret order, but their loyalty is acknowledged, and their hostility to Rome is the bond of their society. It was against all such that Gladstone had carried his reforms, so that he could boast in the same speech, "Ireland has now a constituency as broad, as extended, as qualified to speak their wants and their wishes as either Scotland or England." But, strange to say, the Irish Nationalists allied themselves with their hereditary foes, the Tories (Orangemen, of course, included), and, as might have been expected, coercion was their promised reward? Hence they were compelled to vote against the ministry they had been virtually supporting at the polls. Gladstone's speech foretold the absorbing character of Irish affairs, weighed with wisdom the very combinations which have arisen, but there were some who then opposed him, who, if associated in the ministry with the Liberals or Tories, would render either unworthy of trust. Who can these be?—T. H.

STUDIES IN JEWISH HISTORY.

LESSON IX, Feb. 28, 1886.—Nehemiah's Prayer.—Neh. 1: 1-11.

GOLDEN TEXT.—Give us help from trouble; for vain is the help of man.—Ps. 108: 13.

[Open the Bible and read the lesson.]

COMMENTS ON THE LESSON BY E. E. FLAGG.

1. The manner in which Nehemiah prayed. vs. 1–4. Nehemiah fasted. Fasting as a religious exercise has generally fallen into disuse, but as an act of devotion from sincere hearts there is every reason to believe that it is one of the strongest of spiritual forces. A little temporary abstinence may often lead the soul to clearer views of truth through its beneficial effects on the body itself. But Nehemiah not only fasted and prayed, he mourned and wept. When any great work is to be wrought, God's way is generally to call one man to it, to lay it as a burden upon his soul. It was thus with Luther, and we had the Reformation. It was so with Wilberforce, and we had the abolition of the African slave trade; with William Carey, and we had the great work of Foreign Missions inaugurated. We may be feeble and weak, and the task before us loom mountain high in its difficulties, but the earnest of our success is in the strength of our desires.

2. The elements of prevailing prayer. vs. 5–11. Nehemiah's prayer divides into two heads. First, confession of sin; second, an earnest pleading of God's promises.

Nehemiah was doubtless considered by his countrymen a very devout Jew, yet he felt his own spiritual corruption as deeply as did Paul when he cried, "O, wretched man that I am! who shall deliver me from the body of this death?" or Bunyan, groaning and crying for soul deliverance. We notice that Nehemiah's worldly position was one of great ease and honor. He was the king's cup-bearer. He enjoyed the privilege of personal access to the sovereign, but he had no thought of turning the fact to his own private advantage. Unselfishness must always be a prime element in prevailing prayer; and last, but not least, a spirit of action. Perhaps at the present day there may be too little time spent in meditation and prayer; if so, we may be assured that such a lack will bear fruit in superficial living. Do we, like Nehemiah, use the advantages of our worldly position, whatever it may be, for God? Another point suggested is that the fire of his zeal and devotion had communicated itself to others besides, for in his prayer he uses the plural. Strong desire for a blessing is always contagious. "The street and the wall shall be built again, even in troublous times," runs the prophecy. So times of greatest outward tumult and trouble may be the period of Zion's greatest triumph, provided only that there be that spirit of devotion which cries in the language of our golden text, "Give us help from trouble, for vain is the help of man."

LIGHT FROM THE WORD.

What conditions must true prayer always fulfil? Job 16: 17, Acts 12: 5, Rom. 12: 12, l. c., Jas. 5: 15, John 4: 23, 24.

[From U. P. Bible Teacher.]

Soon after the corner-stone of the temple was laid, the Samaritans who occupied Northern Palestine, offered to assist in its erection. This proposal was rejected, and the Samaritans began to put hindrances in their way. They even sent false reports to the king of Persia, and had it not been for the recorded copy of Cyrus's decree (who was now dead) the work must have entirely ceased. The lamentations of the old men weakened the hearts of the builders, and the people grew indifferent, and the earnest exhortations of the prophets Haggai and Zechariah (Ezra 5: 1) were necessary to secure the completion of the temple. It was not dedicated until B. C. 516, twenty years after the return. Ezra came to Jerusalem B. C. 457, nearly sixty years after the dedication of the temple (Ezra 7: 8). Zerubbabel, Joshua the high priest, and the prophets Haggai and Zachariah, have all passed away. The story of Esther also falls within this interval.

"And it came to pass · · · as I was in Shushan the palace" (v. 1). Shushan the palace was not the best place in the world for a Christian to live, and yet we find that one of the grandest religious characters of Old Testament history was developed in just that unfavorable atmosphere. Perhaps we concede too much to outside influences. If the heart is right with God, outside influences can effect the life but slightly. Given a thoroughly converted heart and a truly consecrated life, and then palace or hovel, wealth or poverty, honor or dishonor, no outward circumstances can prevent Christ from shining out in the life.

"And they said unto me, The remnant that are left · · · are in great affliction and reproach," etc. (v. 3). A sorry outcome, certainly, of the grand hopes that inspired the return under Cyrus almost a hundred years before. There was a reason for it. Too close an alliance with the ungodly; too great concern for their apparent present well-being, regardless of the requirements God had laid on them in the law. That is always the case. Make your own present well-being and the good-will of the ungodly your chief concern, and all the splendid aspirations and high hopes and brilliant prospects that animate your early Christian life will utterly fail. Christians ought to have learned that fact by this time. The church's history of four thousand years is full of melancholy testimony on this point.

"When I heard these words, I sat down and wept, and mourned certain days and fasted, and prayed before the God of heaven" (v. 4). To know just what to do when one is in trouble is the important thing toward relief. And that Nehemiah knew. "Take it to the Lord in prayer." Think of it! The kindest, wisest, mightiest, tenderest being in all this universe invites you always to come right to him with your troubles, with the assurance that he will help you out. And remember, God concerns himself with the little things, as well as the great things, of life. "Verily, I say unto you, the very hairs of your head are all numbered."

"Remember, I beseech thee, the word that thou commandest thy servant Moses" (v. 8). Here is the fulcrum for the lever of prayer, by which mountains may be removed or nations revolutionized. "Remember thy word." If you want to use this mighty lever of prayer, be sure the fulcrum is the word of God, and then the hand of faith will find no difficulty in raising any weight that it is necessary to lift. "The effectual prayer" that "availeth much," is the prayer that pleads the sure promises of God's word.

EDITORS.

J. BLANCHARD. HENRY L. KELLOGG.

CHICAGO, THURSDAY, FEBRUARY 18, 1886.

Hon. Fred. Douglas answering an application of a friend a few days since wrote to him: "I am opposed to secret societies."

DR. T. S. CHILDS of Washington, a learned, able and Christian writer, speaking of the Masons profaning the Washington Monument, said "That was infamous."

Neither Fred Douglas or Hon. John R. Lych ever joined a secret society. O'Hara of North Caroliua, now in the House, is a Catholic and, of course, no Mason. If the 800,000 colored Baptists will follow Countee, Briukley aud Woodsmall, and leave the lodges, these able men will be their leaders, and a colored hand will hold the key of the White House.

MRS. DR. PALMER of New Orleans says: "My husband never joined the Masons. He is always open and above board in what he does. Nor do I think any of our ministers [of the Presbyterian Church South] belong to them." Dr. Henry M. Smith of the South Western Presbyterian (New Orleans) never joined a secret society. He is reputed one of the soundest, most profound men in the Church South. He said, "My point against the lodge is that made by Mr. Gray of the Interior, the lodge ritual mangles Scriptnre to eject Christ from his own Word."

It is encouraging that, after eighteen years, trial, The Cynosure gains steadily on the confideuce of its subscribers; and subscriptions come in well. But those who look for a vast sudden rise in the subscription list of a paper opposing popular evils will be mistaken. Three causes hinder such rapid growth: ignorance, indifference, and malice in the heart against trnth. And then, when such a paper begins to conquer the current and run up stream, local papers will, and must, and OUGHT to spring up, and divide the patronage which has been won. But, by and by, the branches overflow, and run back into the mother channel, and then, look out for a flood! But till that time comes, we must pull hard and steady as sailors hauling a ship ashore. Every man to the rope, and sing, "he-yeo." Every reader must be an agent.

WHEN "THE AMERICAN PARTY" was named by a large convention in Shakespeare Hall, Syracuse, N Y., after full and earnest discussion, "The Know Nothing" objection was urged, but was answered, the fact that that bad secret party took the American name proves the wisdom of the name; for secret societies are "wise in their generation." Then their false use of it will make the true meaning of "American" more clear. viz., open fair play; recognition of God; the Sabbath, the poor man's rest day; and the Bible, the poor man's book, "no titles of nobility," or higher and lower "degrees" and "orders" in society. This was and is the meaning of American, and that the Know Nothings misused this great name, makes it the more glorious as the sun is after the cloud is blown off. The American party is the only one which means what it says. The Democrats were called Republicans in Jefferson's day. They have swapped names, and changed sides. But the American platform is the platform of 1876. The Prohibition party is better than its name. Let it shake off secrecy and it is American.

EDITORIAL CORRESPONDENCE.

TEMPERANCE MATTERS IN CONGRESS AND THE DISTRICT.

WASHINGTON, FEB. 8, 1886.

Yesterday (Sabbath) the blind preacher, Millburn, chaplain of the Senate, preached in the Methodist Metropolitan church,—a trifle high flown, with a ring on his finger, but much more than a common man, and his sermon sound Gospel doctrine. In the afternoon Senator Colquitt, of Georgia, and Mrs. Mary Hunt, of Massachusetts, addressed a full house, galleries and all, in the Congregational church. The speaking was earnest and able. Mrs. Hunt has got under way, to come before Congress, "A law requiring in all schools in this District, instruction in physiology and hygiene, which shall give special prominence to the nature of alcoholic drinks, narcotics and poisons, and of their effects upon the human system."

It is supposed such a law will pass, as petitions have been largely sigued for it. One ex-burglar, graduated from the jail, and afterward from the Central Missiou here, got 2,800 names to the petition in oue day. Some liquor sellers sigued petitions for such a law. Humanity is at a low ebb in dram-sellers at this day, but agitation shakes up what little there is; aud as teaching childreu temperance does uot immediately threateu a raid upon their infamous business, they are glad to do something to show that they are good temperaucc men in all but the sale of liquor.

Senator Colquitt has giveu notice that he will present a bill giving local optiou to the District of Columbia; such as all the countics in his State (Georgia) have already adopted. This will reach into the Capitol.

The Women's Christian Temperance Union of the District has been revolutionized. Mrs. Roach was a Blaiue womau like Elleu Foster and the president two years ago. She was an able and good woman, but she verily believed the Republican party was the true prohibition party. This made trouble, as the National W. C. T. U. at Detroit and at St. Louis voted to favor the political party which avowed prohibitiou. This the St. John and American parties did. Mrs. Roach resigned and Mrs. La Fetra is now president of the District Union.

ONE PARTY OF REFORM.

The President of the Prohibition Union in the District of Columbia, who is also a member of the National or Finch committee and also has belonged to all the secret temperance lodges, has given them all up, and now goes with the American party. A leader of the N. Y. Good Templar lodges declares his willingness to do the same. Vice President Henry Wilson told the writer that the first night after his initiation, he moved to publish the secret ritual of the Good Templars. What then hinders our all coming together as an American party? Every good man and woman in the Prohibition host will consent with shoutings; and their name is legion. No rational man can hope for prohibition success, while the open air bodies meet and deliberate, and then their initiated brethren, get behind tyled doors and plot. Secrecy is everywhere unpopular. See the denunciations of secret societies by John Morley in England and John Sherman in the United States.

A BUBBLE.—THE AMERICAN OFFICE.—THE SENATE.

FEB. 12th.—The colored people are likely still to be humbugged. A scheme is uow started to get the 165,000 colored people of the District to pay a dollar a month to a vast new co-operative association, which is to give every colored family a house and lot; build a street railroad for colorcd owners; start huge coal yards, shoe factories, etc., and generally to bring in a political, social, and domestic millennium for the colored race. This was circulated in handbills requesting subscriptions to stock the other night, and urged in a finished and elegant speech. A Mr. Scott arose and pricked the bubble by asking how many of the rich colored men, the speaker included, now buy their coal and shoes of colored yard-owners and shoe dealers?

Mr. and Mrs. Hinman are active and useful and their children doing finely. Prof. and Mrs. Bailey are abundant in labors, and Mrs. Bailey's health is much improved, Wheaton may well be proud of her representatives.

The Senate Republicau leaders, Sherman, Edmunds, etc., arc endeavoring to compel President Cleveland to give his reasons for removals from office. This to outsiders seems small business. The executive is one branch of the Government, the Senate and House another, and the Supreme Court a third. It is absurd to demand that one of these co-ordinate branches should send to another one the reasons of its actions.

Senator Colquitt may be misreported by interviewers. But they make him say his local option bill for the District is not to invade the grog-shops in the Capitol; and seven kinds of wine in the White House at State dinners. We shall see. Blair is deemed sound and safe. J. B.

NOTES AND COMMENTS.

A walking match between E. P. Weston and Daniel O'Leary was finished the other day in Chicago, which is a temperance triumph. It was agrced in making the match that the contestants were to walk twelve hours daily, the man who covered 2,500 miles first to be the winner. The walk was for a purse of $3,000, offered by New York advocates of temperance. Weston is a life-long tectotaller, and attributes his endurance to his temperance principles. O'Leary is a great walker but a constant drinker. In this case as in every other, temperance triumphed. O'Leary completely gave out several days before the finish, plainly showing the effects of his grog. Weston tramped on alone; after walking fifty-four days averaging over forty-six miles per day he was in sufficiently good condition to take the train an hour later for New York.

President Bartlett of Dartmouth College writes to a committee of statistics respecting the hazing and other brutal and immoral practices among the students of that institution. "A false sense of honor is giving way to a true one. We are making earnest efforts to do away with the notion that students may have a different standard of honor, morals, and obligations from other men." This is a singular statement from a college president. A Masonic lodge may persuade its members to believe that they have a moral code or obligations differing from those which bind the consciences of their fellow men, but the criminals in our courts entertain no such folly. From what sort of household and Sabbath instruction have these Dartmouth students come out? and what sort of moral gymnastics are they put through to straighten their eccentricities?

George Q. Cannou, the former delegate to Congress from Utah, who defiantly advocated his Mormonism in Washington and in the columns of the North American Review, which stooped to the bad business of being, for the time, an organ of depravity, has just been arrested, after skulking and hiding nearly a year. The Central Pacific railway officials lent him a car which was attached to a regular train, and the fugitive reached Nevada, when he was arrested. The loyal citizens of Salt Lake City rejoice at the arrest, for they look upon Cannon as the directing mind in the Mormon church, who, from his hiding place has issued the orders to keep firm and maintain polygamy.

A new Credit-Mobilier scheme has developed in Washington in the Pan-Electric Telephone company, with millions of stock put around where it will "do the most good." Attorney General Garland is loaded up with $500,000 of the stuff, and his decision to briug suit to annul the Bell patent gives good reason for the suspicion that the bribe worked well. The matter has been before the Cabinet, and Garland says he will give the stock to some benevolent institution—if he can find one to take it. But that by no means clears him, and the demand that he be sent home, and a clean-handed man put in his place knocks loudly at the White House door.

The Senate has interposed its objection between General O. O. Howard and the offer of the decoration of the Legion of Honor and other tokens of honor from the government of France. General Logan took a prominent part in the debate and is reported as making a good argument against titles in America. This is all very good, only Logan should be made to take a little of his own medicine. He has also been speaking against the secret sessions of the Senate, an outworn necessity of the early days of the Republic. We are glad to have such an advocate. Logan has been swearing to keep secrets long enough in the lodge. We hope he is repenting of the folly of the secretism and sham titles of the lodge and will throw heavy stones not only at government secrecy and foreign titles, but at the equally objectionable fashion of crests of arms which many are assuming at Washington; but let him get out of his glass house first.

There have been excellent and able sermons preached on the Salvation Army as an antidote to Socialism, and their argument is founded on the great truth that the Founder of Christianity better understood the necessities of the poor than any other man, and the means for the alleviation of their trials he has surely provided. In like manner the solution of the Chinese question, now agitating the Pacific towns, may be found in the teachings of Jesus Christ. As a practical example take a report from Albina, Oregon, in the Interior of last week: "Our Chinese work, under charge of Rev. Mr. Holt, recently from China at once took a front place among the missions in our city. He diligently set to work to learn the language, which is a different dialect from that which he had been accustomed to for twelve years, and in six months began preaching to the Chinese in their native tongue, and holding preaching service every Sabbath evening. He has now a school of about sixty, which meets every week-day evening, except Saturday. Besides, an effort is being made to get the educational control of some Chinese children, with promise of success, while Mrs. Holt visits among the women, with encouraging results. The Chinese question is becoming a serious one here. Very quietly, but resolutely, the anti-Chinese organizations are using their influence against any person or enterprise that favors or employs these unfortunates. Our synod gave its voice, however, against any unlawful or unchristian treatment of the Chinese, and while some of our adherents are anti-Chinese, yet our ministry, with one exception, perhaps, are ready to champion even these despised people, if need be."

—The Living Way says that Rev. R. N. Countee has moved into the new parsonage of the Tabernacle Baptist church, though it is yet unfinished.

—Pres. J. Blanchard called the other day at the White House, Washington, and was very kindly recieved by Miss Cleveland. A report of the brief but interesting interview waits for space.

—The sketch of the minstrel of our reform, the old "Liberty Singer," George W. Clark, is printed a week or two earlier than we had planned, because of the serious illuess of its subject, which his friends feared last week might soon termiuate his long life of usefulness. The concluding part of the history is reserved till next week, and will be followed by an article from Dr. James C. Jackson, of Dansville, N. Y., whose long and intimate relations with Bro. Clark permit him to speak of his useful life with the warmth and discrimination of friendship.

—An apology is due Dea. O. M. Brown, of Oberlin, for the singular error of omitting his name from his letter on Jefferson Davis as a Mason. In the same connection is a statement in a secret society paper that Mrs. J. Wilkes Booth, widow of the assassin of Abraham Lincoln, is yet living under an assumed name with two daughters, and says that her husband acted as the tool of a diabolical conspiracy with which men high in authority were connected. Booth was, we believe, a member of the lodge, and so more easily made the tool of such diabolism.

—Mrs. A. N. Balch, of Church Hill, Mississippi, writes us that she has a valuable property which she wishes to sell at a nominal price, which could be easily transformed into a fine home for aged negroes and orphans. The buildiugs are ample, the grounds comprise 125 acres of land, and the location healthy. Mrs. Balch has been for many years a teacher among the colored people, and wishes now to remove on account of her children. Any philanthropist who may desire to aid the poor in this way, will do well to correspond with Mrs. Balch.

—Bro. Dissette returued from Oswego, Ill., last Wednesday, to his home in Wheaton so unwell that he feared a severe sickness. By the good providence of God, however, he was again able to start out the first of this week.

—In connection with the discussion arising from Bro. Dissette's Champaign experience, which we close with Bro. Wood's strong letter, so far as personal matters are concerned, the following excellent hint comes from a good brother in Boston: "I wish to suggest to your readers that if each would secure an opportunity to state briefly, in some meeting of the church to which he belongs, the objections to secret societies, it might be the means of enlightening many and helping on the reform. Such a statement kindly and prayerfully submitted would probably be well received in most instances." How much might the truth be advanced if this suggestion were generally acted upon.

—In "Pith and Point" Bro. Johnston of Arkansas writes of his willingness to lecture. Letters have also been recieved from a Baptist brother in Minnesota Rev. A. M. Hurd, of Gray Eagle, who desires to engage in lecture work. The atteution of the N. C. A. Board is called to these applications; and in connection Bro. Hinman desires also to open up a work in the South, still neglected though long appealing for help. Bro. H. is about ready to go by faith as he did at first and recieve support in answer to appeals through the paper. There is a great lack somewhere about the lecture work. The Board adopted last summer a plan that promised well, but it does not seem to be automatic. Bro. Hawley is supported entirely in the rich State of Iowa by N. C. A. funds. The Iowa brethren should shoulder this responsibility themselves, and let the Association send Bro. Hinman to a more needy field. Already the lecture season is more than half gone and Illinois and Ohio only have lecturers and support them; in Michigan and Kansas the brethren are about withdrawing from the work for lack of support.

—The Dissette-Nutting debate which has for two or three weeks contributed to the interest of these columns has a fitting close in the able letter of Bro. Wood. Other letters have been recieved which argue soundly for a radical reform Gospel, and will appear in due time but with personalities eliminated.

REFORM NEWS.

SOUTHEASTERN IOWA.

Lectures in Burlington.—The German Methodists.—Morning Sun, Swedesburgh, Linton and Mediapolis.—The Lion becomes a Lamb.

DEAR CYNOSURE:—After leaving Winfield I went to the city of Burlington and preached twice in the first Free Methodist church, and also lectured twice on the religion of Freemasonry and its relations to the Christian religion. These lectures were advertised in three of the daily papers, and 1,000 handbills were scattered; still there seemed to be but little sensation produced outside of the congregation where the lectures were delivered.

The same week I delivered two lectures in the German Free Methodist church of Burlington. I had preached once in this church the Sabbath night before. These lectures were advertised in four daily papers, and a thousand more handbills were scattered. By this time the blister began to draw. A D. D. of the Protestant Episcopal church, who is said to be a Freemason and a leading man in Masonic circles, attended both of these lectures. I did not know of his presence at the time, but I was conscious of being specially helped by the Holy Spirit to expose the infidel character of the religious philosophy of Freemasonry. Some members of the German M. E. church were present at these lectures and became deeply interested.

On my way from Burlington to Morning Sun, I was introduced by a German minister of the Gospel, who had heard three of the lectures in Burlington, to a presiding elder of the German M. E. church, who was on his way to Wapella to attend a quarterly meeting. I gave him several tracts on Freemasonry. I afterwards met this same presiding elder again, and found him reading the tracts. He said there were not many of the German Methodists Freemasons; but that many of them had joined the trades unions, and were now joining the Knights of Labor. He said that the Knights of Labor were made up of men from all the different trades unions, and was really the massing of all those different organizations for a fight with capital. He expressed grave fears that this country and Europe also would yet pass through a bloody crisis, as the result of the war of the Knights of Labor upon capital. He thought that bloody strife was sure to come unless some action could be taken to prevent it. I hope it may please God to open my way to lecture to the German Methodists.

I preached twice in Morning Sun on the Sabbath after my lectures at Burlington, and then went to Swedesburgh and lectured again in the Evangelical Swedish Lutheran church. A gentleman in Swedesburgh who is a Freemason had sent several times for me to come to his business place, when I was there before. But as it seemed more like a challenge to come and receive criticism, than an invitation to make his acquaintance, I did not go. But receiving two calls to come to him while on my last visit at Bro. Franzien's, we concluded to go over and receive such correction as he felt called upon to give. But though we stayed with him fifteen or twenty minutes, not a word of criticism or censure was offered. God had gone before us, as before Daniel into the den of lions, and wrought the same miracle that he did upon the lions.

After this I lectured in the Covenanter churches of which Rev. T. P. Robb and J W. Dill are pastors.

The Sabbath following I preached at North Weare and at Crawfordsville. My next lecture will be in the Swede Lutheran church four miles from Kossuth, Rev. Mr. Nelson, pastor. Next week I may if the Lord please, go with Revs. Franzien and Nelson to Marshalltown to attend the Iowa Conference of the Evangelical Swedish Lutheran church.

I have seen several who heard Secretary Stoddard's lecture at Winfield on Monday evening, after my Thursday night lecture the week before. All speak of it highly. One young man thought that if the Masons were not already cursed with judicial blindness, they would see their error and forsake it, after hearing Bro. Stoddard.

In conclusion I would return thanks to our Lord Jesus Christ for the power he has given me over devils. I would reverently recognize the fact that it is because Christ has been with me, that the demon of lodgery has behaved like a cur that has been often cudgeled. But whether the Lord restrains the wrath of men or lets it loose and makes it to work for the furtherance of the Gospel, I am content to go forward doing duty and trusting to him to be my sun and shield as well as Saviour. Let us each pray and work for the removal of the triple curse, the saloon, the lodge, and the brothel. And let us strive to offer prevailing prayer for a great outpouring of the Holy Spirit and the revival of pure and undefiled religion throughout our country and the world. Your brother in Christ. C. F. HAWLEY.

REFORM WORK IN CONNECTICUT.

WILLIMANTIC, Coun., Feb. 9, 1886.

EDITOR CHRISTIAN CYNOSURE:—It may cheer the hearts of the brethren scattered abroad to know that the Lord is still at work in Connecticut,

"His wonders to perform."

It was my happy privilege last Sabbath, Feb. 7, to preach to the brethren gathered in Bro. Conant's Mission Hall, Willimantic, from Acts 1: 5, and the Lord owned his word in the hearts of believers. At 5 o'clock P. M. the hall was crowded at the usual temperance service. The power of the Lord attended the truth spoken in this meeting, which was started and is continued on the principle that temperance is an essential part of Christianity. One young man testified with joy that the grace of God had delivered him from the power of rum and tobacco, and taken away all desire for them.

Monday evening the Young People's Debating Society met in the same hall. Bro. Conant is president of this society, and bishop of Willimantic so far as reform Gospel work is concerned. The question debated was: "Resolved that prohibition is the only effective means of suppressing the liquor traffic." The debate was very creditable to the young people and showed an overwhelming sentiment in favor of prohibition. One debater on the affirmative argued that Freemasonry hindered the execution of the license laws, as Masons were bound to help one another. The debater on the negative replied that there were Prohibition Masons as well as Republican Masons, and that a Prohibition Mason was no better in that respect than any other Mason, and would stand by a brother Masonic liquor dealer when the real test came. The reply brought down an uproar of applause, and poor Hiram had no defender.

Some one will ask how these young people happen to know so much about the real inwardness of Freemasonry. Bro. Conant has been at work quietly an patiently for more than ten years to eulighten the 10,000 people of Willimantic on secret societies. He has opened the way for Levington, Blanchard, Browne, Barlow, Hinman, and other reform speakers here. He has introduced the Cynosure and the Christian Witness, and has now a dozen copies of Miss Flagg's grand book, "Between Two Opinious," circulating in the village. The very gratifying success of Bro. Conant should encourage every Christian worker to have the courage of faith and to keep at work. "In due season we shall reap if we faint not." The religious interest at Mission Hall is deep and thorough, on the line of full salvation. A divinely sent pastor would soon gather a strong church which would be as a city set on a hill, giving light to all the surroundiug country. S. C. KIMBALL.

OHIO NOTES.

A Busy Field.—A Cheering Endorsement and a fine Audience among the Progressive Dunkers.

ALBION, O., Feb. 12, 1886.

DEAR CYNOSURE:—Owing to the fact that revival meetings are being held, I have been compelled to pass by several points where I had hoped to have spoken during the past week. I have not been idle, however; but can agaiu report progress.

At Savannah, Ashland, Mansfield, West Salem and other points I have found warm friends to our cause. On Tuesday evening I spoke in the College chapel of the Brethren (German Baptist) School at Ashland. All the students and quite a number of the citizeus attended. At the conclusion of my lecture, when I called for questions or remarks, Rev. H. R. Holsinger arose and made a short, but very telling speech. He fully indorsed all that I had said, and added that he had at one time been persuaded by friends to unite with a secret society. He gave some of his experiences, said that he believed the whole system to be wrong, and advised every young man to investigate carefully if he thought of joining.

I received a cordial invitation to return and "speak further on this matter." At Savannah a number were willing to help along by subscribing for the Cynosure. I have agreed to return and speak in the United Presbyterian church of this place on next Tuesday evening. A good attendance is expected. At West Salem I found one man who had renounced the things of darkness and come to the light of Christ. He, of course, subscribed for the Cynosure.

THE HOME.

WORK.

I did not know thee once; thou wast to me
A cruel master, setting metes and bounds,
And Lodging me from the sweet pleasure grounds,
Set thick with flowers, where I would fain be free.
Among the roses then I did not see,
With childish eyes, the thorns that since I've found;
I heard no discord in the music's sound:
And fancied life a day of Jubilee.
Now to thy gates I turn for all my peace,
Shut safely in with thee, stern, trusty friend,
I would not wander till my days shall end,
And earthly work and earthly sorrow cease:
And when at last thy harness I unbind,
Thee in the spirit home I hope to find.

SEVENTY THOUSAND MINISTERS.

There are some seventy thousand ordained ministers in our country. The great bulk of these have presumably been trained in some theological institution. But of this seventy thousand ministers, at least one third of them are not actively engaged in preaching the Gospel. And if not, why not? Were they called by Christ into the work? or did they drift into it? or were they persuaded into it? or were they bribed into it by the living they expected to make out of it? If they were called to preach by Christ, what reason have they for not preaching? Has the Lord excused them? Have they thrown down their commission as Jonah did? If they were called as Jonah was, they would be brought back again to the work.

We must assume that they never were called by the Lord of the harvest. We do not speak of those ministers who have been set over important societies by the churches. We know men occupying the position of secretary to some of our societies, who, it seems to us, ought to be in the pulpit, notwithstanding it would be hard to fill their places in the offices they now hold. But we speak of those who, if they are called, have not a calling. How comes it they are without vocation?

Again there are ministers who have charge of churches who from year to year seem never to be able to win any souls to Christ, and whose sphere of influence is limited to the very few persons who attend on their ministry, notwithstanding there are hundreds and thousands about them not evangelized. There are men in the ministry who scarcely preach as many sermons in the course of the year as there are weeks, whose practice would lead us to suppose that the Gospel was a message only intended to be heard on the Lord's day, and had nothing to do with the time occupied by the great busy world in which we live.

There are those who, while they have not abandoned the theoretical ministry, are yet sitting mournfully, if not at ease at least in idleness, waiting for some church "to call them." This would imply that their calling was in anticipation from some church and not from Christ. Has Christ called them, and, if he has, to what did he call them? Did he call them to wait for some church to endorse his call and give them a vocation, or did he call them to "go preach" his Gospel? There are churchless ministers and ministerless churches all over the land. We think no one will venture to say that such a state of things is in accordance with the mind of the Spirit.

There is a radical defect in our system somewhere. It is not our especial object to point it out in this article, but to call attention to the fact of such a defect. Let us suppose that the seventy thousand ministers in the United States were animated with the evangelical spirit which presumably belonged to those servants who first went preaching the Gospel after the Resurrection. What would be the result? This number distributed among our vast population would give less than eight hundred souls to each minister. There are, therefore, enough ministers, if they be called of God, to evangelize this whole country in a short space of time.

But the answer comes, "The people will not go to hear them." Our Lord did not command the unevangelized people to go to the minister, but he did command the minister or preacher to go to the people. This, however, is the very thing the ministers, as a rule, are not doing. Certainly the unemployed or churchless ministers are not doing it, and not a great proportion of those who are settled are doing it. How many young men who are graduated from our seminaries have the training, the spirit, and the enthusiasm to "go and preach" without a call from some church? How many come out of the seminaries with such an impression of the lost state of man, of the power of the Gospel for salvation; so filled and saturated with the word of God and so constrained by the love of Christ that they could stand up anywhere and declare the glad tidings, and not only could, but would, fearlessly do this thing? Is it not true that the great majority of them to-day would be unable to preach unless they had their sermon written out in a plain hand, to be read amid the proprieties of a comfortable church building? Is it not true that the first great anxiety of our graduates is for a "call" from some church, and, failing in such a call, are they so prepared by their seminary training that they can and do preach the Gospel because Christ has called them into his harvest field? Are they prepared and trained to call a congregation to them rather than be depeudent upon a congregation to extend them a call? We seriously doubt it.—Independent.

SHAMGAR'S OX-GOAD.

I remember a sermon that I heard more than torty years ago. The preacher was one of those old-fashioned students of the Bible who believed that "all Scripture is given by inspiration of God, and is profitable for doctrine, for reproof, for correction, for instruction in righteousness."

On this occasion he said: "Brethren, I call your attention this morning to Shamgar and his ox-goad (he pronounced g-o-a-d 'gad'). I shall consider, according to the order laid down by Paul in his letter to Timothy, the doctrine of the ox-gad, the reproof of the ox-gad, the correction of the ox-gad, the instruction of the ox-gad; and in conclusion, shall apply the ox-gad." The announcement as to the conclusion was rather startling. But, trusting to our skill as Gospel-hardened hearers in dodging applications, we kept our seats.

The doctrine of the ox-goad, according to the preacher, was, that when God calls a man to go and fight for him he should go just as he is, with just such weapons as he has, and trust in the Lord. Shamgar was driving his oxen. The Lord said to him, "Deliver my people from the Philistines." Shamgar might have replied, "I have no sword or spear or shield, how then can I fight with these uncircumcised warriors who are fully armed? Let me find weapons of war and a fencing-master, and spend two or three years in learning how to thrust and parry, and then I will go." And then the good elder pitched into the theological seminaries (simineres he called them) and "the high learned preachers" as vigorously as Shamgar pitched into the Philistines. "Why, brethren," he said, "I myself was driving oxen when the Lord called me to preach the Gospel. I didn't know anything but 'gee-haw.'

"I asked the Lord why he did not go to some of the simineres and call the men there, that could read Greek and Hebrew. And he said that the people didn't want Greek and Hebrew. They needed to be driven to do their duty as I drove my oxen; and that a good ox-driver could not fail to be a successful minister. He would certainly have learned two very important lessons. First to be patient with folks that move slow, and, second, to push things. I have found most of the people that I have preached to very much like the oxen I used to drive. They don't like to move in the furrows of repentance and break up the fallow ground. So I have to use the old gad and keep pushing things."

Shamgar and his ox-goad are profitable for reproof. We see the Philistines all around us. We think that our condition is hopeless. What can a few ox-drivers do against a host of warriors? But the Lord can work with a few as well as with many. The Lord has chosen the weak things to confound the mighty. "Why, brethren," he exclaimed, rising to one of his highest flights of eloquence, "when the Spirit of the Lord comes upon a man, as it came upon Samson, he can slay thousands with the jawbone of an ass. I know it is so from my own experience."

Shamgar and his ox-goad are profitable for correction. Those Philistines had wrong notions. They were proud. They trusted in their swords, and spears, and despised the Hebrew ox-drivers. They trusted in their idols and despised Jehovah, who seemed to have deserted his people. But the Lord sent Shamgar to teach them. He went with the rod of correction. That ox-goad of his was a powerful preacher. If he had read the moral law to those Philistines till he was gray he would not have made them stop robbing and enslaving Hebrews. But when he killed six hundred of them the rest began to open their eyes, and to turn from the error of their ways. It is not enough for a preacher to teach people the truth. He must rebuke them sharply. The Lord used an ox-goad on Saul of Tarsus, near Damascus. He told him that it was no use for him to kick against it. And Saul never forgot the lesson.

Shamgar and his ox-goad are profitable for instruction in righteousness. They teach us how to conquer our temptations and to slay our sins. Spiritual foes start up around us like a host of armed men, six hundred or more. What shall we do? We have nothing in our hands but a simple ox-goad called prayer. Well, let us wield this with all our might. Let us slay one at a time. Shamgar did not attack the whole six hundred at once. No doubt he learned the lesson that has given success to many a warrior since—divide and conquor. That is the way for the man of God to become perfect. Begin with your easily besetting sin. Grapple with it in the name of the Lord. Trust in his strength and not in your own, as David trusted when he went to meet the giant. Keep swinging the ox-goad. It is a mighty weapon in the hands of an earnest man.

At the end of an hour (for that was the orthodox length of a sermon forty years ago) the elder drew himself up to his full height, and said: "Now, brethren, though I am a Baptist, and believe in immersion, I have tried to sprinkle in the applicatiou as I went along, and hence I will only say in conclusion that if there are any oxen here they had better hurry up, or the barn door will be shut before they get home, and they will be left in outer darkness. As long as I preach I am going to use the ox-gad upon lazy Christians, for I want to save you if I can. And if any of you are Philistines who trust in your objections to the Bible, or in your own notions about being saved, as these old enemies of God trusted in their armors and their idols, the great Jehovah will smite you with the rod of his anger when you least expect it, if you don't repent."—Interior.

A LITTLE GENTLEMAN.

His cap is old, but his hair is gold,
And his face as clear as the sky;
And whoever he meets, on lanes or streets,
He looks him straight in the eye,
With a fearless pride that has naught to hide,
Though he bows like a little knight,
Quite debonair to a lady fair,
With a smile that is swift as light.

Does his mother call? Not kite, or ball,
Or the prettiest game, can stay
His eager feet as he hastens to greet
Whatever she means to say;
And the teachers depend on the little friend,
At school in his place at nine,
With his lessons learned and his good marks earned,
All ready to toe the line.

I wonder if you have seen him too,
This boy, who is not too big
For a morning kiss from mother and sis,
Who isn't a bit of a prig,
But gentle and strong, and the whole day long,
As merry as a boy can be;
A gentleman, dears, in the coming years,
And at present the boy for me.

GLADSTONE AS A BOY.

John Gladstone, the father of the present Premier of Great Britain, liked that his children should exercise their judgment by stating the why and wherefore of every opinion they offered, and a college friend of William's, who visited him during the summer of 1829, furnishes amusing pictures of the family customs in that house, "where the children and their parents argued upon everything." They would debate as to whether the trout should be boiled or broiled, whether a window should be opened, and whether it was likely to be fine or wet next day. It was always perfectly good-humored, but curious to a stranger because of the care which all of the disputants took to advance no propositions, even to the prospects of a rain, rashly.

One day Thomas Gladstone knocked down a wasp with his handkerchief, and was about to crush it on the table, when the father started the question as to whether he had the right to kill the insect; and this point was discussed with as much seriousness as if a human life had been at stake. When at last it was adjudged that death was deserved because it was a trespasser in the drawing-room, a common enemy and a danger there, it was found that the insect had crawled from under the handkerchief, and was flying away with a sniggering sort of buzz, as if to mock them all.

On another occasion William Gladstone and his sister Mary disputed as to where a certain picture ought to be hung. An old Scotch servant came in with a ladder, and stood irresolute while the argument progressed; but as Miss Mary would not yield, William gallantly ceased from speech, though unconvinced, of course. The servant then hung up the picture where the young lady ordered; but when he had done this he crossed the room and hammered a nail into the opposite wall. He was asked why he did this. "Aweel, Miss, that'll do to hang the picture on when ye'll have come round to Master Willie's opeenion." The family generally did come around to William's opinion, for the resources of his tongue-fencing were wonderful, and his father, who admired a clever feint as much as a straight thrust, never failed to encourage him by saying: "Hear, hear! Well said! Well put, Willie!" if the young debater bore himself well in the encounter.—Golden Days.

DON'T UNDERVALUE THE BOY.

Too many men make their boys feel that they are of little or no account while they are boys. Lay a responsibility on a boy, and he will meet it in a manful spirit. On no account ignore their disposition to investigate. Help them to understand things. We are too apt to treat a boy's seeking after knowledge as mere idle curiosity. "Don t ask questions," is poor advice to boys. If you do not explain puzzling things to them, you oblige them to make many experiments before they can find out, and though experimental knowledge is best, in one sense, in another it is not, for that which can be explained clearly, does not need experimenting with. If the principle involved is understood, there is no further trouble, and the boy can go ahead intelligently.

Do not wait for the boy to grow up before you begin to treat him as an equal. A proper amount of confidence, and words of encouragement and advice, and giving him to understand that you trust him in many ways, helps to make a man of him long before he is a man in either stature or years. —Amirican Agriculturist.

HOW TO SAVE BOYS.

Women who have sons to rear, and dread the demoralizing influences of bad associates, ought to understand the nature of young manhood. It is excessively restless. It is disturbed by vain ambitions, by thirst for action, by longings for excitement, by irrepressible desires to touch life in manifold ways. If you mothers rear your sons so that your homes are associated with the suppression of natural instincts, you will be sure to throw them into the society that in any measure can supply the needs of their hearts. They will not go to the public house, at first, for love of liquor; they go for the animated and hilarious companionship they find there, which they find does much to repress the disturbing restlessness in their hearts. See to it, then, that their homes compete with public places in attractiveness. Open your blinds by day, and light bright fires by night. Illuminate your rooms. Hang pictures upon the wall. Put books and newspapers upon your tables. Have music and entertaining games. Banish demons of dullness and apathy that have so long ruled in your household, and bring in mirth and good cheer. Invent occupations for your sons. Stimulate their ambitions in worthy directions. While you make home their delight, fill them with higher purposes than mere pleasure. Whether they shall pass happy boyhood, and enter upon manhood with refined tastes and noble ambitions, depends on you. Do not blame miserable barkeepers if your sons miscarry. Believe it possible that with exertion and right means a mother may have more control of the destiny of her boys than any other influence whatever.—Christian Secretary.

ADVICE TO BOYS ON TAKING EXERCISE.

Boys who take a great interest and active part in out-door sports often bring needless illness upon themselves by overexertion and want of proper care after violent exercise. Attacks of pneumonia or inflammation of the lungs frequently occur from getting very warm and then cooling off too suddenly.

When about to engage in a game of ball or any sport that requires continued activity, it is best to lay aside the outer garment, and put it on again when the game is finished; and instead of sitting down to "cool off," it is safer to walk around for awhile. It it also dangerous to drink large quantities of cold water when very warm, as the system receives a shock which may lead to sickness.

To go in swimming after a long walk in the hot sun is also injurious, as the blood is driven to the internal organs from the surface of the body, and produces congestion, and cramps are also likely to occur, which in many cases have been the cause of death by drowning. It is always safer to wait until the body has cooled before plunging into the water, which is generally of a lower temperature than the body.

Violent exercise taken occasionally will not develop the strength as well as a regular amount continued every day. If a boy wishes to develop his muscles, let him play ball or row a certain time every favorable day. Let him cease at the moment a sense of weariness or disinclination seizes him. The next day he will be able to stand a little more exertion, and so on by degrees he will attain a certain standard, and have a reserve force of strength that will be the foundation of continued good health in the future. It is necessary that the growing body should have exercise. Air and sunlight are necessary to growth, and active out-door sports are the means by which their benefits can be obtained.

Soon the summer vacation will give place to the restraints of school. Let boys have all the out-door exercise they can. Ball-playing, horseback-riding, swimming, all are prime factors in muscular development, and with care and judgment in their proper use, will tend to stronger and healthier growth.

The world needs strong men as well as wise ones, and indeed the mind will develop more rapidly in a sound body than in a sickly one. It is a grand thing to be able to stand hardship and privation in the search for truth and knowledge, and any man with good physical strength is equal to the task of combating the world if with it he has the stimulus of a strong will. Let boys then seek to build up in their growing days a sound constitution, and life will be more than doubled in value to them.—Harper's Young People.

"MOTHER'S FOOL."

"'Tis plain to me," said the farmer's wife,
"These boys will make their mark in life;
They never were made to handle a hoe,
And at once to college they ought to go.
Yes, John and Henry, 'tis clear to me,
Great men in this world are sure to be;
But Tom, he's little above a fool—
So John and Henry must go to school."

"Now, really, wife," quoth farmer Brown,
As he sets his mug of cider down,
"Tom does more work in a day for me
Than both of his brothers do in three.
Book learnin' will never plant beans or corn,
Nor hoe potatoes, sure as you're born—
Nor mend a rood of broken fence;
For my part, give me common sense."

But his wife the roost was bound to rule,
And so "the boys" were sent to school;
While Tom, of course, was left behind,
For his mother said he had no mind.

Five years at school the students spent,
Then each one into business went.
John learned to play the flute and fiddle,
And parted his hair (of course) in the middle;
Though his brother looked rather higher than he
And hung out his shingle—"H. Brown, M. D."
Meanwhile, at home, their brother Tom
Had taken a notion into his head.
Though he said not a word, but trimmed his trees,
And hoed his corn and sowed his peas,
But somehow, either by "hook or crook,"
He managed to read full many a book.
Well, the war broke out, and "Captain Tom"
To battle a hundred soldiers led,
And when the enemy's flag went down,
Came marching home as "General Brown."

But he went to work on the farm again,
Planted his corn and sowed his grain,
Repaired the house and broken fence,
And people said he had "common sense."
Now, common sense was rather rare,
And the State House needed a portion there,
So our "family dunce" moved into town,
And people called him "Governor Brown,"
And his brothers that went to the city school,
Came home to live with "mother's fool." —Sel.

A PLUCKY BOY.

The famous electrician, Thomas A. Edison, like many another genius, began life as a poor boy. At twelve he was selling peanuts and papers on the Grand Trunk railroad, and using his odd minutes to study chemistry. He turned an old baggage car into a laboratory, and, for fear that somebody would touch his chemicals, he labeled every bottle "Poison."

He picked up a little knowledge of printing and of telegraphy, and when about sixteen saved the life of a little child, by snatching him from the track before a swiftly coming train. In gratitude for the heroic act the child's father offered to teach young Edison the art of telegraphy; but all the time he was trying experiments, with chemicals, sometimes resulting in accidents which cost him his place.

But he kept on working until he invented the system of telegraphy whereby four messages can be sent at once over the same wire. This was quickly followed by the phonograph, the telephone, the electric light, and various other inventions. He was described by the United States Patent Commissioner as "The young man who kept the pathway to the Patent Office hot with his footsteps."—Sel.

TEMPERANCE.

THE DEACON'S SUNDAY-SCHOOL SERMON.

A dear old deacon in my State was cursed with a high license pulpit, but was so loyal to the church that he took as Gospel all that fell from the desk. So, when his pastor pushed high license, he, as superintendent of the Sunday-school, said: "Teach it to the children; as the trees are bent the twigs should be inclined." So in his homely way he turned the sermons into language the children could understand and made a talk for high license before the Sunday-school.

"Dear boys and girls," began the deacon, "you know it's very naughty to drink beer and whiskey. So, too, it's naughty to sell them without a license, or with a cheap license. But when the State orders high license, and the town makes every saloon keeper pay it, $500 out of what he gets for making drunkards, it isn't naughty any longer to sell beer and whisky, but a real nice, respectable business, like selling sugar or hymn books. And your blessed papas don't like to have a fifty dollar saloon close by their store; but with a five hundred dollar one each side, they know that all good people will like to visit their store. So when bad men get drunk and swear and fight and roll into the gutter before the five hundred dollar saloon, your high license pa's know that's a blessing, and they must thank God every day that blessings fall so thick about them.

"You see it all clear, don't you children? If not you must be patient and remember your eyes will grow bigger, like pa's, some day. Of course, too, your fine mammas never visit the wife of the fifty dollar rum-seller; but so quick as he grows so good and respectable that he pays his town $500 a year, as its share of what he gets by making drunkards and drunkards' wives and children, and the old taxpayers pat him on the back, why then, of course, your fine mammas go off and visit his wife, and find her just lovely, and ask her over to tea; don't they? You know an advance of $450 dollars in license works a great change of heart and manners in the saloon keeper and all his family; when he pays $50 he's a brute, but when he pays $500 he's a gentleman.

"You keep on seeing it, don't you, children? Maybe, though, you can't see why, if it's awful wicked for a fifty-dollar license to fill a man's boots with snakes, and his head with the crazy, and turn his hands into double-fists, and send him home to knock down his wife and kick his little boy and girl into the street—if this is dreadful wicked, maybe you can't quite see why it's all right and respectable for a five hundred dollar license to do the same thing. But it'll come clear to you when you grow up and read the Bible the way lots o' men do now. Then you'll see that what's all wrong standing alone is all right standing on $500.

"Maybe, too, pet lambs, you don't now quite see how, if its wrong to drink liquors at any license, it's right as can be to sell them at any license, coaxing men to drink them. But wait till you get big, and hear men talk who know a pious lot about high license. Then you'll see that the words in the Lord's prayer —'Lead us not into temptation'—don't mean anything, now the world's got to be so smart. And when the license preachers get up a new version of the Testament, I suppose they'll leave out all that nonsense.

"One thing more, sweet ones: Don't forget what a high license is to poor towns. Why, quite often it builds a new jail—and fills it. Isn't that real good of it? So, if any of you die drunkards, or drunkards wives, it'll be a warm comfort to you to remember that, by living drunk, or with a drunkard, you've paid, to support your town and country, almost one-tenth of what they've paid to kill you.

"You must remember, too, that it's because intemperance is wrong that high license is right. It's so much, you see, like Prohibition; for you can easily see that 'a half loaf is better'n no bread, if 'tis poison.

"Now, good-by, children; and if ever you want to be constable, or go to Congress, and want the taxes collected in a tumbler, don't object to being damned, only charge high for it."

The Sunday scholars laughed and called the deacon crazy, their fathers got to thinking, and the pastor got into a passion, but was afterward converted and became a good man.—The Voice.

A Presbyterian minister in Illinois has been requested to resign on account of drunkenness. It is telegraphed all over the land. The attention paid to it is a gratifying proof of the change wrought in the churches and in public sentiment. Seventy years ago he would not have been asked to resign unless a confirmed sot.

REFORM NEWS.

Mr. A. C. Reed, of this place, though well advanced in years, is doing what he can to further the cause cause of reform.

This afternoon I had the pleasure of calling upon Mr. Josiah Lee, formerly of Canandaigua, N. Y., He is now in his 90th year, and, although nearly blind, is very well preserved in general health. He has read the Cynosure since its first number. This evening finds me at the home of Mr. Chas. Landis, who has kindly invited me to tarry for the night. A letter from Bro. J. L. Overholt announces that they expect me to spend the Sabbath at Wadsworth and speak as many times as I can. W. B. STODDARD.

FROM THE ILLINOIS AGENT.

Tuscola Revisited.—Relics of last Summer's Mob.—Aurora.—Oswego shows a Friendly side to Reform—Lodge Tyranny.—What kind of a W. C. T. U. is this?

Since reporting from Champaign, I re-visited Tuscola, the county seat of Douglas county, where the mob resorted to the Masonic argument of clubs, potatoes, eggs and stones, last summer. I was promised the use of the Christian church, by its officers, though two are enthusiastic Masons. I then distributed Weed pamphlets and tracts in every store, shop, vehicle and most of the resideuces.

While engaged in this work, Mr. Leachman, one of the above officers, ran down the street bare-headed to inform me that they had called a meeting of the officers, and decided to withhold the use of their church and exclude me. Said he, "You'd have nothing but rowdies; decent people would not come to hear you. If it had not been for that fuss last summer, you might have obtained a respectable hearing."

"Was I to blame for that fuss?" I asked.

"No, sir; but decent people got to hear of it, and they won't come to hear you. Only rowdies will come, and we don't want our church tore up and dirtied."

Since I was here last summer they have passed an ordinance prohibiting out-door preaching within the city limits.

On Feb. 5th I passed through Aurora and placed Weed pamphlets in almost every business house and vehicle in the city, while waiting for a train.

At Oswego, Kendall county, I tried to obtaid the use of the German M. E. church, in which to hold some meetings, as it is centrally located. But the pastor informed me that the two trustees whom he consulted were unwilling that I should speak there. I then engaged the skating rink for Thursday afternoon and evening. Rev. S. Weir, the M. E. pastor, was kind enough to announce my appointments. Rev. Mr. Cone, of Earlville, who preached in the Congregational church, also read my notices. Neither of these brethren are Masons.

Next morning, before coming to the hotel table, I heard Rev. Minard, a superannuated M. E. preacher, trying to convince a German jeweler that Martin Luther was a Freemason. The German stoutly maintained the contrary, and said, "You might as well say that Christ was a Mason."

I distributed tracts from house to house and invited the people to the meeting.

On Tuesday afternoon we had a prayer-meeting in the rink, and at night I spoke to a large audience on "The Obligations of Masonry." The next day one of the most prominent merchants in the place called me into his store when I was passing, and informed me that he had taken all the degrees of the Blue Lodge and Royal Arch, twenty years ago, become disgusted and now is out. Said he, "Your experience and mine are very similar, and I look back now and wonder that I went on taking one degree after another and swearing those awful oaths."

Another man who bought the building in which the Masons meet and on which they hold a lease, one condition of which is that if the rent is not paid monthly it is forfeited, tried to break it according to this clause, viz., their failure to pay the rent when due. He was awaited on by an insignificant character, who demanded of him whether he had counted the cost of such an undertaking, if he knew the power possessed by their lodge to influence his patrons, or if he had reckoned on their ability to retain possession in the face of any legal proceedings on his part. He said that he saw himself so environed that he ceased his efforts to rid himself of them and they still hold possession and pay rent when they please.

One morning at the breakfast table at the hotel the wife of the lodge chaplain, Rev. Minard, informed me that "I just hate the name of Rev. Chas. G. Finney. I just despise him!" I could not help remarking that I believe she needed conversion. But she is president of the W. C. T. U. G. T. DISSETTE.

THE CHURCHES.

—Rev. N. D. Fanning, formerly pastor of the Independent church, Marengo, Ill., and president of the Illinois State Christian Association, is now pastor of the Presbyterian church, Jamestown, Dakota.

—A great work of grace is in progress at the First Presbyterian church, Wooster, Ohio, of which Dr. O. A. Hills is pastor. About forty persons have found the Saviour since the year began.

—At the communion held January 31st, twenty members were received into the church at Parkville, Mo., fourteen of them on profession of faith, and on the communion two months previously, twenty-seven were received, making forty-seven in two months.

—While at Memphis, Mr. Moody preached on Sabbath morning Feb., 14th to a colored congregation in Avery Chapel.

—The Southwestern Presbyterian, speaking of the opening of the Moody meetings in Washington Artillery Hall, New Orleans, says that the singing of Mr. Sankey seems to be a chief attraction.

—Rev. J. M. Green, pastor of the Presbyterian church in Centralia, Ill., is father of Rev. T. E. Green, of the Eight Presbyterian church, of Chicago, who has just announced his determination to join the Episcopal church. He is grieved at the action of his son, which fixes, as the old gentleman remarked, a great ecclesiastical gulf between them. He also adds: "It is the greatest affliction of my life, and a most bitter dissapointment." The son has been for some time lapsing towards the sensational in religion by introducing fiddles, horns, etc., into the Sabbath worship of his church.

—The Baptist ministers of Chicago have adopted a resolution recommending that the committee of five, appointed some time since on the Chicago University, be empowered to take action for the founding of a new university.

—Moody and Sankey opened their revival meeting at New Orleans Tuesday last. In connection with their work in that city they will hold a Christian Convention.

—The revivalist, Jones, with the rowdyish surname, "Sam," with his co-worker, "Sam" Small, closed their work in Cincinnati last Sabbath. Though seemingly dependent upon their sensational methods for results, the Cincinnati press acknowledges that they have accomplished much for the kingdom of God. It had been reported that Jones had engaged to come to this city and open a meeting at the Casino skating rink on State and 26th streets, about the 15th inst., but the Inter Ocean of Saturday gives this as the arrangement: "Sam Small will come to Chicago and will begin his work in the Chicago Avenue Church next Tuesday evening, Feb. 16th, at 7:30 o'clock. He will continue every evening through the week. The opening meeting will consist of a special service. The work he did in the newspaper line, though widely known, seems likely to become eclipsed by his efforts in the field of revivalism. The entrance to the main floor of the Chicago Avenue church will be by ticket, to be obtained at Farwell Hall Book Store and at the church, and already there has been a large demand for the tickets. The galleries will be free to all. Sam Small will also lead the noonday services in Farwell Hall, beginning next Tuesday and continuing the rest of the week. Jones will go from Cincinnati to his home in Texas, where he will remain for ten or twelve days. He will then come to Chicago and will begin his work in the Chicago Avenue church, probably upon Sunday, Feb. 28th.

—At the closing meeting of the evangelists Jones and Small in Cincinnati last Sabbath evening there was a remarkable scene. At 6 o'clock 6,000 people were waiting for the doors of Music Hall to open, and soon 8,000 were crowded in. When Jones arrived a crowd said to be from 20,000 to 40,000 was about the building. It was announced from Chicago pulpits on the same day that Jones would begin services in this city Feb. 28th.

—At the Brooklyn Tabernacle last Sabbath morning Dr. Talmage delivered the fifth of his course of sermons on the marriage ring and kindred topics assailing the folly of fashion. The Tabernacle, was densely crowded, and many were unable to gain admission. The preacher chose as his subject "Costume and Its Effect on Morals," and in the course of his sermon said: "If God will help me, I mean this morning to bring before you the evils of improper dress and excessive discipleship to fashion. I say what most of you know to be true, when I declare that most of the fashionable attire seen in society to-day is the cause of the temporal and eternal damnation of a multitude of men. I am quite in sympathy with that officer of the law in Philadelphia who, last winter or the winter before, told one of the so-called 'lady princesses of fashion,' that she must either leave the house or put on more clothing. I call for good women, sensible women, to utter protests in behalf of the dignity of their se ; aud if a woman slave of fashion doesn't understand the terrible extreme which the evil has taken, then let the husbands implore their wives and the fathers prevent their daughters from the evils of the terrible fashion. I charge much of this evil upon the American stage."

—Mr. Ford, of the Youth's Companion, Boston, is said to speud $35,000 a year on three Baptist churches in that city. His liberality is to be commended, if not his judgment. This sum would help 300 city or foreign mission churches with probably 300 times the result.

—The Young Men's Christian Association of Rochester, N. Y., has taken steps to discover the relative popularity of the saloons and churches of that city. A couut one Saturday evening showed that 1,198 young men visited sixty saloons between the hours of seven and eight. Sunday evening, 486 young men attended services at the Brick and Central Presbyterian, and First and Second Baptist, and First and Asbury Methodist churches between seven and eight, and 347 visited the rooms of the Association during the day.

—The revival of the Congregational church at Morris, Connecticut, shows that over seventy persons have united with the church as the result. Twenty-seven of these are reported as men past middle life.

—Miss E. L. Austin, a white lady from the North, who has been laboring in the interest and for the education of the colored children in Knoxville, Tenn., for several years, has returned from the East with a sufficient sum to erect the second school building for colored children there. The new house is to be a large three-story structure, and will be used for industrial training.

—The proprietor of one of the largest shoe factories at Brocton, Mass., recently called his employes into the shipping-room of the factory, where they took their seats on the boxes. Mr. Sayford, secretary of the Young Men's Christian Association, delivered an address, which was followed by singing. The services lasted over an honr, and the operatives gave the closest attention. Mr. Keith paid his employes for the time spent in attending the meeting.

—On the occupation of Mandalay, the Burmese capital, the Episcopal church, school and, clergy-house were re-opened, after a suspension of missionary work for six years. The clergy-house has been used as a Buddhist monastery, and the church as a lottery office.

—The Rev. J. Patton, of the New Hebrides Mission, has not solicited a single subscription since his arrival in Scotland to make known the needs of the mission, but his touching and profoundly impressive appeals have been responded to with freewill offerings amounting to $40,000.

—The Chinese colloquial Testament has recently been produced at the American Presbyterian press in Ningpo. It is the first Chinese book ever published in English characters. It is a practical adaptation of what is known as "Pigeon English" to missionary purposes. The book is pronounced to be quite a curiosity.

—The latest year-book of the National Church of Italy, the Waldensian, shows that the Church numbers 15,000 communicants, 59 churches, 36 missions, a seminary, with 3 professors and 16 students, a college of 7 professors and 75 students, a female high-school, a grammar-school, 3 hospitals, 1 orphanage, 1 trades-school, 250 primary schools, with 6,500 pupils, 170 Sunday-schools, 4,500 pupils, and several religious periodicals. The Church is poor in the world's wealth, but rich in energy and good works.

—The arrangement of Mr. Moody's meetings in the South has been somewhat altered. It is now published that he will be in New Orleans, February 9 to 21, inclusive; in second week there will be a Christian Convention of three days. He will spend from Feb. 21 to March 7 in Texas, at the following points: Galveston, Feb. 21–23. Houston, Feb. 24-26. San Antonio, Feb. 28 to March 2. Dallas, March 4–7. Mobile, Ala., March 10-12. Selma, Ala, March 14–17. Jacksonville, Fla., March 19-22. Charleston, S. C., March 24–28. Columbus, S. C., March 29–31. Atlanta, Ga., April 2–6. Norfolk, Va., April 8–11. Lynchburg, Va., April 13–16. University of Va., April 17–18.

rious parts of New England, but no loss of life is reported. The total damage in Massachusetts cannot now be estimated, but it will reach at least $1,000,000.

FOREIGN.

Premier Freycinet informed the French Cabinet that the proposition to hold an international exhibition in Paris, in 1889, does not meet with favor among foreign manufacturers.

Their first memorial to Gladstone not having been answered, the Socialistic leaders of London have again written to the premier, enclosing proposals for the amelioration of the distress among the working classes, and expressing the hope that the government has resolved to begin work on public improvements in order to give employment to workingmen now idle.

A meeting of alleged "starving mechanics" was held at the Nelson monument, in Trafalgar Square, London, Monday of last week, Burns, the defeated socialist candidate for Parliament, being the chief speaker. He attempted to address the crowd from the pedestal of the column, and when the police attempted to displace him, a conflict with the mob, which had at this time swelled to thousands, was the result. The police made a second attack, this time routing the gathering, which vided in its flight and took different directions. The mob began wrecking stores and residences, 200 shops and clubhouses being damaged and pillaged, and hundreds of people mal treated. A fierce faction fight among the socialists also occurred, in which several men were injured. It is said that 50,000 persons engaged in the rioting, and the wonder is that so little blood was shed. Rioting was continued on two successive days, and many small tradesmen and members of bona fide workingmen's clubs joined in assisting the police to repulse the rioters. The losses Monday are estimated at eighty thousand pounds sterling.

The Facts Stated.

HON. THURLOW WEED ON THE MORGAN ABDUCTION.

This is a sixteen page pamphlet comprising a letter written by Mr. Weed, and read at the unveiling of the monument erected to the memory of Capt. William Morgan. The frontispiece is an engraving of the monument. It is a history of the unlawful seizure and confinement of Morgan in the Canandaigua jail, his subsequent conveyance by Freemasons to Fort Niagara, and drowning in Lake Ontario. He not only subscribes his NAME to the letter, but ATTACHES HIS AFFIDAVIT to it.

In closing his letter he writes: I now look back through an interval of fifty-six years with a conscious sense of having been governed through the "Anti-Masonic excitement" by a sincere desire, first, to vindicate the violated laws of my country, and next, to arrest the great power and dangerous influences of "secret societies."

The pamphlet is well worth perusing, and is doubtless the last historical article which this great journalist and politician wrote. [Chicago, National Christian Association.] Single copy, 5 cents.

BETWEEN TWO OPINIONS.

BY E. E. FLAGG,

Author of "Holden with Cords," "A Sunny Life," "Little People," etc.

This latest and best of Miss Flagg's works is now ready in handsome print, neatly bound. The story begins in a quiet New England home, and paints its homely joys with a delicacy and truthfulness worthy the hand of Harriet Beecher Stowe. The scene then changes to a thriving, growing, palpitating young Western city, and with great power and startling accuracy the writer leads us behind the scenes that we may see the machinery that works the liquor traffic and labor troubles. The story of the strike, the mob, the attempted assassination, the saloon-keeper's wiles, the curse of his trade, the power of the Christian faith to change him to a messenger of mercy, the criminal and the hidden power that shields him from justice, the land robbers tricks, the dark and secret conspiracies of the lodge—these and all the incidents of the book are portrayed with rare tact and great power of description. It is emphatically a book for the hour. And what is better and yet more striking, the incidents are facts, and every one a powerful and convincing argument against the lodge and the saloon.

Every temperance man and woman should read this book. No temperance story like it was ever planned, much less ably executed. A wonderful light is thrown upon the difficulties in the way of prohibition. Learn how they may be avoided.

Every one who loves to read a good story, chaste and elegant in expression, pure in thought, true in incident, deeply interesting in its narrative, should read this book.

READ THESE NOTICES FROM THE PRESS:

Law and Order, Boston.

The book takes high ground for prohibition of the liquor curse, for woman's ballot for home protection, and for a better and more honest brotherhood than is forced by their obligations upon the members of secret orders. It is, therefore, a valuable book for several large classes of American readers.

Christian Instructor, Philadelphia.

There are important questions pressing upon American politics to-day; two of them are prohibition and the labor question as connected with the secret unions of workingmen. This work is an expose of the twin evils, secret societies and the saloons. The truths are given in the form of a story; not startling, but thrilling experiences of home life that are vouched for as facts. The evidences presented of the impossibility of reaching the saloon keeper so long as he and the officers of the law are sworn brothers in the den of some secret society, are conclusive enough to awaken the most careless and obtuse member of society. It is a valuable book for the masses to read.

Evangelist, Berea, Kentucky.

The object of the volume is to illustrate the practical workings of Secret Societies, and especially to show how the Lodge upholds the saloon, and this very important design is wrought out with much skill, clearness and power. By reading it temperance people may learn much about the difficulties in the way of prohibition.

The Standard, Chicago.

It is written in the interests of reform, more especially temperance and Anti-masonry. The title of the story suggests the special aim of it, which is to protest against all "halting between two opinions;" in other words, is a plea for radicalism. The story is vigorously written, and will interest even readers who do not altogether believe in its doctrine.

The Pacific, San Francisco.

It is a story intended to do service against the saloons, and in favor of Womans' Christian Temperance work, and especially against the secret orders—Freemasons, Odd-fellows, the Knights of Labor, etc. No reflecting man can doubt that any combination of picked classes and individuals is liable to great abuse. It is obvious, also, that secret orders are specially capable of being used in a selfish and unprincipled way. Whether because of this liability the method of reform should be one that would exterminate such orders, is a question. But it must do good to have books written which show the excesses and dangers to which these societies are exposed; for our civilization is honey-combed with them, and in many places citizens, who really don't care for them, appear to be obliged to join a half dozen of them for fear of losing some business.

The Free Methodist, Chicago.

"Between Two Opinions" is a story, its incidents vouched for as facts, which presents a powerful argument on these questions and must attract thousands of readers among our thinking and observant people. The plot of the story is neither startling nor novel, but it develops a wonderful strength in following the experiences of people in the common, everyday walks of life.

Free Press, Birmingham, Iowa.

It differs from the popular story, "The Bread-winners" of a year ago. It greatly differs from that book in that it is written from the Christian standpoint, and its beautiful and touching descriptions of home life and home duties and heroic self-denyings will waken a responsive echo in every heart, that has not by dissipation lost the taste for the pure joys of home.

The Religious Telescope, Dayton.

The author, Miss Flagg, is a brilliant writer. The stirring questions in American politics are undoubtedly prohibition and the labor movement as championed by the secret unions of working men, which direct the strikes that with more and more frequency occur in our cities. "Between Two Opinions" is a story, its incidents vouched for as facts, which presents a powerful argument on these questions, and must attract thousands of readers among our thinking people.

The Christian Conservator, Dayton.

This is a charming book, written in an attractive manner. It is so full of sunshine and so radiant with light that one is enlightened, warmed, and, before they are conscious of it, set against the lodge. The style gleams, glows and sparkles. It is dignified and simple. It is the right book to place in the hands of your wife or daughter to superinduce co-operation with you in anti-secrecy work. Every minister's wife should read it, and then, if her husband is not an Anti-mason, he should take his turn next and become one.

The American, Washington.

We are reading, in spare moments, Miss Flagg's new book, "Between Two Opinions," and the estimate we have thus far put upon it is that it is masterly both in style and argument. One is insensibly made to feel that he is reading facts and not fiction; that the book is not a play upon the imagination but an unraveling of mysterious circumstances which have an important bearing upon current events. It is a book for thoughtful men and women to read, not light in style, yet pleasing in narrative; not startling in plot, yet full of bright surprises and interesting episodes. Written to discuss profound themes, it nevertheless contains touches of true domestic sentiment and vibrates sweet and tender chords.

FARM NOTES.

WINTER WEEDS.

Many of our weeds which in botanical works are called annuals are also biennials, the character depending upon the time in the season when the seeds are perfected. for some plants will have two or more generations of perfect plants in a season, and the seedlings starting from the ground late in the fall will survive the winter, and are ready to start into growth immediately on the incoming of spring. This plant, you would say, is a biennial, and so it is; but most biennials require nearly all the season for their seeds to perfect and form a new plant for the coming season. But this is not the case with the plants we have to deal with, they spring into growth early in the season, and the older plants perfect seeds in a few weeks, and these seeds, with those that did not start in the fall, immediately spring into growth, and before the season is over these plants have perfected seeds. Such plants, you say, are annuals, and so they are, and you can see how a plant can be both biennial and annual.

And in this fact is the explanation of the question, why some plants are weeds, while others equally as hardy and adapting themselves to all soils equally as well, are not. It is simply because they have so short a season between the time the seed starts and the time the plant perfects new seeds, that they are adapted to any season, however short.—W. H. Manning, in Vick's Magazine for February

FARMERS AS GARDENERS.

The remark is often made that farmers are poor gardeners, and it is too true in most cases. Farmers' families, as a rule, are far more poorly supplied with vegetables than city residents. Not more than a quarter of the farms in this region show anything better in the way of garden produce than a little sweet corn and some bush beans and a few tomato plants, and possibly even these last are wanting. The field crop is depended upon to supply the potatoes that are wanted, and, perhaps, some turnips will be raised in the fall, some years, as a second crop. What a miserable showing is this for those who are situated so that the choicest vegetables of the garden, the various kinds of their season, might appear in abundance on their table, provided the necessary care and labor should be given to produce them. But this picture is not overdrawn; it is, unfortunately, too true, and it is not less true that if we enquire about the family fruit supply for country tables we shall find this quite as deficient, or even more so. There is no necessity for this condition of things, and it is opposed both to the physical and financial interests of these families. No part of the farm can make greater returns for the labor and other expenditures than the vegetable and the fruit garden. If we inquire into the cause of their neglect, we shall find, in many cases, that their importance is measurably comprehended, and the want of them is felt, but the labor and attention they require are somewhat different from that of the farm crops, and, also, the garden interferes, to some extent, with the farm work when it is not properly planned and managed, as for the most part it might be, so as to cause little or no inconvience in the performance of the regular work. And for this purpose we now ask our country and village readers, who are directly interested, to give the necessary thought for the preparation of a good garden at this season of comparative rest. What shall the garden consist of? How and when shall it be prepared? Who shall have the direct supervision of it? These and other questions can be considered and decided upon, and when the time of action comes there need be no delay.—Vick's Magazine.

THE HOUSEWIFE'S GARDEN.

The housewife should specially interest herself in the garden, and, in most cases, she will find that her interest and influence will be magnetic, and will enlist the sympathy and service of the other members of the family. The country and village table should show the tenderest, crispest radishes, the best, the most buttery, the best blanched, the most refreshing lettuce, and the earliest spinach, the cucumbers direct from the vines, never subject to wilting, should be crisp, juicy and cool with their own peculiar aroma that is so gratifying. City residents are supplied with cucumbers, but usually they are a snare and a delusion, not once in twenty times can good cumcubers be bought at a city stand; we do not say that they cannot be so handled and kept as to be offered to customers in prime condition, we know that they might be, but they are not—they are almost universally wilted, tough and worthless, and this is the cause of the bad name they have associated with them. Good, fresh cucumbers can be eaten every day in the year without injury.—Vick's Magazine.

Cloth.....75 cents.

THIS is a pleasant surprise in many ways. The author is Rev. W. T. Meloy, of the United Presbyterian Church of Chicago, and the book is published by the Board of Publication of his denomination. It is a love story, not "fascinating," but with so much of genial interest that the reader is in no danger of laying it down unfinished. * * * The moral purpose of the book is to describe and vindicate Christian character, in its more heroic aspects, and it is a success. We congratulate the author and the United Presbyterian Board of Publication on this literary lily of the valley.—The Interior.

"LUCILLE VERNON" is evidently not an ideal sketch, but the fictitious names used represent to a great extent real men and women of flesh and blood. The characters of many of them are by no means attractive, but are perfect counterparts of querulous, obstinate and parsimonious professors who are thorns in the flesh of many a pastor in all the churches. But as in all the churches, there were also good and true men and women at Lausington, who upheld and encouraged the pastor. * * * In its author will be recognized the worthy pastor of the First United Presbyterian Church of Chicago, and a welcome contributor to these columns.—United Presbyterian.

The heroine, who becomes the bride of the pastor of the church at Lansington, is a wonderful exemplification of how a woman who is a true wife and help-meet may throw her life and energies into the great work of saving souls; aiding, by gentle words and sympathy, wise counsel and brave endurance, the husband having charge of a congregation where the Demon of Misrule held full sway. We follow with interest the history of the wife and husband through their hours of despondency and discouragement to the happy ending, where religion, harmony and peace have gained the ascendency and the good man and wife find their reward.—Pittsburgh Daily Telegraph.

— OR —

The Coming Conflict.

A NEW AND STRANGE STORY BASED ON STARTLING FACTS, VIVIDLY PORTRAYING A MYSTERIOUS AND DANGEROUS POWER AT WORK IN THE GOVERNMENT, THE CHURCH, AND THE HOME.

"All will agree that this is a powerfully written story."—Evangelist, (Chicago, Ills.)

"A book which we trust may have a wide circulation."—National Baptist, (Philadelphia.)

"So intensely interesting did I find it that it was hard to pause until the last sentence was read. This work places the author high among the writers of fiction."—W. W. Barr, D. D. in Christian Instructor, (Philadelphia.)

"Unless we are greatly mistaken, the work will do more to awaken the American church and people to the evils of Freemasonry than any other book recently published."—Evangelical Repository.

"The book will create a sensation in Masonic circles, and evoke criticism of a most relentless character. The courage of the author in attacking such a rock-rooted bulwark as Freemasonry is something to admire, Fanatic though he be."—Nebraska Watchman.

"Light is needed on this subject and needed badly, and we welcome this contribution to the literature of anti-secretism, and cordially commend it to the favorable attention of our readers."—United Presbyterian, (Pittsburgh.)

"A charming work, fit to be classed with 'Uncle Tom's Cabin,' it is indeed less a work of fiction. The volume is as valuable as a work of reference as it is agreeable, truthful and useful. Our young folks will not leave the book, if they begin it, till they 'see how it turns out.'"—Cynosure, Chicago, Ills.)

IN BRIEF.

The richest men in Russia are two Swiss brothers named Noble. They bought up immense tracts of oil lands, and control now more petroleum than the Standard Oil Company. There is no way of computing their wealth, which has been estimated as high as $400,000,000.

The Indian Witness, speaking of the Hindoo charities in Calcutta, says that they usually take the form of daily distribution of food. It mentions one Rajah who daily feeds from 300 to 600 persons, and several others who feed from thirty to fifty every day.

A curious collection has been added to the natural history museum of Vienna. It consists of 708 skulls of many nationalities, skulls of Turks, Greeks, Hungarians, Americans, Jews, Albanians, Kurds and others. The grim collection might be valuable in inspiring the Hamlets of Vienna as well as useful to ethnologists

On the water side of Vera Cruz stands a stone image, whose bruised countenance tells a queer tale of feminine credulity. From time immemorial it has been believed that if a marriagable woman shall hit this image squarely in the face with a stone, she will immediately obtain a husband and an advantageous settlement in life.

It appears that there are still some Christians in the Russian Empire who retain one characteristically pagan custom of their forefathers—the sacrifice of beasts as a part of public worship. Not long ago the St. Petersburger Zeitung stated that this practice was in use on certain occasions at Wyborg, in Northern Finland, among the Karetes, who are devoted adherents to the orthodox church. The Sviet now states that the same ritual survives among the orthodox islanders of Mantschinschari, about twenty-five versts from the monastery of Walaam, where there is a chapel dedicated to the prophet Esias. Several times every year three oxen, and sometimes more, are brought by Christian pilgrims to the chapel, in the front of which they are solemnly slaughtered, amid the ringing of bells. The dead beasts, however, are not burned as they formerly were, but are boiled, and the pilgrims, together with the villagers, make a hearty dinner of the sacred flesh.

It is calculated that the average number of matches used per day, is ten to each of the population—say five hundred and fifty millions, or five million five hundred thousand boxes of one hundred each. One can utilize a light from a match in fifteen seconds. The tinder-box often required two minutes, to say nothing of the vexation of Spirit. Now, at ten lights a day, which requires one hundred and fifty seconds, or two and a half minutes in one case, and twenty minutes in the other, there is a saving of seventeen and a half minutes a day. The match user consumes in his work nine hundred and thirteen minutes a year, or fifteen hours. The tinder box user would consume seven thousand three hundred minutes, or one hundred and twenty hours, a difference of one hundred and five hours, or ten good working days. At a valuation of one dollar a day, this would be five hundred and fifty million dollars a year saved to the production of the United States. Sir Lyon Playfair, in his address at the last meeting of the British Association, estimated the saving of time in Great Britain by the use of matches, as equal to twenty-six million pounds, placing labor at thirty cents a day.

It is reported that the citizens of Helena, Ark., were recently aroused early in the morning by what seemed to be a heavy rainstorm, but they found the sky perfectly clear, and the air full of dark flakes which afterwards proved to be a cloud of grasshoppers. They pattered against the roofs and windows of the houses with so much force and in such large numbers that they simulated rain. People who had seen the dreaded pests before, when they decended upon the grain fields of Kansas and consumed every blade in a few hours, say that the numbers exceeded even that visitation. They were passing westward. Many of them were disabled by hitting against buildings and other obstructions, as they flew very low, and had to be shoveled off the sidewalk into the street. They were apparently genuine Kansas grasshoppers.

ALL-NIGHT INHALATION!

"A positive revolution in the treatment of Air-Passage Diseases of the Nose, Throat, and Lungs, and, for the purpose designed, as valuable a discovery as vaccination."

THE PILLOW-INHALER.

A Speedy, Positive and Permanent Cure for Catarrh, Bronchitis, Asthma, and Incipient Consumption.

It is a hair pillow, with reservoirs of evaporating liquid, the fumes or vapor of which is inhaled all night long, whilst sleeping as usual, and without any discomfort. It is used only at night, and is perfectly safe to the most delicate. There is no stomach-dosing, douching or snuffing; but just as a smoky lamp will leave a deposit on a whitened wall so the PILLOW-INHALER, for say eight hours at a time, spreads a powerful healing balm or salve on the inflamed inner coating of the diseased air-surfaces, from the nostrils to the bottom of the lungs, and hence into the blood. Old-fashioned inhalation, through a tube, for a few minutes a day, sometimes cured. Think of eight hours constant action, on the same principle, but intensified a hundred-fold! There are no pipes or tubes. The medicine is breathed in, not swallowed, and goes right to the diseased parts.

CATARRH. BRONCHITIS. CONSUMPTION.

HON. E. L. HEDDEN, Collector of the Port of New York, says: "I take pleasure in stating that the PILLOW-INHALER has been of the greatest relief, and I believe of permanent benefit, to my wife, who has been a great sufferer from Bronchial and Catarrhal Troubles, accompanied with distressing Asthma. I recommend its use to all persons afflicted with such maladies."

E. L. HEDDEN, 38 West 49th St., New York.

MR. H. G. TEELE, 50 Bryan Block, Chicago, Ill., says: "I suffered fifteen years from a severe case of Catarrh; coughed incessantly day and night. I bought a PILLOW-INHALER, and since using it my cough is gone; my lungs are no longer weak and sore, and I am in better health than I have been for years."

During the six years of its existence the PILLOW-INHALER has wrought cures of Catarrh, Bronchitis, Asthma, and Consumption, that have been more like miracles than the usual treatment of disease. It is not expensive, and is within the reach of every one. Send for Explanatory Pamphlet and Testimonials, or call.

NEWS OF THE WEEK.

WASHINGTON.

Hon. Charles Ridgely, a Springfield, Ill., banker, who is a bimetalist and pronounced protectionist, has been offered by President Cleveland the position of Comptroller of the Currency.

President Cleveland issued a proclamation Tuesday last against the anti-Chinese rioters in Washington Territory, warning them to desist from their unlawful purposes and go home, and ordering U. S. troops with Gen. Gibbon to proceed to Seattle to preserve the peace.

It appears from a letter sent to the House of Representatives by Secretary Manning that the expense for decorating the public buildings on the occasion of the death of President Grant was $2,442, and for the death of Vice Presieent Hendricks, $5,475.

COUNTRY.

Only 326,411 immigrants entered the United States last year, a decrease of 19 per cent since the previous year.

The Chicago council ordered that fine of $150 imposed by Justice Meech against Edmund Butler, a saloonkeeper, for selling liquor without license, be refunded, provided Butler takes out a saloon license.

A mob at Seattle, Wash. Ter., which threatened violence to Chinamen, was fired on by the militia, one man being killen and three injured. The excitement was intense and business for a time was generally suspended. The steamer sailed with 195 Chinamen who preferred not to stay longer in such a country.

At Olympia, W. T., Feb. 9, a mob commenced taking possession of the Chinese houses and an alarm was given by the ringing of fire-bells. Before the citizens could realize what was happening, a guard composed of members of the Anti-Chinese Association was placed in possession of each Chinese house, and the occupants were ordered to pack up and leave. The mayor issued a proclamation calling on all persons riotously disposed to immediately disperse, also calling for recruits to join the law and order committee. Two ringleaders. Hetlel and Bates, were arrested and bound over in the sum of $500 each.

The country was shocked to learn of the sudden death of Gen. W. S. Hancock on Tuesday afternoon. Some two weeks previous a boil developed on the back of his neck, which became a malignant carbuncle. The physician who was called discovered that the General was also suffering from diabetis and kidney trouble. On Monday the case was assuming a serious aspect and early Tuesday morning he sank into a comatose state and expired at 2:51 P. M. He was 62 years of age.

Louis Joseph Florimond Canda died on Tuesday at Ravenswood, a suburb of Chicago, aged 93. He fought under the great Napoleon in several of his battles. Among his surviving children is Assistant United States Treasurer Canda, of New York City.

Rev. Dr. J. M. Sturtevant, one of the pioneer educators of the West, died at his home in Jacksonville, Ill., Thursday at the age of 90 years.

For contempt in refusing to exhibit Hamilton county election papers, the Ohio House decreed that Clerk Dalton should be imprisoned for thirty days. As the sergeant at-arms was leading him away, Dalton was served with a writ of habeas corpus, and on giving bonds in $1,000 was released. The case will be the first decided in the common pleas court and it is probable that it will reach the supreme court of the State.

The appearance of a huge grizzly bear at New Holland, Ind., has caused consternation in the district. Parties of men are hunting the beast, but have failed to get a shot at him.

A masked mob entered a church at Grange Hall, M. T., Saturday night, and took out W. W. Ulm, a member of the choir, whom they hanged to a tree; but one of Ulm's friends, re-enforced with a pair of revolvers, secured the release of the victim before life was extinct.

Floods in the Joliet section, Ill., are causing damage. The railway bridge over Hickory creek has been carried away and road bridges and fences have been destroyed. A Joliet man named Sunderland was drowned while trying to open an ice orge.

The San Francisco Chamber of Commerce reports that, during 1885, $10,000,000 in treasure was shipped from San Francisco to China. This is in excess of amounts remitted on balance-of-trade payments.

At St. Louis Thursday morning J. P. Mullaly's stables were destroyed by fire, fifty eight horses perishing in the flames. Employes who were endeavoring to rescue the animals were clubbed into insensibility, who believed the men to be thieves.

The club stable belonging to the Mcadowbrook Hunt, at East Meador, L. I., was destroyed by fire early Wednesday morning, twenty-four blooded horses, valued at $30,000, perishing in the flames.

The boiler in Follett & Stanley's feed-mill at Oshkosh, Wis., exploded Wednesday afternoon, killing two men and severely wounding several persons. A portion of the mill and machinery was completely wrecked.

Two women claimed to be the mother of a baby at Cincinnati, Wednesday, but Judge Fitzgerald consigned the waif to the Children's Home, remarking that neither was fit to train the child.

The Montreal express on the Lowell railroad was wrecked at Wilmington junction, about fifteen miles from Boston, Friday evening. The express was late and running forty miles an hour when it crashed into the Lawrence accommodation train which left Boston at 6:15. The engine and tender of the local train were whirled around and overturned and the tender of the express broken from its engine and thrown clear over the baggage car, the latter, together with the first Pullman being derailed, while the engine shot ahead almost unharmed. Both trains were well filled with passengers, and hardly any one escaped injury. One man was killed and thirty or forty injured more or less seriously. The man killed was a tramp.

President Wise of the stikers' organization was arrested at Mt. Pleasant, Pa., Friday morning, on a charge of riot and assault. A special agent of the Interior Department is at Mount Pleasant investigating charges preferred by English miners, who claim to have been duped into coming to this country.

The heavy rains have flooded the Delaware river, and a portion of Trenton, N. J., is submerged, the water in some instances reaching to the second stories of houses. Many bridges have been swept away, and travel on the Pensylvania road, between Trenton and New York, is suspended.

Ex-Governor Horatio Seymour died at the residence of his sister, Mrs. Roscoe Conkling, at Utica, N. Y., at 10 o'clock Friday night, aged 76. Mr. Seymour was conspicuous in New York politics for nearly forty years, and in National politics from the time he was elected Governor of New York, in 1868.

A destructive rainfall has caused the flooding of several New England towns. Citizens are imprisoned in their homes, and mills, bridges, and roads have been washed away. It is impossible to estimate the financial loss. The ice-gorge at St. Louis broke above the bridge and went out with a terrific crash, but did no damage. There is another mass of ice four miles in length, which is liable to move any moment. All over the country high water and serious damage by flood ing is reported.

The night express on the Ontario and Western railroad ran into a wash-out, near Liberty, N. Y, killing the engineer and fireman, and seriously injuring a number of others.

Miscreants hanged the young daughter of Dr. H. H. Aldridge, at Windsor, Ill., to get revenge on her father. She was found by her brother before life was extinct, and resuscitated. The perpetrators of the fiendish outrage are unknown.

The flood in Boston has overflowed a district of two square miles in the Roxburg suburb. The cellars, and, in some instances, the first floors, of nearly a thousand houses are flooded. In low sections the houses are almost entirely submerged. Over 1,500 families are more or less affected, and conservative estimates of the loss to buildings and stock is $500,000.

The flood reports show serious disaster to bridges, railroads and buildings in va-

MISCELLANEOUS.

THROAT WEAKNESS.

Clergymen, Teachers, Singers, Lawyers, Public Speakers, and all who have occasion to use their vocal powers more than ordinarily, will find the little treatise entitled "CHRONIC SORE THROAT" very useful. If those who are troubled with hoarseness after speaking or singing will read this book any follow its instructions they will be greatly benefited and relieved. Dr. Shuldham, of England, the author, has himself a reputation as an elocutionist of no mean powers, and he writes on the human vocal economy with the double experience of the physician and reader; especially is this experience noticeable in the Chapter on THE ART OF BREATHING, for it is on the proper modes of inspiration and expiration that the whole secret of managing the voice without causing any undue strain to the throat organs depends. Nor can we speak less emphatically in praise of the Chapter on THE HYGIENE OF THE VOICE, in which Dr. Shuldham lays down what in the way of solids and fluids a public speaker or singer should take, so as to avoid on the one hand throat irritation, and on the other any derangement of the stomach, which must react unfavorably on the whole system.

"Dr. Shuldham has given information and suggestions which will be of priceless value to every public speaker."—Interior. "The chapter on the art of breathing, the inspiration and expiration, without unduly straining the throat and vocal cords will be found a good study for all public speakers."—Inter Ocean.

Encouraging tokens of the final triumph of temperance are seen by the passage of the temperance education bill in Iowa, and the failure of the so-called mayor's convention to arouse any enthusiasm for a high-license law. In Washington Territory the temperance education law has been supplemented by by a local option law, which it is hoped will help forward the reform as well on the Pacific coast as in the South. In our Northern States it has not secured such hopeful results. The Chicago W. C. T. U. rejoices in the liberality of an elderly Christian lady, whose name is not published, who has just promised $200 per month to the Bethesda Mission carried on by the Union. The National Union, whose headquarters are now in this city, has been for some time entertaining the project of a national hospital. A building has finally been secured and our Mrs. Lydia H. Plumb, of Streator, Ill., contributes the entire rent for the first year.

Another Pacific town has put on its Kuklux masks and driven the Chinese from its borders on board ship for home. If the Chinaman could vote along with the Irishman, Pole or Italian, there would suddenly be discovered some qualities that would make his heathenism quite sufferable. His secret societies, unlike those of other foreigners, affect no one but himself; and his filthy but economical habits would bleach out in contrast with drunken European debauchery. The intimation that the Chinese government will claim indemnity for these outrages may bring reflection to our nation. China has paid us a large number of such claims as indemnity for injuries sustained by American citizens who went to that country, not to become citizens, but to make money and come back home to spend it.

The dispatches of Monday brought a rumor that the Chinese government is about to begin a system of reprisals which will help our enlightened nation to better understand the practical application of the Golden Rule. The report that an Imperial proclamation ordering home all the Chinese in America by May 15th had been promulgated caused some excitement and questioning, especially as it would probably be the first step toward a retaliation upon the 9,000 Americans in China and the American export trade, which amounts to $80,000,000. The report was not confirmed from Washington and it may perchance be only a rumor. Most of the 80,000 Chinese in this country will probably prefer to remain here and eventually become citizens if they can be unmolested by other foreigners, nor do we understand that they will recognize any such peremptory demand from their government. But the report at least serves to show us to what complications we are liable when our foreign relations are managed by ignorant Europeans.

Men who are guilty of unclean habits often find them troublesome to defend. They generally

"Compound for sins they are inclined to,
By damning those they have no mind to."

Dr. Meredith has a weekly Bible class in Tremont Temple, Boston. Lately he answered a question about cigarette smoking by boys by denouncing the practice with much emphasis. The matter is of public interest because the Massachusetts legislature are considering an anti-tobacco law for minors. But when some one asked, "How about a good cigar?" Dr. Meredith promptly replied, "That is a very different thing," because, as many of the class knew, he loves that kind of nicotine drunkenness. A number of letters roused him to a vigorous self-defense at next meeting and denunciation of those who criticized his personal habits. Samuel Small, now opening a series of great meetings in this city is also obliged to turn aside in self-defense. But his besetting sin is the cigarette. He has too much contempt for his critics to last, and we hope to see his manliness and Christian spirit triumph over his bad habit. By renouncing it for Christ's sake he will manifest the power of grace in his heart in a way no ungodly sinner can gainsay.

Mr. Small's case is a warning to preachers whose faith and moral courage are unbounded in attacking the sins of the last century, or of the Chinese or Mormons, but fail altogether when they come to face a scowling lodge or a wealthy tobacco seller. His denunciations of those sins of intemperance and uncleanness from which he was converted are overwhelming, but he thinks he can walk through the gates of Paradise puffing a cigarette—that form of tobacco using which has been denounced frequently by the press, secular as well as religious, as the most injurious of all. On the same evening when he justified himself in this vile habit, he closed his discourse rehearsing for the benefit of the few Freemasons present a part of the lecture in the Fellow Craft initiation, and some understood him to speak of God by the blasphemous title used by the lodge. Probably only a very few in his audience understood this Masonic harangue; some excellent people ignorant of lodge rituals, thought his address very fine. We have from others scathing denunciations of it. Yet few can doubt that God has begun a grand work of grace in the heart of Samuel Small, and if he is a Freemason, as we know him to be a tobacco-user, if he is a child of God he will renounce these evils when he comes to comprehend their nature. Thousands have been praying for him that his eyes may be opened, and that God may give him the moral courage to follow Christ in the renunciation of every carnal appetite and unhallowed affiliation with the world. In the household of faith he is a child but five months old. But he must remember that Christians are to be "blameless and harmless, the sons of God, without rebuke, in the midst of a crooked and perverse nation" (Phil. 2: 15), even as Christ was "holy, harmless, undefiled, separate from sinners." (Heb. 7: 26). If he rejects the plain word of God in respect to his habits and associations he may well fear lest he be a "castaway."

While delivering a lecture in Philadelphia last week Monday, John B. Gough was stricken down by apoplexy and never recovered from the shock but died on the 18th. He was justly regarded the most eminent of temperance orators. He was English born and came to this country a lad of 12 years to begin a course of intemperance that almost ruined him soul and body. He was 25 when found drunk in the streets of Worcester, Massachusetts, by a Mr. Stratton who befriended him and through whose influence, under God, he was able to reform. He ever afterward cherished the memory of his benefactor and for years supported his widow and family. While a frequenter of the saloons his powers of mimicry were often exercised for the amusement of the company gathered in them, and when reformed and on his feet as a temperance advocate his extraordinary genius soon developed. In 1853, nine years after his conversion, he visited England, being already celebrated in this country and Canada. His two years' experience as a lecturer in the old country was a continued ovation. Twice in after years he returned to England and always with the warmest welcome. During his life he lectured 8,500, times to a thousand times as many people, and traveled nearly half a million miles. He died in his 69th year. He was an earnest Christian and a man of a pure heart. None will forget in his later years his pathetic warnings to the young against cherishing impure desires, and his last words as he fell were upon the same theme. Both himself and wife were clear from any entanglement with the lodge, and have always given encouragement to the work of the Cynosure and the N. C. A.

The suppression of Mormonism is not without its dramatic scenes. Cannon, the blustering ex-Congressman, who has been in hiding a year, and was the other day captured in Nevada on a special car given him by the Central Pacific road, attempted to escape by jumping from the train on the way back. He broke his nose and bruised himself badly, but not seriously, and was soon recaptured with two loaves of bread and a bottle of water in his pocket. He had been near enough to confederates to begin a stock of provisions, but probably mis-timed his jump, or they would have had him out of the way again. He offered the sheriff a bribe of $1,000, but that officer proved to be of good stuff. Probably the grand hailing sign and the "My God! is there no help for the widow's son?" were vainly made to a miserable Gentile cowan!

William E. Lecky, the historian, has written a letter on the Irish question, in which he declares that any English statesman that advocates handing over the property of the Goverument in Ireland to the Parnellites is either a traitor or a fool. To set up an Irish Parliament, he thinks, would be an act of wickedness unparalleled even in Irish history. What Ireland needs, he says, is the restoration of the liberty of the people to pursue their lawful business and fulfill their lawful contracts. Unless the law of the Empire be restored in Ireland, industrial ruin is inevitable and will be followed by anarchy, which can only be quelled by the sword.

THE STORY OF JONAH RETOLD.

BY DR. J. N. NORRIS.

After the fall of man God did not wait 2,500 years nor 1,500 years in the sense of "do nothing," neither did he choose to exert his almighty power at once for the destruction of sin, nor for the salvation of the race, but he did immediately institute means for the accomplishment of both these great ends, by the promise of a Saviour and by the raising up of men full of faith and the Holy Ghost, as Abel, Enoch, Noah, Abraham, of whom Jesus said to the Jews, "Your father Abraham rejoiced to see my day, and he saw it and was glad." What an inspiriting thought! Isaac, Jacob, Joseph, Moses, and a host of others—these all lived and worked by faith; and of Moses it is recorded that he esteemed the reproach of Christ greater riches than all the treasures of Egypt.

About eight centuries, B. C., God looked down from heaven and saw the ancient capital of the kingdom of Assyria, a great city, wholly given to idolatry, drunkenness, debauchery and all wickedness, and forthwith commanded his servant Jonah to go to Nineveh and to preach, "Yet forty days and Nineveh shall be destroyed." Jonah not unlike many other good men was filled with apprehensions of evil and actually undertook to shirk his duty. Perhaps he soliloquised somewhat after this fashion: Now if I do go down to Nineveh, I may find the pastors of the idol gods of the city in the midst of a "revival effort" and if I deliver, faithfully, the message which God has given me to carry there, it will fall like a firebrand in their midst, would be a "foreign element of discord thrown in by a stranger, and would be almost insupportable, hardly less than an impertinence born of Satan." Jonah was fearful, and not without cause, that if he appeared in their meetings barely once, "he would be given very plainly to understand that he was out of place." Poor Jonah was no doubt harassed with awful spectres of starvation, or of ejection, or of the county jail, or of blood! Under such circumstances, is it any wonder that Jonah undertook to run away? The whale's belly as an asylum of repose would be preferable to falling into the hands of the incensed pastors at Nineveh.

Any revival of religion, either at Nineveh, at Champaign Illinois, or any other place, which leaves the people cherishing the awful delusion that they can be saved in their sins, including the anti-Christian mummery, the unblushing and heaven-daring blasphemy of all lodge worships, lacks the first element of a revival of pure Christianity.

To animadvert upon the hideous deformity of the religion of Freemasonry in a revival or any other meeting composed of Christians and of false religionists would undoubtedly have the effect of splitting off the kindling wood reserved unto everlasting fire and the perdition of ungodly men, to whom the mist of darkness is reserved for ever. The faithful preacher draws inspiration from Isaiah, 58th chapter. "Cry aloud, spare not, lift up thy voice like a trumpet, and shew my people their transgression, and the house of Jacob their sins," and he learns from the context that God will take care of his own and would also be responsible for the consequences resulting from obedience to his word.

Birmingham, Iowa.

SKETCH OF THE LIFE AND LABORS OF GEORGE W. CLARK.

BY REV. CHARLES C. FOOTE.

[Concluded.]

The one cardinal end and purpose of brother Clark's life has been to and it is safe to say no other person has won so many to the reforms of the age as has he. So excelling all other methods in this respect, has been brother Clark's singing method, that when reformers have labored in vain to win desirable persons they have invoked his labors.

The following incident will illustrate many others. In the city of Salem, near Boston, resided a lady of large wealth, high culture and great beauty, but who was bitterly opposed to the Abolitionists, and had withstood all efforts for her conversion. Knowing her appreciation of music, a prominent Abolitionist, who had heard Mr. Clark in Boston, invited him to Salem. A crowded church welcomed him, and soon after the services commenced, this lady, whose appearance had been described to Mr. Clark, walked majestically up the middle aisle, and was at once recognized by him as she took her seat near the platform. After rendering a few pieces only to rivet her attention, he selected one of Charlotte Elizabeth's touching descriptions of the slave mother's woes, and fastening his eyes on the lady, he poured the full tide of his own burning passion into the song. Soon her expressive features revealed the kindling emotions the song had aroused. The sufferings of the slave mother came to her in a new light. The deep fountains of her soul were broken up. The tears coursed down her cheeks like rain drops. Her head was bowed, her frame quivered, her hostility was subdued, and from that night, she devoted her life to the liberatioh of the slave! Scores and hundreds of such instances of Mr. Clark's power have occurred all along his long life.

WITH VOICE, PEN AND PURSE,

It is often asked what is the source or secret of this power. We cannot tell, only that it is a Divine inspiration, given for a great object. And if it has been irresistible in the hearer, it has been mighty also in the singer himself, as the following incident will illustrate.

In 1854, riding in his own carriage a dozen miles east of Rochester, N. Y., his horse took fright and ran away, throwing him with such violence against a pile of stones as to both dislocate and break his hip bones and wrench one leg at right angles from the other, and lacerating the nerves and muscles most fearfully.

Those who found him improvised a stretcher and bore him to a good Quaker's house near by. A doctor was at once summoned, who informed him that the injury was so aggravated it might prove fatal; but he would do his best to save his life. Then came the terrible torture of straightening out the limbs and adjusting the broken bones. The screams of the sufferer drove the women to the back part of the old mansion, where they stopped their ears to shut out the agonizing shrieks.

SO GREAT WAS HIS AGONY,

he told the operators to stop and let him die, he could not endure the torture another minute. A death-like silence pervaded for a minute. Then another voice was heard. It was the voice of song.

Astonished at what they heard, the ladies hastened back to the sufferer, when, lo! he, who a little while before was shrieking with pain, was now pouring forth a full volume of song! The words by which he had often encouraged others now came as if by inspiration to his own soul.

"Never, never give up!
Or the burden may sink you;
Providence kindly mingles the cup;
And in all trials and troubles bethink you,
The wa'chword of life must be—
Never! never give up!"

The song was completed. The soul of the singer was inspired with a fresh baptism of strength, and turning to the surgeon, he said, "Now doctor, go ahead!"

The doctors resumed their work, but not another groan or sigh escaped the lips of the torn and crushed patient. Did the world ever hear the like? To this day those bones have never knit or become one, but a cartilaginous formation makes a very good substitute, and very well serves the activities of this 74-year old young man.

In addition to the above almost fatal disaster, Mr. Clark had one side stove in twice, and other severe casualties and wrecks on railroads and steamboats have often come near costing his life; but temperance, with the kind providence of God, has been his grand "life preserver." This he commends to all young men. While laid up and helpless with his broken hip, he was visited and cheered by the sympathy of many friends, among them Frederick Douglas, President Green and Gerrit Smith. Mr. Smith remained and dined with the family. After he had gone, a generous check was found under his plate on the table.

MR. CLARK'S CONTRIBUTIONS to various reform newspapers and magazines would fill a volume. They cover a wide range of subjects, including human rights, the liquor and tobacco crimes, the unchristian, unrepublican and dangerous character of secret, oath-bound societies,—these and kindred subjects he has discussed with his pen of fire. He seems by times to struggle for words to express his indignation over the moral madness that has seized the public mind. Could he, he would summon the flaming lightnings, dipped in blood, to aid in arousing the nation to an apprehension of its crimes, its dangers, and its impending ruin. His amazement at the blindness and apathy of the people over the corrupting and emasculating effects resulting from these great national crimes against God and human society is equaled only by his ever-present sorrow over the prevailing demoralization and misery they everywhere and everlastingly produce. Yet he is always hopeful and cheerful. He has gone through the great moral conflict with slavery, and lived to see the nation come out victorious; and he is as sure that the insolent, domineering, and heart-crushing rum power, with all its dark and damning deeds of destruction and death, shall also be overthrown, as he is that God reigns!

"That come what there may,
To stand in the way,
That day the world shall see!"

His early convictions and religious views abide with him as ever present, conscious verities. An unseen power seems to have him under its control.

Mr. Clark is often in the pulpits of Detroit and elsewhere preaching the Gospel that has saved him, arraigning the terrible liquor and tobacco vices, and urging upon the people the necessity and duty of prohibition, maintaining that to tolerate, not to say, legalize, these crimes is treason against God and human society. He is occasionally in the ministers' meetings, and often closes his remarks with a song, his voice still retaining much of its old time ring and sweetness.

Mr. and Mrs. Clark recently celebrated their golden wedding, with their seven children, and grandchildren, fifteen in all, besides a house full of relatives and friends from near and far, with many nice presents, and a most joyous time.

GEORGE W. CLARK.

A SKETCH BY HIS FRIEND AND CO-LABORER, DR. JAMES C. JACKSON.

I have known George W. Clark for forty-six years intimately in all his relations in life. I may say that I never had a more reliable friend than he has been to me, and I think he would say the same of myself in my relations to him.

When you take nearly half a century out of our lives, it sends us back to that period when we were both young men; both lovers of temperance in its strictness; both lovers of liberty in all its phases; both lovers of the Lord Jesus Christ, in sincerity and in truth.

During the main period of the anti-slavery agitation, we were as yoke-fellows, almost all the time together, or so nearly so as to be able to get together on call, and attend any convention which might need our services. While we were in the anti-slavery cause, we put everything earthly, as it were, behind us, and went in for the emancipation of the enslaved, with a faith that trusted God for our own support and the support of our families; and both of us found that to rely on the Lord Jesus, was to be able to say that our bread had not failed us, and our water had been made sure.

Mr. Clark's force and influence in all our anti-slavery conventions, was through his power of song. In my opinion he was the best ballad singer that I have ever heard. His voice was rich, of great compass, and very melodious. He could fill any house he chose. He could still to utter silence the largest, most uncomfortably situated, and boisterous audience; in fact his songs were more powerful and influential than the great majority of speeches made by men who had won for themselves very great reputation for logic, eloquence and oratory. He usually sang standing, without any instrumental accompaniment; and I have never heard him sing, when he used any instrument or was accompanied by any instrumental player, that to me,—and I think to the majority of those who heard him—the accompaniment did not detract from the pleasure,—and mar the effect, which he gave.

I would not have any one think, that in giving him such large, but just praise as a singer, I do not think very much of his powers as a speaker. I have heard him make hundreds of speeches, I never heard him make one that was not good. I have heard him make a great many that were really very able; and never knew him on any occasion or in any single instance to say a foolish, or unwise, or indiscreet thing. His speech-making was not characterized by any attempts at forensic or dramatic display. He always talked plainly, but uniformly to the point of his premises. In other words, if he entertained a view on any subject whatever, when he sought to expound it he was as logical a reasoner, and kept as close to the subject matter which he sought to discuss as any extemporaneous speaker I ever knew.

I have not heard him much upon any other questions than those of temperance and the abolition of slavery. On those two subjects, from the standpoint at which he started to that which he wished to reach, he traveled as straight as a mathematician would, in solving one of Euclid's problems. As a man, he is interiorly upright. He never consults policy beyond the line which strict principle prompts, and is very little given to expediency. If there be any fault in his attitude on great moral or public questions, I should say that he does not give sufficient consideration to circumstances, especially in relation to individuals. He overlooks their environments, which so often hinder them, and not infrequently absolutely preclude them from doing what is right, in itself, and instead of this, subjects them, independent of any effort they can make, in their associations and relations for the time being, to conditions which they greatly deplore. But this dear man, however apparently rigorous he may be in his judgment of the action of other men, has a heart as soft as Humanity herself requires. He never proceeds far enough in his judgment to condemn; he judges far enough to make his own vision clear, thus enabling him to decide what he would do if he were in their circumstances, and there stops, leaving all questions of what others should do, to God, who seeth not as man seeth and can make all due allowance for human infirmities.

I said at the outset that Mr. Clark is integrally upright and I say it again deliberately; for in unnumbered instances where the slightest moral obtuseness or spiritual perversity on his part would have enabled him to carry his point against his opponent, his clear-sightedness and his love of truth rendered it impossible for him to equivocate, prevaricate or evade the logic and absolute righteousness of the point involved. I never knew him to get out of temper in debate, nor to use a harsh expression toward or of any individual, no matter how much he disliked him, nor how wicked he deemed him to be. He never uses semi-profane phrases nor slang of any sort, nor does he deal in objurgations. His language is always that which becometh a follower of Christ. He realizes in his own person as much as any man I have ever known that quality of purity which the Saviour includes in his beatitudes, whereby a man shall see God.

His life has been spent largely away from home, in the pursuance of a call which he had from God. He has been a good provider, and when at home, sustained his wife and governed his children with as much affection as any one could do, who was so much away from them. His spirit has been such that all along his life he might say to all Christians of all denominations both those who love Christ and those who are Christless,

Beloved ones, who by a faith supernal,
Have found a resting place upon the heights,
Where God makes manifest his love eternal,
And those he loves partake of heaven's delights:

To you no matter what your creed or nation,
I give the true right hand of fellowship,
For unto you has come our Lord's salvation,
And I am one with you in membership.

Considered then as a whole, my beloved friend I regard as having been a great and untold blessing to those whom he has known. His personal, social, political and religious influence, has always been of an elevating tendency and well adapted to produce good, helpful, healthy results. The instances are very seldom indeed, where, when he has come into contact with another man through association intimate enough, and long enough, to produce proper results that he has not helped such a man out of difficulties which obstructed his onward way toward righteousness and holiness.

It may not be amiss for me to say that on the question of temperance, he has sought to realize the apostle's injunction that "he that striveth for the mastery is temperate in all things." Mr. Clark seems to have mastered the question of temperance more fully and successfully than the great body of temperance men. He is as much opposed to gluttony and inordinate eating as he is to ordinary or inordinate drinking; and he holds with very great clearness of reasoning that thousands and thousands of boys and girls are led into the use of stimulating drinks, until they reach the intoxicating point, through the use of stimulo-narcotic drinks, such as are used on the tables of most moral people, together with the use of stimulating foods which increase the heart's action and produce congestion of the blood vessels of the stomach, and so create a thirst for intoxicating drinks. So Mr. Clark lives very simply, sanctifying his body unto the Lord and recognizing it as a temple of the Holy Spirit. It may be said of him in closing, what the apostle said of himself "I have fought a good fight, I have kept the faith." Mr. Clark's course may not be quite finished as yet, but it is to be said without doubt that when it is finished and he —"lies down to die,

His broken projects mended
By the healing in Christ's eye,
His spirit upward going,
Where Christ's love is fresh and flowing,
T'will be sweet when they meet,
To find his place of resting
In the shadow of Christ's feet."

HYPOCRITES IN THE CHURCH.

Yes, no doubt there are hypocrites in the church; even among the twelve apostles there was one man who was a thief and a traitor; that was eight per cent of the whole number. Then there was one man who, when cornered, lied, and denied his Lord, and cursed and swore. There is another eight per cent. Is the average worse now? Is more than one church member in a dozen a thief or a traitor? Is there more than one in a dozen who will lie and swear and deny his Lord?

Well, what then? Among business men, merchants, clerks, bankers, and railroad men—leaving out office-seekers and politicians—would it be thought very strange if in a life-time's trial one in twelve went wrong and turned out badly? And these officials are usually picked men; but we cannot pick Christians, we must take all who come; for the invitation is to "whosoever will."

Suppose you take the farmers, or carpenters, or bricklayers, or blacksmith's, or lawyers, or any other class, would you be astonished if any one in twelve proved to be dishonest and untrustworthy? Does it not then seem that hypocrisy is not peculiar to Christianity, but that it runs through humanity?

"But almost all the defaulters and swindlers reported in the newspapers, are deacons and Sunday-school superintendents."

Indeed! Do you never hear of an infidel who is a defaulter? of a Freemason who is a swindler? of a Democrat or a Republican who is a thief?

Why is it, think you, that the papers are so particular to state that detected scoundrels are church members, even if they haven't been in church for months? Why do they not take pains to classify defaulters and swindlers as Democrats, Republicans, Odd-fellows, Freemasons and the like? Is it because none of these worthies ever go wrong? Or is it because there is a little prejudice against Christ and Christianity? Or can it be because Christians have somehow acquired a better reputation for honesty than skeptics, and so a failure on their part causes more surprise than in some other cases?

One thing is certain, men never steal what is is beyond their reach. Can this be the reason why skeptics and scoffers steal so little? Will no one give them a chance to act as treasurers, cashiers, executors, or trustees? Can it be that the men who howl so loudly about breaches of trust among Christians, do not break trust because no one will ever trust them?

It takes a respectable man to get into a position of trust; and of course these who steal trust funds must be all reputable men; otherwise they would not get a chance to steal.

Did you ever see a counterfeit ten dollar bill? Now, why was it counterfeited? Was it not because it was worth counterfeiting? Was it not because the genuine bill had value? No one counterfeits brown paper. Who ever counterfeited a bill on a broken bank? There are counterfeit Christians, no doubt, lots of them. Why? Is it not because Christians are worth counterfeiting? Frequently a counterfeit Christian is a genuine infidel. Who ever saw a counterfeit infidel? Why not? Are the genuine usually so worthless that no one wishes to counterfeit them?—The Armory.

"TO STAND."

Grant me a patient courage, Lord!
Sore wounded and with broken sword
Beset on every hand;
A lonely and forsaken man,
Far at the doubtful battle's van
To stand!

Weary, athirst and well nigh spent,
O! for a speedy succor sent
From out thy royal band!
It is so hard, in wreck and rout,
'Mid dying faith and living doubt,
To stand!

Yet o'er the conflict's din and heat,
Thy golden trumpet soundeth sweet:
"Yield not, my son, but stand!"
It is not mine to say thee, "Nay;"
Mine but to hearken, to obey--
To stand!

Then if I perish, let me die
Fronting my foes right valiantly;
Thy colors in my hand!
Since death is but the joyful word
That calleth me before my Lord
To stand!

FELLOWSHIP WITH ERROR.

There can be no doubt that truth is of the first importance in the estimation of our Lord and of the Holy Spirit who gave us the Sacred Scriptures. The former says, "He that does truth cometh to the light;" "the true worshipers shall worship the Father in sprit and in truth, and the Father seeketh such to worship him;" "ye shall know the truth, and the truth shall make you free;" "I am the truth;" "to this end was I born, and for this cause came I into the world, that I should bear witness unto the truth." These expressions, and others like them, are contained in the single Gospel of John.

The Holy Spirit is again and again called "the Spirit of truth," of whom Jesus says to his disciples, "He will guide you into all truth,"and who ever manifests the greatest solicitude for the truth as opposed to error. Hence unto them that do not obey the truth, indignation and wrath, tribulation and anguish are in store, (Rom. 2: 8); love rejoiceth not in iniquity, but rejoiceth in the truth (1 Cor. 13: 6); we are to do nothing against the truth, but for the truth, (2 Cor. 13: 8); the Galatians are sharply reproved, because they obeyed not the truth, (3: 1); if we have indeed heard Christ, we have been taught by Him, as the truth is in Jesus, (Eph. 4: 21); men are to be damned who believe not the truth; for we are chosen unto salvation through belief of the truth, (2 Thess. 2: 12, 13); having purified our hearts in obeying the truth through the Spirit, (1 Pet. 1: 22); and it is of some significance that the word "truth" occurs fifteen times in the first Epistle of John, five times in the second, and seven times in the third.

Not only is there this high regard for the truth everywhere exhibited through the word of God, but believers are to mark those who teach contrary to the doctrine they have learned from the Scriptures, and to avoid them (Rom. 16: 17). This is not something which Christians are at liberty to set aside as of no consequence, but on the other hand, they are explicitly instructed about it. "Now we command you, brethren, in the name of our Lord Jesus Christ, that ye withdraw yourselves from every brother that walketh disorderly, and not after the tradition he received of us" (2 Thess. 3: 6). "If any man teach otherwise, and consent not to wholesome words, . . . from such withdraw thyself" (1 Tim. 6: 3, 5). "If there come any unto you, and bring not this doctrine [the doctrine of Christ], receive him not into your house, neither bid him God speed: for he that biddeth him God speed, is partaker of his evil deeds" (2 John 10: 11).

The present drift of thought in the church is right in the face of these and such Scriptures, and the man who acts upon them is sneered at, even by his brethren, as harsh and uncharitable and unworthy of notice. The Word says, "Be ye not unequally yoked with unbelievers; for what fellowship hath righteousness with unrighteousness? and what communion hath light with darkness? and what concord hath Christ with Belial? or what part hath he that believeth with an infidel?" (2 Cor. 6: 14, 15). The Word says by an inspired apostle who was appointed to write a kind of preface to the book of judgments that will close this Christ-rejecting age, "It was needful for me to write unto you, and exhort you that ye should earnestly contend for the faith which was once delivered to the saints" (Jude 3). It is no obedience to this plain direction to compromise the truth, or to appear on the same platform with pronounced heretics, except to oppose them.

Yet at a "Church Congress," held last summer, and largely controlled by James Freeman Clarke, the representative Unitarian of New England, and by Rev. Heber Newton, who openly scoffs at the Bible, Dr. Pentecost, who is justly considered a faithful witness for the truth, was present, and took part in the discussions as if all the members were of one mind. Quite recently Dr. Herrick Johnson, a professor in a Presbyterian Theological Seminary, and an ex-moderator of the General Assembly, introduced Canon Farrar, an avowed Universalist, to the students of six theological schools, and without a word of protest against his Christ-dishonoring and fatal heresy, if his speech was correctly reported in the papers. It remains to be seen whether his students will logically conclude that Universalism is a harmless opinion, which they are free to proclaim. No one, so far as observed, seems to have been disturbed by the conduct of these honored brethren;but just because they are honored, and have the confidence of the church, it is needful to express surprise and sorrow at their fellowship with error.

"I know this," said the apostle in his farewell address to the elders of Ephesus, "that after my departing shall grievous wolves enter in among you, not sparing the flock. Also of your own selves shall men arise, speaking perverse things, to draw away disciples after them" (Acts 20: 29, 30), It was this that gave the keenest pang to the pain of separation from his brethren. So in his last epistle he writes to his son Timothy, "Hold fast the form of sound words, which thou hast heard of me; . . . for the time will come when they will not endure sound doctrine. (2 Tim. 1: 13; 4: 3, 4).

It seems that the time of opposition to sound doctrine has fully come, and numerous ears in all directions have caught the loathsome disease of the itch, demanding to be tickled by sensational topics or by polished rhetoric, and utterly indifferent to truth. No one can doubt that this must lead on to the Laodicean state of the church, in which outward prosperity will be the symbol of spiritual poverty, and the answer will at once be suggested to the Saviour's sad question, "when the Son of man cometh, shall he find faith on the earth?" (Luke 18: 8). May he give us grace in an evil day to obey the word, "Have no fellowship with the unfruitful works of darkness, but rather reprove them" (Eph. 5:11). —The Truth.

[NOTE.—Dr. Brookes writes faithfully against contamination with erroneous doctrine, or encouraging those who teach it; how much more severely should they be condemned who countenance and fellowship the blasphemies and paganism of the lodge.—ED. CYNOSURE.]

WASHINGTON LETTER.

Trip to Chambersburg.—The War Spirit in Congress.—The Bark of a British bull-pup scares our noble Senators.—The peril of Self-destruction.—The anti-Chinese Folly.—Free sugar in the new Tariff.—The Education Bill and the Pensions.

DEAR CYNOSURE:—My last letter was from Baltimore. I made a brief visit to Chambersburg, where I found the friends of our reform steadfast, quiet and hopeful. They have gained some local accessions that will give them moral and material strength. I have had the pleasure of listening to an able sermon by Rev. Mr. Keiter, pastor of the King Street church, and to speak to his flock in the evening. A severe cold, that threatened to prostrate me, induced my return to Washington on Monday, when I had the unexpected pleasure of finding Pres. J. Blanchard, whose stay in the city is longer than he anticipated.

A persistent effort is being made to awaken a military spirit and secure vast appropriations for fortifications and a navy. Ill-timed and absurd are all such endeavors; nothing shows their folly more conspicuously than the following incident:

Senator Van Wyack lives near the British Legation. It seems that a large dog which is kept there disturbs the slumbers of the distinguished Senator. It has been suggested that a kiudly appeal, or at least a policeman's club, might abate the nuisance. But it is remembered that our navy is exceedingly weak, our sea-board cities absolutely defenseless, and our standing army unworthy the name. It will never do to arouse the British lion. Fifty millions for a new navy, $160,000,000 for coast defence, is the smallest outlay that will enable this great nation to vindicate the honor and protect the slumbers of its Senators. In the war of 1812–14 our population was not one-fifth of what it is now, our national resources were not one-tenth as great, and yet Great Britain failed to capture any of our sea-board cities; and, though a bold dash captured the village which has since become this goodly city, they could not hold it for twenty-four hours. The security of our nation is in a just and peaceful spirit. We have a thousand-fold more to fear from internal than external enemies.

But while we have in any case but little to fear from foreign nations, we have much to fear from our own injustice. Nations never do wickedly without sooner or later reaping a righteous retribution. There seems to be a fixed determination to drive out the Chinese. Efforts are being made to secure their expulsion by act of Congress. No legal restraint seems adequate for their protection. A less peaceful, less industrious, and less law-abiding class of foreigners are, in the main, the persecutors of the Chinese. The Chinese minister, it is said, will demand, in the name of his Government, the fulfillment of our treaty obligations in the protection of his people. He will demand indemnity in default of such protection. It may seem easy to slight such a demand, but the moral effect on the nation would be a thousand-fold greater than all the bombardments of all the navies of the world. It is hoped that instead of responding to the war-like spirit, Congress will pass the bills, now before either House, providing for a peaceful adjustment of all international questions.

The new Tariff bill introduced by Mr. Morrison of Illinois proposes a reduction of $20,000,000 of national revenue, one-half of which is to be taken from the duties on sugars. No form of so-called "protection" has been so unreasonable and uncalled for as the duties on sugars. An average duty of sixty-two per cent has been collected off the people of the nation for the benefit of a little handful of sugar planters who cannot at their best estate supply one of our large cities with sugar. Because I am opposed to all war I would favor the freest intercourse among nations. I can but favor all forms of tariff reduction and hope for the time when trade amongst all nations shall be as unrestricted as between the several States of the Union.

The debate on the Education bill has developed the fact that many prominent members from the South are opposed to its passage. Possibly some of these men think it will be easier to control or suppress the negro vote than to make it intelligent. Perhaps they regard the proffered aid as an invasion of State rights, or as an entering wedge that would lead to such invasion. But if the Southern States would protect their rights, they must educate their illiterate people, both white and colored. The State Superindent of Public Instruction for Louisiana says that public education has gone backward during the last few years and makes an earnest plea for national aid.

Perhaps nothing would tend so much to promote a truly national feeling in the South and equal in some degree the disbursements of the vast sums drawn from the people of the entire nation, as this aid to education in Southern States. The pensions are distributed almost entirely in the North. This may be just, but it works badly for the incoming generation in the South who had no part in the war, from which our immense pension payments are the sequel.

LITERATURE.

THE GLASSE OF TIME, in the first age. Divinely handled by Thomas Peyton, 1620 A. D. Pp. 177. Price 50 cts. John B. Alden, New York.

The character of this interesting volume will be best understood from its history which is thus given: "This quaint poem appeared nearly half a century earlier than Paradise Lost, and it is intrinsically probable that it would have fallen under the eye of Milton, in any case there are striking points of resemblance between the two poems. The copy of The Glasse of Time in the British Museum was purchased at a noted sale of old books in 1819, by Baron Bolland, who notes upon a blank leaf that it cost him 21*l.* 17*s.* 6*d.*, (about $110.00). Some years ago a gentleman of Virginia, Mr. J. L. Peyton, sprung from the old English family of that name, made an accurate transcript of the copy in the British Museum, preserving even the quaint spelling, punctuation, capitalizing, and italicizing of the original. This present edition is printed without alteration. Apart from its presumed connection with Paradise Lost, the poem has very considerable merits of its own, and is in every way a literary curiosity." The introduction is a careful and critical analysis of the book and a comparison with "Paradise Lost."

A BIRD'S-EYE VIEW OF THE DOCTRINAL TEACHING OF THE ROMAN CATHOLIC CHURCH, and the true Secret to Ireland's Independence; under the similitude of a common place talk with Irish Roman Catholics. By John Daly, a converted Roman Catholic. Pp. 210. Price 25 cts. John Daly, Wilkesbarre, Pa.

In spite of the literary cruditics suggested by the title of this work it is written after a profound experience of redeeming grace, after the author had for many years tenaciously clung to the traditions of Rome. The incidents of his conversion are deeply interesting and the different chapters with their refutation of the confessional, priestly absolution, transubstantiation, and the Eucharist are argued plainly, earnestly, and forcibly, though not with the finish of a rhetorician. The second part is somewhat historical, showing that the early Irish church was not Roman, and Patrick, Columbkill and others for eleven centuries were not papists. The contamination of this early church and subjugation to Rome is traced. The author pleads earnestly with his Irish countrymen for liberty of conscience, urging them to investigate for themselves and prove that which is good and true without relying always for salvation upon the will of a weak mortal like themselves. Since the publication of this book he has opened a tract repository for Roman Catholics in Wilkesbarre, Pa.

How to Work is a manual for Christian Workers by John A. Bennett, published by John W. Pritchard, publisher of the Christian Nation, New York. The work is intended for a concise outline for young Christian workers, to not only inspire them to work, but to instruct them briefly in the methods that have proved most effective and are in accord with the Bible. In some respects it is almost elementary in its character. It is thus divided: Qualifications of the Worker, His Weapon, Bible Study, Bible Readings, Bible Marking, How to conduct Meetings, Inquirers, Excuses.

The Linguistic Chart of Bible Wines, by Rev. J. A. Pollock, Spiceland, Indiana, is designed to accompany a volume on the same subject in which the author with greatest diligence and research proves the use of unintoxicating, as well as fermented wines in the Bible. The chart on one side shows the component parts of grape juice in the natural and fermented state, and by letters in different colors makes apparent to every eye the proportion and kind of change which takes place. On the reverse side is a list of the Hebrew and Greek words that are translated "wine" in the Bible, with their literal meaning, number of times used, etc. By the use of this chart any ready speaker can make a most effective temperance address. Address the author for this valuable chart and book.

The subject of Church Union will be discussed in the March Century, from the Presbyterian point of view, by Dr. Howard Crosby of New York, and Professor A. A. Hodge of Princeton.

No lover of the beautiful in nature will fail to appreciate the labors of Dingee, Conrad & Co., the celebrated florists of West Grove, Pennsylvania. For years they have been known as among the leading rose culturists of the world, and in their immense green houses are yearly developing new varieties. Something of their interesting work may be learned in their catalogue, which will be sent on application.

Emilio Castelar is probably the most brilliant orator now living. A full-page portrait of him will form the frontispiece of the March Century, with articles by William Jackson Armstrong and Alvey A. Adee, of the State Department, Washington. The latter was a member of the American Legation in Spain at the time of Castelar's political ascendancy. The present situation in Spain makes these papers especially timely.

The Hon. Warren Easton, Louisiana, State Superintendent of Education, writes an earnest appeal to the Senators and members of Congress of Louisiana in behalf of the Blair Educational Bill. "Much as your State has done for popular education, and hopes to continue to do," he says, "she can accomplish but little in this great ocean of illiteracy without a helping hand." He then calls attention to the statistics of illiteracy of the State. Of the total population over 10 years of age he says 49 per cent cannot read. Native whites over 10 years of age who cannot write, 19 per cent; foreign born whites over 10 years of age who cannot write, 10 per cent; white males between 10 and 14 who cannot write, 28 per cent; females, 25 per cent; white females, 21 and upward, who cannot write, 16 per cent; males, 15 per cent; total colored, 10 years and upward, who cannot write, 79 per cent; colored males, 10 to 14, who cannot write, 73 per cent; colored females, 71 per cent; colored males, 21 and upward, who cannot write, 80 per cent; females, 82 per cent. After a careful study of these figures, he says: "Can you stand idly by and hear your colleagues refuse to lend a helping hand to your section and to the many others burdened alike with her with a great mass of illiteracy?"

AMONG THE DANES.

From a late letter from Pastor F. L. Grundtvig, of the Danish Lutheran church, Clinton, Iowa, we learn of some marked steps of progress in understanding the nature, and dealing with the evil of secretism. May the Clinton congregation never be vexed with lodge enemies within its peaceful fold. The letter says: "I sent a small paper the other day, Lidt of de hemmelige Foreingers Historie i de forenede Stater (A few words on the history of secret societies in the United States). That is the twentieth paper I have written against secret societies in the Danish language. Last week (Monday, Jan. 18th) we had a hot evening in the Danish Lutheran congregation in this city, but we won the battle. We passed a law against secret societies as follows: "No member of a secret society with its own religion, must be allowed membership in this congregation. If any member of this congregation enters a secret society with a religion of its own, that member excludes himself from the congregation."

TO THE FRIENDS OF THE REFORM IN ILLINOIS.

DEAR FRIENDS:— "Owing to the state of our treasury," I have been requested to make a special effort to secure subscriptions, collections, or donations, during my last month's work for the Illinois Christian Association.

I have never been a financier, nor could I ever obtain subscriptions worthy of mention for anything. It is true, I have secured a very few for the Cynosure. But I am free to say that I never had the faculty of raising funds which some men so happily possess. In view of this, and the unwearied opposition of the craft, not only to my raising funds but to the distribution of literature and to my speaking in churches, or halls, it is no wonder that the funds in the treasurer's hands have run so low that they are almost exhausted. The wonder is, that they held out so long! The best "special effort" toward replenishing our depleted treasury of which I am capable is, to lay these facts before you and request you to respond as generously and promptly as the necessities of the case demand.

This reform cannot advance without funds and friends, and it possesses both. So while we have no desire to "number Israel," we hope all will remember that our treasurer, Bro. Phillips, is a good man to count shekels and will give you credit for all you send.

We do not resort to any device of "ring cake, fish pond, or bean bag." We simply state the case, and urge prompt action in the line of what God requires you to do in the matter. If you give a tenth of your income to his cause (which is the least you should do), send that proportion of it which you believe measures up to your full duty in the matter. Our success in life, in any direction in which our duty lies, reaches only to the degree that we meet the Divine requirements respecting it. "Faith without works is dead." "What God hath joined together let not man put asunder." Yours in the conflict,

G. F. DISSETTE.

A WEEK IN OHIO.

Up and down the Country through Snow and Mud.—West Salem, Creston, Utica, Albion, Savannah, Mansfield.—Warm Friends in every Quarter.

UTICA, O., Feb. 19, 1886.

DEAR CYNOSURE:—My report this week is as follows:

Friday, at West Salem and Creston, I received some subscriptions for the Cynosure and State work. Owing to other appointments I was compelled to refuse an invitation extended by I. W. Knestrick and N. Minor, of Creston, to speak at that point. I hope to be able to speak there in the near future.

On Saturday, brethren Laux, Smith, the Overholts and others made me welcome; had bills circulated announcing that I would speak in the City Hall in the evening. Quite an interest had been awakened by Mr. Ronayne's and father's lectures. Between two and three hundred gathered. The Masons had learned wisdom by the past, and did not make their appearance. I found a gentleman here who had been induced to join the fraternity since Mr. Ronayne worked the degrees. He told me frankly that they worked Masonry in the lodge just as Mr. R. worked it in public, and he did not purpose paying the Masons money for what he could just as well read in books.

Sabbath I accepted the invitation of Rev. E. Hunsberter, pastor of a German Mennonite church, to occupy his pulpit in the morning. The pastor prayed in German; as I could not talk otherwise, I spoke in English. The congregation evidently understood both. The Lord was with us and blessed his truth.

Monday evening found me at Albion, where Bro. Chas. Landis had worked faithfully to arrange for my lecture. The school house had been procured, the churches being refused. Although the roads were in a very bad condition, a good number gathered at the hour appointed. Many remembered and spoke highly of the lectures delivered some years since by my father. A number of Masons came in to hear what I had to say. One of them, a Mr. Lee, who had been lowered, we were told, to the Holy (?) Royal Arch degree, lost his jewel (a silent tongue) and helped expose the fraternity. His father, Josiah Lee (of whom I spoke in my last letter), was so much pleased with the lecture that he gave five dollars to help on the cause.

Tuesday I rode seven miles on horseback and walked four to reach my appointments at Savannan. This was no easy matter, as the roads had not improved any by the snow and rain that had fallen. I succeeded in reaching Mr. J. W. Paxton's, however, in time for dinner. The lecture was very well attended and a good collection taken for the work. I feel greatly indebted to Bro. Wm. Gregg and family for personal kindness and assistance in our work. His son George kindly took me some eight miles through the mud and snow to Ashland, where I got a train for Mansfield. "A friend in need, is a friend indeed."

Wednesday I had the pleasure of attending for a little time the dedication services of the new U. P. church in Mansfield. The building is nicely located. Has a seating capacity for some five hundred. It costs over $14,000. Nearly this amount has been pledged. Prominent ministers from different parts of the country assisted in the services.

Thursday, after making my monthly report to our State Secretary, I took the train for this place. Friends were expecting me, and notice that I would speak in the Covenanter church had been well circulated. At Mr. David Hawey's I found dinner waiting. I need not say to those who know the Haweys that all true reformers will find a home here. Going to the country in the afternoon I had the pleasure of meeting our friend and co-worker, Mr. Caleb Lyons. He is noted for his zeal in our cause. Both he and his estimable wife were suffering from severe colds, and were not able to attend my lecture in the evening.

This noon I take the train for Columbus. President Blanchard writes from Washington that he would like to have me meet him in Cincinnati next week and assist in arranging for lectures. This I would like to do, but have not fully decided, as there are other appointments to which I should attend.

W. B. SSODDARD.

CORRESPONDENCE.

THE WONDERFUL WORK OF GOD IN MEMPHIS.

MAN'S EXTREMITY GOD'S OPPORTUNITY.—GLORIOUS NEWS FROM TENNESEE BAPTISTS.

MEMPHIS, Feb. 13, 1886.

EDITOR CYNOSURE:—Once more I am seated to write you, and through your excellent medium, thank you and many friends for tokens and expressions of sympathy tendered us during these months of anxiety. We are now—praise the name of the Lord,—in our new home next to my church. We live in part of it while the carpenter works in the other. We moved into the house while the plastering was green, yet God took care of us during the most intense cold weather known in this country for many years; we have not even had colds. I intended to have written you last week but deferred on aecount of holding a conference meeting in church last Friday night, one week ago to-day, in which meeting we excluded 28, and gave 40 more until February the 28th to leave the lodges. We are determined to rid our church of lodgery. They keep up a continual broil among us, and since last July, when I first began to uncover the whole lodge system and let the light in, they have persistently refused to give anything in support of the church, thus causing the entire support of the church to rest upon a few, and of course my building has kept us in a continual strain.

This action on the part of the church has added new fuel to the flames, and the result is continual threats, and many fear they will make an attempt on my life through the windows of the church. I continue to preach the Gospel of separation, and do not intend to be intimidated in any duty toward God. Twice since I have been engaged in this work have I been without bread. The last was to-day when your letter came. Wife said to me at the table, "Well we are again without anything to eat in the house. I told you to let the lodges alone; this is all there is in the house, and the children and I need clothes and—and," here she broke down. I could not stand by and see her tears. I did not eat any breakfast, but went to my room, and asked God to send us money for bread, and before the meal was over Wheaton College church and two individuals had sent money for bread. Yes, dear brother, glory to God, it was money for bread; God had it on the way. I do wish you could have seen us brother, wife and I, we all wept when the letter came and we knelt with our children and thanked God.

The extreme cold weather here, and deep snows are such that we are not used to in this country, and they have caused all the avenues of work to be closed up and our people for nearly two months have been without work; this is the cause of our poverty. Those who are with me have given all they could spare to keep the building going along and many of them are very much impoverished,—and here comes more bread (a dear old brother just came in and brought a basket full). God cares for us, bless his holy name! Shall I not go forward in the discharge of my duty, when I have such a backing as the Lord God of Hosts? He says to me, "Fear not, for I am with thee: be not discouraged; for I am thy God: I will strengthen thee; yea, I will help thee: yea, I will uphold thee with the right hand of my rightcousness." Isa. 41: 10.

I have often thought of father Blanchard's text, "Thy kingdom come;" and more so because my brethren so often talk of it. One old man 70 years of age was taken into the Masonic lodge and his case was chronic, but father Blanchard brought him out; he is now on God's side of this living question.

I now want to again thank many friends for the sum of $322.20 I have one final note of $300 to pay on building, March 1st. We have paid in all $900. The continual cold weather is very much to our disadvantage, but we only trust in Him who says, "all things work together for good to them who love God." Trusting in him we have thus far gone forward and at every step of our onward way we have planted a rock, Ebenezer.

The secretists are very much disorganized. They talk strong through their organ, but they are losing ground every day, and at every meeting they are losing members. I expect to have some six or eight to join us from the African Methodist. I find the Cynosure is doing much good. Several ministers in this end of the State have severed their connection from the lodge and refused to serve their church unless they declared against secretism, among whom are pastors H. Smith, Carolina, Tenn.; H. C. Owen, Stanton Depot, Tenn.; T. J. Searcy, Brownsville, Tenn.; also the church at Ripley. These are all Baptists, the two first named are men of great influence, and have a large following. The lodges at Brownsville, both Masons and Odd-fellows, are completely broken up. These pastors said to their congregations they would not endorse any institution that would attempt to murder a man for his honest convictions. The truth is more of our people are awake to the true inwardness of these blasphemous institutions. May God help you, and bless you in the good work. May we roll over the logs; let the light shine on the bugs and enjoy the sight of their squirming. I will write you again after our next meeting, sooner if anything of importance transpires. We ask the prayers of Christians everywhere. Yours in battle array.

JOSEPH COOK'S BOSTON LECTURES.

Joseph Cook is doing a great work by his Monday noon lectures. It was our privilege to attend his lecture of Feb. 15. Tremont Temple was well filled, especially the immense galleries with seats free. The tone of the meeting was as devotional as Dr. Cullis' mid-winter convention, Mr. Cook leading in prayer at commencement and close. In his prelude he denounced the anti-Chinese mobs as of foreign origin, and the Sunday newspaper as a moral nuisance. In his lecture he affirmed that eternal salvation was freely offered to every human being, and that this life was the only probation of the race; that those who reject salvation in this life will be eternally lost and beyond the hope of mercy. In his chosen field, Mr. Cook is no doubt the most remarkable man on the American continent.

S. C. KIMBALL.

GLADSTONE AND PARNELL.

The opening of the Parliament of the United Kingdom happily reveals the fact that although Gladstone has delayed the Irish questions for several weeks, Parnell has the good sense to exercise patience for the time, and thus shows to some of his followers an example of a virtue which they would do well to follow, and they will, of course, acquiesce in the decision of their leader. Had Parnell chosen the opposite course, and shown the pugnastic spirit which is ever so applauded among us by his countrymen, he might again have strengthened his Tory foes as at the elections; but his party has gained wisdom by experienee, and they will now rather trust a friend than court a foe.

The delay suggests another reference to his great speech in November at Edinburgh while in opposition, and now may be seen as the rule for his official course. He then said: "Rely upon it, that if a demand is made constitutionally by the vast majority of the representatives of Ireland for the concession of vast local powers of self-government, accompanied with an admission that the unity of the Empire is not to be impaired, the magnitude of that subject and its character will sweep into the shade, for the moment, all those subjects of ordinary legislation on which I, or on which others have addressed you, and the satisfactory settlement of that subject which goes down to the very roots and foundations of our whole civil and political constitution, will become the first duty of Parliament." He then alluded to the danger of any "mistake," and advocated "a kindly spirit," but of "perfect independence" (of the Irish party) "so as to maintain every dictate of the principle that maintains the unity of the Empire. That is a matter of absolute necessity."

If the Irish party expected more from the Tories, with whom they then co-operated against Gladstone, it has found its mistake. And it cannot expect that Gladstone will do more for them than he then so plainly declared the "absolute necessity." If they had then co-operated with Gladstone, who had already carried many good measures for them and given Ireland a constituency as broad as that of Scotland or England, the measures still forthcoming might already have been passed. But, possibly, public sentiment was not quite enough for them, and much will depend on the course of action in Parliament by the Irish representatives whether Gladstone's plans shall be carried out, or the Orangemen and Tories be restored to carry out their conservative, yea, oppressive policy. Experience may have taught even the rash men of the Parnell party some discretion. T. H.

THE TRACT ON MASONIC OUTRAGES.

WELLESLEY, MASS., Feb. 10, 1886.

DEAR EDITOR:—Mr. Hinman's kind request that I should write that tract on Masonic Outrages seems to require some reply.

I believe that a full account of the various murders committed by the Masonic fraternity would have a great effect in enlightening the public mind regarding its real character, and I sincerely wish that such a tract, or pamphlet, might be compiled. But while deeply appreciating the compliment to me involved in Mr. Hinman's proposal that I should write it, I am fully aware that such veterans as Elders Callender and Tapley, for instance, have a much fuller personal knowledge on the subject than I possess, and for that reason, if no other, would be more competent to undertake the task. But if the pressure of other cares and duties prevent worthier pens from undertaking it, I am willing to do the best I can to compile such a pamphlet, but must be entirely dependent on the kindness of reform friends to furnish me with whatever facts may be in their possession.

My desire to work for the cause but grows stronger the more the Lord gives me to do for it, but I do not wish to undertake what others might do better.

Truly yours, E. E. FLAGG.

A BURNS MEMORIAL ROUTED.

LASALLE, Ill., Jan. 26, 1886.

EDITOR CYNOSURE:—I enclose a memorandum of an affair that occurred here yesterday, and it bears on the Masonic and temperance questions.

Last evening the citizens of LaSalle were requested to meet in the capacity of a literary club to commemorate the birth of Robert Burns.

The hall in the second story of the rear end of the M. E. church was recently finished and named after a late pastor, Mr. Hazeltine, a high Mason and high license man, a general favorite with that people here, so that there was a great rush of that class, which, together with others, filled the hall so that there was scarcely standing room and but few of the audience sitting. The consequence was the floor began settling in the midst of prayer, it being supported from the roof by an iron rod through a cross timber under the floor, the nut on the end of the rod stripping off the thread for several inches. A panic was prevented by the pastor breaking out into singing, thereby saving the audience from being plunged down the very intricate winding stairway to the landing below.

The moral of this may be judged by the object and the character of the surroundings. Perhaps Providence had nothing to do with the affair, but the people were glad to escape without commemorating the birth of the jolly bard of Scotland this time. T.

GOD'S WAYS VS. MAN'S WAYS.

VALMONT, Col., Feb. 4, 1886.

The Preacher's record is, "Lo, this only have I found, that God hath made man upright; but they have sought out many inventions." Since the day that Satan succeeded in causing Eve to believe that God was fallible, her posterity have manifested a like belief. Very many, even Christian men and women, seem, by their acts, to say, we enter our names on the list as competitors with Him whose claims are thus stated through Isaiah: "For as the heavens are higher than the earth, so are my ways higher than your ways."

It is not supposable, neither is it charged, that Christians intend so to enter the race for supremacy with their Maker. Yet through the traditions of the elders, and their sanction of "sought out inventions," and the blinding and pursuasive power of Satan, many are unwittingly placing themselves in the attitude of ignoring God's plans by substituting human contrivances or inventions.

God has a complete and perfect plan of operation. To that plan it becomes all sentient beings to defer, and to conform themselves. Most assuredly, as with a Christian, no reasoning should be needed to convince him that the pattern thus set is the apex of all perfection. Yet so it is, that, blinded and unaided human nature is continually being led astray by Satan at his will, under the old and successful blasphemy of "God doth know, that in the day [thou dost substitute thine own plan for his] then your eyes shall be opened, and ye shall be as gods."

The thought of writing this communication to the public was begotten by an interview, a very agreeable, and I trust, profitable one, held yesterday, with an esteemed couple, persons of intelligence and real worth, who, nevertheless, were both of them members of a secret, or of secret societies, professedly human and reformatory in their aims. One of these organizations was formed ostensibly in the interest of the overthrow of the rum traffic. A good object, surely. Yet not supported, as by this organization, with its secrecy, exclusiveness, regalia and titled grandiloquence, by any pattern set by Christ, or by any sanction whatever as derived from the word and spirit of wisdom. Were Christ on earth in incarnate form, would he unite, in affiliation, with any one of the organizations holding a secret pass-word as a key by means of which its possessor might reach the sanctum of the order? Would he approve of such organization?

Christian brother or sister, suffer words of exhortation from one who for more than sixty-two years has been, through the new birth, a member of the Christian family. Christ being with you and in you, I entreat, with all the love of a father in Israel and a brother in Christ Jesus, that you enter into no fraternation whatever, into which our Head would not enter or approve, were he clothed with incarnation and dwelt among us.

In all efforts against the powers of darkness and sin let us be mighty through God, to the pulling down of Satan's strongholds; among which are Freemasonry and its almost numberless satellites.

Depend upon it, beloved, the natural and inherent animus of all organizations as ostensibly waring against Satan's kingdom, if not planted of the Father, are exoctics in the garden of the Lord; and as sure as is Christ's word, they shall, yes, "shall be rooted up." R. W. LYMAN.

THE SONS OF VETERANS.

In the list of political lodges in the Cynosure the "Sons of Veterans" is omitted. We have reason to believe it to be a political order. There is no doubt in the minds of many that it is a trap to catch young men so they may be schooled into Freemasonry and deluded into the belief that they are patriotically honoring the old soldiers, but it is a reproach to any nation, although it is in homœpathic doses the same as Good Templarism. A member of the order said to me while looking at an illustration of a Masonic lodge room, "That is the same as our camp." He was a youth in his teens with a tender and open heart unlike the lodge. He was ignorant that the whole lodge system is antagonistic to free investigation and the religion of Christ. In nearly all lodges they sing and pray. In the church Christians pray in the name of Christ. The lodge excludes Christ, and may elect an infidel to pray. The church is of God, the lodge is of the devil. He that climbeth up some other way, the same is a thief and a robber. CYRUS SMITH.

BIBLE LESSONS.

STUDIES IN JEWISH HISTORY.

LESSON X, March 7, 1886.—Reading the Law. Neh. 8: 1-12.

GOLDEN TEXT.—So they read in the book, in the law of God, distinctly, and gave the sense, and caused them to understand the reading. Neh. 8: 8.

[Open the Bible and read the lesson.]

COMMENTS ON THE LESSON BY E. E. FLAGG.

1. The occasion of the reading. vs. 1–4. No other impulse than a genuine hunger for the Word could have gathered together such a throng of men and women. Something similar was witnessed in the time of Edward VI. when crowds assembled in St. Paul's to hear the Bible read—so long sealed to the masses by papal tyranny. It was not the novelty of the occasion which drew them, nor desire to hear new and startling doctrines; it was the heart of a sorely chastized nation seeking God once more through the channel of a long-neglected religious ordinance. Israel's appalling apostasy was owing in no small degree to the long disuse of this means of grace—the public reading of the Law. Its revival seems to have originated in the request of the people themselves, the result of a great spiritual awakening—in its turn a direct result of the civil and religious reforms inaugurated by a wise, just and Godly ruler. As soon as political questions begin to be looked at by rulers and people from a Gospel standpoint there is laid the basis for a genuine and lasting revival of spiritual life. Prohibition has entered the realm of party politics, but those people who deprecate this have forgotten how Christians everywhere are being bound in closer union by being given a mutual object to work and pray and vote for; and are thus made more effectual instruments for the world's conversion. Anti-masonic lectures have often found a faithful earnest presentation of the sin of lodgery the prelude to a revival. The progress of Christ's kingdom must be measured—not by the number of those who are willing to lay down their garments in the way and shout hosanna, but by the numbers who are willing patiently and faithfully to help remove the stumbling blocks that make its progress impossible.

2. The manner of reading the law. "They gave the sense, and caused the people to understand the meaning." We have here a hint of the great value of expository preaching. The Bible is a savor of death unto death when its meanings are wrested and its doctrines overlaid with false interpretations. There is too much superficial study of the Scriptures. The question with us should be, do we make it a practical book? Do we order our lives by it, and to this end do we seek prayerfully to find its true sense for ourselves and for others? If ministers studied more those passages which relate to wine drinking and caused the people to understand their meaning, would there be so little real knowledge of the Bible doctrine on this subject? If they expounded such passages as Lev. 5: 4, 5 and Mark, 6: 21-28 in their relation to Masonic oaths would so many be deluded by the lodge argument that such oaths must be kept even after their iniquity is revealed? We need not only more pastors but a great army of consecrated laymen for this work of interpreting the Bible to the common apprehension; leading the masses to grasp the true spiritual meaning of its teachings and commands.

LIGHT FROM THE WORD.

What was commanded every seventh year? Deut. 31: 10–12. Is joy a Christian duty? Phil. 3: 1; 4: 4. Is joy the portion of the righteous? Ps. 97: 11. What of the wicked? Is. 50: 11.

From Peloubet's Notes.

The Time. The occasion was the celebration of the feast of the seventh month (chap. 7: 73). The beginning of every month was ushered in as a sacred festival; but this, the commencement of the seventh month, was kept with distinguished honor as "the feast of trumpets." Trumpets were blown everywhere, unless the feast fell on the Sabbath. It was the first day of the seventh ecclesiastical year, and the New Year's day of the civil year, on which account it was held as "a great day."

"They read in the book, in the law of God, distinctly." That is, so that every word could be distinctly heard. Compare Ezra 4: 18, where a cognate word is translated "plainly."—Pulpit Com. This was done either as a choral recitative in which 13 Levites accompanied Ezra, or by repeating to different portions of the great congregation the words which Ezra read. This is the first way in which they caused the people to understand.

Application. This work of the Levites was much the same as that of Sunday-school teachers to-day. (1) Read the Bible daily. (2) Use the Bible itself in the class, so that they shall be familiar with its use. (3) Cause them to learn the choicest passages by heart. Frequently do this in the class, thus clinching some great truth. (4) Take pains to understand yourself the meaning of the word, by careful reading; by prayer; by experience; by practice; by the use of helps; by teacher's meetings; by continued thought; by the enlightening Spirit. (5) Explain, teach, apply the word, so that every scholar shall have a clear understanding of its meaning and applications.

"This day is holy unto the Lord your God; mourn not." Mourning was unsuitable for a day of high festivity, the opening day of the civil year and of the Sabbatical month, itself a sabbath or day of rest, and one to be kept by blowing of trumpets.

"For all the people wept, when they heard the words of the law." They realized how different their lives had been from the lives commanded by God. They had failed in personal duty. They had failed in the public worship of God. They had failed as a nation. They saw also the punishment God had threatened for sin, and understood clearly why they had been made captives, and why the nation was so poor and weak when it might have been the central glory of the world.

"The Joy of the Lord is not worldly or sinful pleasure, but is joy like that of the Lord Jesus." (John 15: 11). (1) It is joy in the Lord, in his love and care. (2) It is the joy of perfect submission and obedience. (3) It is the joy of the free activity of a holy nature. (4) It is joy in doing good to others. (5) It is the joy of loving. (6) It is joy in the right use of all worldly things as God's gifts. Such joy is our strength because we are stronger in joy than in sorrow. Joy gives courage and hope and free activity, and health of body and spirit. It fits us for the service of God; it is a safeguard against the allurements of sinful pleasure, and against discouragement in trying times; it recommends our religion and our Master to the world, and attracts men to them; it honors God. This is especially true of joy that triumphs over sorrow and trials.

Dr. Lennox Browne, senior surgeon of the London Throat and Ear Hospital, has recently published a book in which he makes a strong scientific argument for total abstinence from intoxicating liquors and tobacco on the part of singers and speakers. He holds that both of these stimulents are injurious to the voice.

A bill is before the Connecticut Legislature forbidding the running of any but mail trains on the railroads of the State, on Sunday, excepting such as the Commissioners shall authorize as necessary, and the handling, loading, or unloading of freight except in cases of necessity or mercy.

OBITUARY.

OSBORN HAND, an early and earnest friend of the reform represented by the Cynosure, died at his home in Elkhorn, Wisconsin, about February 1st. The Independent of that place contains the following excellent notice of his life:

Born in New York State, his first home when married was in Otsego Co., of that State, where he tilled a barren farm for seven years. In the spring of 1842 he found a home in Walworth Co., where he has labored ever since with diligence and success. The three sons and three daughters living were all present at the funeral services, conducted by Rev. N. Barrett LaRoy S. a Congregational pastor in Ottumwa, Iowa, Miss Millie A., a teacher in Utah Territory, and the other four living in Elkhorn. A son, George, gave his life in the service of his country in the war of the great rebellion, and two infant children were buried in New York State.

When a young man, at a time when drinking habits were universal, he took the pledge and gave temperance lectures. In the very earliest days of the agitation he became an Abolitionist, many times voting the anti-slavery ticket almost alone. In opposition to secret societies and the use of tobacco he was always willing to bear testimony. He was a pioneer in thought, independent of others in reaching conclusions, rather fond of standing alone, ever courageous and loyal to his convictions, however unpopular they might be. In the very earliest days in the settlement of the county his house was regularly used for religious services and afterwards, in the school house, he was a leader in church and bible school work. The first Congregational church in Elkhorn was due more to him as chairman of the building committee than to any other person. With careful habits of economy in his own personal habits, he was generous to the poor and to worthy objects of benevolence. About a dozen church buildings near Elkhorn have been aided in their erection by his subscription. Nearly all the children were given good opportunities for study at Wheaton College, on whose board of trust he served for twelve years, and whose treasury he replenished with liberal benefactions. His ideals of uprightness and honor in trade were very high. His manner was direct and almost abrupt in dealing with that which he disapproved. He could not bear a false appearance and he was not slow in expressing his scorn for a sham. He loved books and literature and would have honored any profession to which he might have been called. He was a man of unusual intellectual vigor, fond of argument, and with considerable acuteness in metaphysical hair-splitting.

A year ago last November the golden wedding was celebrated with bringing all the children and grand-children, twenty-four in number, under the home roof. The 27th of last August the annual Hand picnic was held on Geneva Lake on the 75th anniversary of his birth-day, where he read a full and interesting sketch of his own life. His sufferings the last three weeks have been intense, but they were borne with his accustomed fortitude and with many expressions on his part of appreciation of the care he recieved. His Christian hope was ardent and clear to the very end. When asked whether his outlook was clear and his faith firm, with radiant face he promptly answered, "For this I have lived more than fifty years."

AMERICAN PLATFORM.

Viewing with deep concern the corrupt and unsettled condition of American politics, and witnessing with alarm the fearful prevalence of caste and clannishness by which our citizens are being arrayed in hostile bands, working secretly to compass political ends, a method directly and powerfully tending to increase corruption, to destroy mutual confidence, and hasten disruption and bloodshed; and having no hope of adequate remedy for these evils from existing parties, and believing the foundation of a party based upon the fundamental principles of the Declaration of American Independence, both inevitable and indispensable:

We, therefore, a portion of the American people, believing with our fathers that we have our rights and liberties, not from men or parties, but from God; believing in the Christian marriage, and not in Mormonism; believing in the religious democracy of the New Testament, and not in the despotism of the lodge; believing, also, with our Scotch and English ancestors, that civil government, though ordained in God, is "founded in nature, not in grace," and, therefore, that all have equal civil rights; while we abhor the idea of enforcing religion or controlling conscience by human laws and penalties as calculated to make hypocrites, not Christians, and savoring of the days of priestism, the fagot and the stake, we at the same time as firmly believe that atheism and priestcraft are twins and both alike foes to human liberty and welfare. We further most firmly believe that a government without God has none but lynch power, and is destitute of all legitimate authority to maintain civil order, to swear a witness, to try a criminal, to hang a murderer, to imprison a thief; and while we consider government without God as a mere usurpation, we regard all religions and worships invented by men, and so having no higher than human origin, as mere swindling impositions and cheats. We believe in peace and in national arbitration as a means of perpetuating it; yet we as profoundly believe that the bravery and blood of our soldiers have bought us the peace which we enjoy, and we honor the memories of the dead and will be just to the claims of the living; and we take up and prolong the strain raised by the women of this country: "For God, and home, and native land," and trust that this beautiful and patriotic motto will soon be not only echoed by their voices, but sustained by their votes.

We, therefore, solemnly adopt and present the following, as containing a brief synopsis of the principles of our government, by which we intend to be governed in casting our votes. We hold:

1. That ours is a Christian and not a heathen nation, and that the God of the Christian Scriptures is the author of civil government.
2. That the Bible should be associated with books of science and literature in all our educational institutions.
3. That God requires, and man needs a Sabbath.
4. We demand the prohibition of the importation, manufacture, and sale of intoxicating drinks.
5. We hold that the charters of all secret lodges granted by our Federal and State Legislatures should be withdrawn, and their oaths prohibited by law.
6. We are opposed to putting prison labor or depreciated contract labor from foreign countries in competition with free labor to benefit manufacturers, corporations or speculators.
7. We are in favor of a revision and enforcement of the laws concerning patents and inventions; for the prevention and punishment of frauds either upon inventors or the general public.
8. We hold to and will vote for woman suffrage.
9. That the civil equality secured to all American citizens by Articles 13, 14 and 15 of our amended National Constitution should be preserved inviolate, and the same equality should be extended to Indians and Chinamen.
10. That international differences should be settled by arbitration.
11. That land and other monopolies should be discouraged.
12. That the general government should furnish the people with an ample and sound currency.
13. That it should be the settled policy of the government to reduce tariffs and taxes as rapidly as the necessities of revenue and vested business interests will allow.
14. That polygamy should be immediately suppressed by law, and that the Republican party is censurable for the long neglect of its duty in respect to this evil.
15. And, finally, we demand for the American people the abolition of electoral colleges, and a direct vote for President and Vice President of the United States.

J. BLANCHARD. HENRY L. KELLOGG.

CHICAGO, THURSDAY, FEBRUARY 25 1886.

There are three obstacles in the popular mind to the overthrow of the lodge-worships: iguoraucc, indifferenee, and malice born of self-interest. The ignorance must be enlightened; the indifferenee aroused; and the malice overcome. This can be effected only by weapons "mighty through God."

OFFICE SEEKERS as a class are the most unhappy of men. One who came to Washiugton to get office spent all his money waiting on men who promised him before they were elected, and he is now shoveling dirt at a dollar a day to get money to get home. Another inquired of a clerk the other day if he knew of any farmers around Washington who wanted help!

It is to be hoped that the reputed vices of Washington City, especially of members of Congress, are exaggerated. Insinuations have lately crept into papers that there are 600 improper women in the department clerkships. But these stories may be started by men who delight to throw ink over masses, to hide their own blackness. But we know that Masonic morality yields no motive to godliness, or protection from uncleanness. Mormonism is Masonry.

INTERESTING TO DEMOCRATS AND REPUBLICANS. —Mr. Stilson Hutchins established the Washington Post (Democratic). He is now said to own the buiding where the Post, Republican, and Critic (Mugwump) are printed, the chief relianee for gain being the public printing. Mr. Hutchins is safe. Under a Democratic administration he reaches the treasury through the Post. When the other party is in, he gets money through the Republican; and in case of a dead lock, the Critic helps him. This fact of the ownership of the party papers in Washington ought to open the eyes of American voters to the emptiness of present party professions. Rebels and Unionists did not, and liquor men and anti-liquor men do not fuse in that way.

It is commonly reported that the pastor of a very large colored Methodist church in a Southern city, was known by his people to keep a concubine besides his wife. An educated and apparently pious pastor, several hundred miles away in the cars, was asked, "Are these reports true of brother R——?" "Very likely," he replied; "I belong to the same denomination, and his repute is that he has an angel's tongue and a devil's heart." "Then," he was asked, "why don't your bishops expel him?" "He is a dangerous man, stout and robust. This sort of reputation has followed him; and he has cut up and killed one or two men in quarrels about it." "Then why do you continue in such a church?" "Our church, like those which Paul founded, is in a transition state from the morals and heathenism which they practiced while in slavery. But we are gaining. There are one or two such preachers in our conference, but they are growing infamous, and we are after them with a sharp stick!"

MAY SINNERS VOTE OR ONLY SAINTS?—The old Scotch divines said "civil government is founded in nature, not in grace." They therefore held that natural men might vote and hold office. But it does not follow that God must be ruled out of politics to accommodate unbelievers. For then Christians must cease to be "the light of the world" and its salt. "But you can't elect a President by religious votes." True, but God must be recognized, or you have got no government. For "There is no power [civil power] but of God." "And the powers that be are ordained of God." And American politics, that is, politics as taught by Christ, originally, everywhere, North and South, acknowledged God, and appealed to him in laying the foundations of our free government. And if we give up God, we give up government; and worldly men, governed wholly by worldly motives want government to protect their rights of person and property. There are two ways of getting rid of God in government, viz., to ignore him, or to worship false gods. David says, "If we have forgotten the name of our God, or stretched out our hands to a strange god, shall not God search this out?" David did not, but Solomon did: and one built, and the other destroyed the realm. Omitting God from political platforms is "forgetting" him; and admitting Masonic and Chinese oaths is "strange" worship. Both mean national ruin. When Solomon died society fell to pieces. This matter was settled at Syracuse where the American party was named.

EDITORIAL CORRESPONDENCE.

IN THE WHITE HOUSE.

WASHINGTON, D. C., Feb. 13, 1886.

This first palace of the masses is 170 by 86 feet, built of sandstone, and painted white. Whoever will goes in without knocking or ringing from 10 A. M. to 3 P. M. It was projected (I think) by Washington though he did not live in it. You open the front door into an aute-room, turn to the left, and pass into the great East Room which is 80 by 40 and 22 feet high, walled with vast mirrors and green tropical winter plants. Visitors, gentlemen with ladies, from everywhere are sitting in niches, chatting and feeling quite at home in this people's mansion. I have been in Washington three times, stopping weeks in 1868 and six months in 1884, and am now here over a week; yet yesterday was the first time I ever set foot in the White House. I weut there yesterday (Friday) noon, Feb. 12th, to see

MISS ROSE CLEVELAND.

I asked for an usher in the ante-room, and one said: "What do you want?"

"To see Miss Cleveland," I replied.

"I doubt if she receives you at this time," he rejoined.

"You can easily test it," I answered, "by handing her this card."

Miss Cleveland had aided on the previous evening at the President's reception of the Judiciary, where she was conducted to the table by the Chief Justice of the Supreme Court, and during the evening approaching was to aid in receiving the Diplomatic Corps. Of course she had not much time to give to strangers. The usher, however, gave her my card, and came back gracious and agreeable; showed me where to leave my hat, waterproof, and umbrella, and led me into the "Red Room," which is the family parlor, 30 by 40 feet; gave me a chair; lit a match and ignited a neat mass of combustibles in the grate, which at once blazed up into an agreeable flame; then said, "Miss Cleveland will be in in a few minutes," and left. On the walls stand full length pictures of Lafayette, J. Q. Adams, and Martin Van Buren. I had glanced at these, when Miss Cleveland entered, dressed in red, like the room; greeted me by name and invited me to a seat.

THIS MISS CLEVELAND

is a slight young woman, neither plain nor pretty; with a modest, Puritan face and penetrating blue eyes; who, two centuries and more ago, might have passed for one of the daughters of Oliver Cromwell. She is the daughter of a Presbyterian clergyman, and sister of Grover Cleveland, President of the United States. Such is the young woman whom the "Tide in the affairs of men" has thrown up from the sea of humanity, to the apex of society in this metropolis of the American people: and thus far she has done her work becomingly and well. True, the Judiciary reception, to whose banquet the Chief Justiee led her night before last, had "seven wines" and twelve courses at the feast, which Mrs. Lucy Hayes would have vetoed. But Miss Cleveland is a younger sister of a firmer President than Rutherford B. Hayes, and so may be excused for not ruling out the "seven wines" at a Democratic banquet.

I said, "Miss Cleveland, if I knew precisely the pressure upon your time, it might help me to condense my errand."

"I can give you ten minutes," she answered.

So I gave her a brief history of the American party, formed at Oberlin, and named at Syracuse. I told her that of the 150,000 votes for St. John reported in the Congressional Directory, about one-third were attributed to the American party, which we cast because we were prohibitionists, and had no candidate of our own; that thus in 1884 the American party gave seven times as many votes as were cast by the infant Republican party in 1840. That party grew rapidly to manhood, and so, we trust, shall we. I then gave her a copy of the Cynosure and called her attention to the heavily marked column, "THE AMERICAN PARTY," and said, "I bring these matters to you, because I know the record in life which you have made, and because, I trust, as Gov. St. John said of his wife, 'what gets into her hands, gets into my head,' so you will be so good as to put this column into your brother's, the President's, head." She smiled and nodded assent, and I thanked her for her courtesy and left; she remarking, "I shall doubtless see you again." So I have put our platform into the White House, and trust that it may prove good seed sown in good ground. The developments which President Cleveland is making warrant the expectation that he may possibly live to be the candidate, in 1888, of a reform party. Take the following act of his concerning another important, fundamental matter:

HON. FREDERICK DOUGLASS

received, yesterday, a note from President Cleveland statiug that "no cards were issued" for the diplomatic dinner last night; but that "the recorder of the city was one of the officials who were expected to be present with their ladies!" This from a Democratic President of the United States to a colored, or half colored man with a white wife! This is one of the most statesmanlike acts President Cleveland has ever performed. The Republicans everywhere, North and South, endeavored to make the colored voters believe that if a Democrat went into the White House, the negroes would be ground beneath the upper and lower millstone of society. This is President Cleveland's answer to it. It is not only statesmanship, but wisdom and philanthropy. Two distinct races kept separate, never did and never can live at peace in the same country. Rome tried it; and, though mistress of the world, she was unable to cope with her proscribed classes. Three years a single leader of her serfs in the little island of Sicily fought successfully her whole Pretorian army. But whatever history and philosophy may say, the hand which holds the key of the White House for the next four years, is a colored hand. And if Mr. Cleveland has the nerve to stand by this diplomatic act of social equality against the cry of "amalgamation!" "Miscegenation!" and the like, he will not be scared by the cry of "church and state," raised against a state recognition of God. There is a long road and a deep gulf between the godless politics of the Democratic and Republican platforms and the Romish doctrine of church and state. Indeed, atheism and state churchism are two extremes of error with no midland of truth between them. Christ, who is Christianity, would not act as a judge of estates even. He never attempted to coerce conscience though he forbade crime.

COLQUITT S LOCAL OPTION BILL.

From the evening Star, Washington, Feb. 18th, 1886:

In the Senate to-day Mr. Colquitt introduced a bill for the suppression of the manufacture and sale of intoxicating liquors in the District of Columbia. The bill is in accordance with the opinions recently expressed in an interview with Senator Colquitt published in the Star. It provides for an election to test the sense of the community, the District to be subdivided into twenty-two election districts, and if the result of such election shall be in favor of prohibition then the liquor traffic shall be suppressed under heavy penalties.

The bill proposes to divide the District into twenty-two election districts, and if at the proposed election a majority shall vote against the sale of liquors, the penalty for violation of the act shall be not less then $100 nor more than $500, or imprisonment from ninety days to one year. Physicians are permitted to give prescriptions under rigid restrictions.

The above sketch looks fair on the face of it. But the people of Washington have no vote any more than women; and they say (I have not yet seen it) that the bill is a blank cartridge; and is not intended to suppress fashionable drinking, or liquor in the Capitol. The Star reports that Colquitt said explicitly, that his bill would not strike Congressional liquor or fashionable drinking, but only "low groggeries," and the Star says the reported bill is "in accordance." Ingalls is chairman of the District Committee, and he is understood to be a complete, capable, temperance fraud.

I heard the Fitz John Porter debate in the House. Gen. Cutcheon, of Manistee, Michigan, spoke ably and earnestly against Porter. Curtin, of Pennsylvania, and Bragg, of Wisconsin, made hollow speeches which sounded to me as if they were paid, or expected to be, for their support of the bill. It is amazing how it hangs on year after year. The House, it is understood, is to pay it. The Senate may refuse, and the President may veto it, even if it pass the Senate.

Day before yesterday I attended an adjourned meeting of the Washington Presbytery. The leading part was taken by Knight Templar Byron Sunderland, a long, useless debate in which no two agreed and nothing was done. It was a melancholy sight.

I have received much kindness from Prof. and Mrs. Bailey, for which I am grateful to God and to them. There is now no prayer or other meeting about our building, or in the city against the lodge. While here, Mr. O. C. Bailey once spoke against Masoury in the Central Mission and a great fuss was made about it. Prof. Bailey's time and strength are necessarily largely given to his clerkship, without the salary for which the American must suffer. He and Mrs. Bailey labor incessautly and effectively, and make a good paper. I have done some little to extend its influence, and hope to do more. If Prof. Bailey succeeds in placing the American on a firm footing he will do a great work. Mr. Hinman works steadily, ably and well.

OUR REFORM IN THE SOUTH.

Bro. Countee's remarkable letter on the 5th page, which no one should omit reading, reiterates in a different way the urgent appeals of Prof. Woodsmall several months ago, that the time for the National Christian Association to push into the South is NOW. The Congregational churchs, depending upon the American Missionary Association, may be considered as on the whole outside the lodge and beyond its control though not beyond its influence. They form a grand foundation for further work. Naturally the 800,000 Baptists would be next gained to Christ wholly. They are like the Congregational churches in their independence, and already have begun to respond nobly to the proclamation of the truth. The Primitive Baptists are radically anti-lodge. Several years ago a strong association of twenty-five churches in and about Mobile, some with hundreds of members took the same ground. Bro. Countee tells us of grand things beginning in Tennessee. Prof. Woodsmall is holding institutes all through his district and instruets the pastors always on this vital question. If his work could be supplemented with a half dozen consecrated speakers who should go through the South in the name of Christ, we should in a few months find hundreds of churches like that at Ripley, Tennessee, or those about Bro. Tapley at Columbus, Mississippi; and the whole Baptist colored population might be put on the same footing with the A. M. A. churches.

The appeals from the South have been too frequent and too reasonable, in our judgment, for the N. C. A. to neglect them without a grievous failure in its duty to Christ and his kingdom. Nor can we imagine any excuse for inaction which will not vanish before an energetic and prayerful determination to save the colored Baptist churches for Christ. We speak of the Baptist churches particularly because we believe they can be most readily brought over the line of ungodly affiliation with the world in the secret societies. No less effort should be made among other denominations; but if the Baptists are brought alongside the A. M. A. churches on this question, the others will almost come of themselves.

Every week of delay, moreover, is hardening the members of the orders against the truth and increasing their ranks from the Sabbath-schools, increasing the difficulty, the expense and the danger that must at length be met. This we cannot afford to do. If any one is unconvinced of this let him look at Memphis, where a Baptist pastor popular and esteemed, has within a year twice suffered attempted assassination and abuse without measure, until he is driven almost to an extremity. See other pastors in the same city and in the same denomination denouncing him in their pulpits and in their paper, and vilifying also the venerable messenger who was recently among them from this office. The case of Memphis will soon be the case of the South. God forbid that by any neglect of ours, brethren of the reform, the trials of our friends are repeated in other cities.

NEW LESSONS FROM THE CHICAGO LABOR LODGES.

The street-car strike and riot last July revealed the determination of secret labor unions in maintaining their oaths to one another. That trouble which was only suppressed at length by the resolution and energy of the police under Captain Bonfield, grew out of a lodge oath, which ignorant and prejudieed men felt bound to maintain, and their blind following of irresponsible leaders led them into risks which they would not have taken either for their religion or for their homes. Another strike of smaller proportions but equal desperation took place a few weeks ago in a box factory, where machinery was introduced to do part of the work. As in the days of Peel and Hargreaves, when the early cotton machinery of England was broken up, this strike against machinery has resulted in nothing but vexation and poverty to the strikers, and great expense to the city for police guards. It is true that the introduction of machinery has for the time being been a personal loss to a few workmen; but the immense benefit to the whole people, in which the laboring classes receive the greater share, overbears every other consideration. The Knights of Labor and other lodges are beginning to see the folly of striking against inventive genius and want to settle.

Another lodge contest of more importanee began last week in the great McCormick reaper works. Most of the 1,400 employes belonged to various unions and were joined in a confederation by the Knights of Labor. They sent to Mr. C. H. McCormick, Jr., who has succeeded to the immense business of his father, with a demand for higher wages and the discharge of five men, against whom they made no charge but that they would not swear the lodge oath. The committee said to Mr. McCormick, "We know that laboring men elsewhere get only $1.25, but we believe we have got you in a tight place." They asked $1.50 per day for the ordinary laborer, and a proportionate advance for skilled workmen. The spirit of this demand has a dash of the highwayman in it, but young McComick replied that he was anxious to remove all possible and reasonable grounds for discontent; and, although he would be placed at a great disadvantage with other manufacturers, because paying higher wages than any establishment of the kind in the country, yet he would order the advance. But, said he, in employing men in the works, "we will not proscribe any man from work by reason of his nationality, color, religion, or politics, whether he be union or non-union."

The moral bravery of such a speech should have shamed the men out of their unjust and wicked demand; but instead, at a meeting that night they were persuaded by outside lodge manipulators to renew their demand, but before they could do so, next morning Mr. McCormick, hearing of their meeting, ordered the works closed; and 1,400 men went out, many of them alas! to the saloons, and the great business stopped rather than have an injustice done to five men.

We rejoice in this exhibition of moral courage, and so also should the workmen affected by it. They are reported to be coming to their reason, and regret their following of outside advisers. They will probably soon ask to return to work. Mr. McCormick is part owner of the Interior and approved of the course of editor Gray in opening a discussion of the lodge by Pres. J. Blanchard three years ago. His father, then alive, also approved. Neither belonged and both strongly disproved the secret orders, especially for their evil opposition to Christianity.

—Bro. Hawley, whose labors in Iowa have been very happily successful during the past five or six months, has returned home to Wheaton. We have not learned of his future movements.

—The senior editor of the Cynosure has often been derided by unfaithful United Brethren for his earnest warning to that church lest it should permit the lodge to crawl in like a serpent about its altars. But a good pastor of that church in Kansas now that the trouble has come gives this testimony: "We think President Blanchard is of more service than two-fifths of her bishops are."

—The United Brethren who stand by the faith (not the money-bags and popularity) are proposing a series of conventions to be held in different conferences and close with a general convention July 20th next. Revs. Halleck Floyd of Dublin, Indiana, William Dillon, Dayton, Ohio, and R. Loggan, Clifton, Kansas, will attend these conventions, and prevent their church from falling into the arms of the lodge Moloch.

—The Christian Conservator, of Dayton, Ohio, the able and faithful advocate of the true United Brethren church has been changed from a semi-monthly to a weekly. This evidence of the success of Bro. Dillon's editorial work we hail with delight. May the Lord add yet more to the prosperity of this effort to maintain the honor of Christ against the wily attacks of the lodge.

—Bro. H. H. Hinman, our special Washington correspondent, has been visiting Chambersburg, Pennsylvania, aud preached in the Independent United Brethren church on King street. The Daily Herald of the city noticed his sermon next day, Feb. 15 in the following eulogistic terms: "One of the finest discourses that has been listened to in this city for a long time was delivered by the Rev. H. H. Hinman, of Washington, D. C., in the King street United Brethren church last evening. The gentleman took for his text "Seek First the Kingdom of God and His Righteousness." The general tenor of the sermon was universal peace, his great object being to have the difficultics of nations settled by arbitration instead of war, which was handled in an exceedingly able and logical manner. Such an effect did the minister's words have that the large audience was held spell-bound by his earnest eloquence, and went away grieved that the discourse was not of greater length."

—Bro. William F. Davis of Mt. Washington, Chelsea, Mass., has devoted his life to the work of taking the Gospel to the neglected places of the earth. He began a few years ago a mission among the lumbermen of northeastern Michigan, and his labors have been signally blessed. He was assisted for a time by Rev. C. C. Foote of Detroit. Last summer he was preaching with H. L. Hastings in Boston Common, and his friends have paid a fine of over $80, put upon his labors for the salvation of men by the injustiee of Massachusetts eourts. He would himself have gone to prison before paying so unjust a fine. This brother called at the Cynosure office last week on his way to the lumber camps of Minnesota, where he hopes to spend a few weeks. At Chase, Michigan, he found the lodge question ready for discussion and devoted part of one discourse to the religion of secretism as opposed to Christ. The town was much moved, and on his return a few days later he was besought to stop aud give a lecture on the subject. His engagements would not allow, however, and he urges that a speaker be sent to the place.

MOODY AND SANKEY IN THE SOUTH.

Reports in the New York Independent of the meetings of these evangelists in Nashville and Memphis are interesting. The caste question troubles them greatly. In Nashville they held meetings with the students in Fiske University and Roger Williams University which are colored schools, but the black faces were not seen in the ordinary meetings. The Independent's Nashville report says:

"These evangelists have held here a three-days' meeting, beginning on the 2d, and closing on the 4th instant. They came at the joint invitation of most of the leading white churches (the colored not being asked to co operate) and the Young Men's Christian Association, which also is white. The welcome was very hearty, and the results sought have been well attained. Preparatory union meetings were held the week before, presided over and addressed by leading pastors of the city. Earnest prayer was offered for the blessing of God on the evangelists. Tickets of admission were issued, to be distributed among the churches uniting, according to membership. Some criticism fell upon this method of management, and Mr. Moody explained the reason for it in his first meeting—that of reaching more people. Some think that it was intended, on the part of the managers here, also to meet the color question, as no tickets were given to pastors of colored churches for use among their people."

From Memphis this is the word:

"The meetings held by Moody and Sankey the past three days in Memphis, have been greatly blessed and most satisfactory, both to the evangelists and to all the pastors of the city. The attendance was very large, many of the meetings overflowing to an adjoining church. The services were chiefly for Christians; but successful efforts were made to secure the attendance of others, with good results, and there are a number of conversions. A meeting was given Monday to the students of Lemoyne Institute, colored, where a precious work was already in progress; also a general meeting given to colored people on Sunday; and there was a great crowd, with an overflow. Mr. Moody is very hopeful for his Southern trip. He will carry the South."

The meetings in New Orleans seem to be of yet deeper interest. The Southwestern Presbyterian report says:

The meetings held by Messrs. Moody and Sankey, under the auspices and by the aid of many of the city pastors, have developed a remarkable religious interest. Perhaps never before in the history of the city has the whole community been so stirred and wrought upon by Gospel preaching. One can see and hear the evidence of the widespread interest upon every hand. In the street cars, the restaurants, barber shops, upon the streets and in the stores, the principal theme of conversation is the evangelists and their work. Day and night, from the beginning, the large Exposition Hall has been crowded until standing room could not be had, while hundreds have been turned away and sent to the overflow meetings in the Carondolet Street Methodist church.

Perhaps the inquiry-room interest rose to its full height on last Sabbath evening, [Feb. 14] after the sermon to men, when over two hundred men rose as by one impulse and made a resolve to live for Christ. This same afternoon, at the meeting for women, two hundred and twenty-six arose and asked the prayers of God's people.

Up to this writing there is no dimunition of interest. Last night (Monday) every seat in the immense hall was occupied. It was the second meeting for men, and fully two hundred and fifty went into the inquiry room. We cannot predict now what the full fruitage of this movement will be.

There is a general opinion among thoughtful people in Central Illinois that there ought to be a law to prevent one man buying up and owning as much land as does Samuel Scully, the rich Irish-Englishman, who owns a great share of Logan county, in this State, and leases it out on the grasping and merciless "Irish landlord" plan. This man is known in Logan county as "Lord" Scully. He lives in great style in England, and visits his vast Ameriean possessions once in a great while. He hires his lands to small farmer tenants at exhorbitant rates, and makes the tenants pay the taxes besides. All he does is to own the land and exact every drop of blood he can get out of his victims. Such a system of landlordism ought not to be possible either in Illinois or any other part of this country.—Journal.

THE HOME.

THE CHRISTIAN ARMOR.

Eph. 6: 11-18.

Oh, take the armor whole of God,
That ye may ably stand,
Amid the Devil's wiles and darts,
Which are on every hand.

Let truth around your loins be girt,
Your breastplate, righteousness,
Your feet well shod with Gospel peace,
Your shield be faithfulness.

Thus ably quench Apollyon's darts,
Fraught with the fires of hell!
Your Captain of Salvation leads;
In Him all shall be well.

Your helmet, let salvation be,
Your sword—the Word of God;
By this the Holy Spirit smites
Your foes upon the road.

So, "Praying always with all prayer,"
And "Watching thereunto,"
Your fight with victory shall be crowned;
Above there's heaven for you.

No foe shall fell you as you march,
To happy Canaan's land,
Where glories great shall be revealed,
To the "more than conquerors" band.

HOW ABEL THOMPSON PUT IT.

If Abel Thompson was anything at all, he was a positive man. What he knew, he knew; what he said, he stuck to. "No use talking," was one of his favorite phrases; "words are words only, but facts are facts. Give me the facts," said he, "and anybody may have the words for themselves."

And you wouldn't have wondered to hear Abel talk after this fashion, if you had heard his history. His father before him was a positive man, and as for his mother, "she was so 'set,'" as her country people said, "that you might as well try to move Shap Fell as to alter her opinion, when it was once formed."

Abel had been born and bred in the country, until he grew up to young man's estate; then he went into one of our large towns, and had some years' experience of factory-life. There he mixed with all sorts and conditions of men; and there, also, he become acquainted with all sorts and conditions of opinions. In the town in which Abel resided, there was a large meadow, which was town property, and was held for the recreation of the inhabitants generally. Here on Sabbath mornings hundreds of the men of the town would congregate, to while away the time until the public-houses opened, or the hard-worked women at home had the dinner ready. They would divide themselves into small and large groups, as opportunity offered, to listen lazily to any one who had anything to say on any subject whatever. Here a man was lecturing on infidel subjects. There, another holding forth on political ethics. Next to him a temperance lecturer, and a Roman Catholic and Protestant in noisy discussion of their respective faiths. Members of the town mission were there also, sometimes delivering brief addresses; at other times speaking to individual members of the crowd. After an hour or two the discussions would wax hot, fierce, and exceedingly personal, and the battle of sounds resemble the old-fashioned Bartholomew Fair at evening time.

From one group to another Abel Thompson would make his way, until he had contrived to ascertain the general ideas prevalent in the crowd. But he did this at the expense of losing all precise ideas whatever for the time being; so that whether Mr. Gladstone had made the best temperance speech ever heard, or Martin Luther had said, "The man who believed the Bible must be an idiot of the first water," became open problems, which Abel Thompson was quite unable to solve.

This lasted for a little while, and then Abel's positive ideas began to work and cause him to think for himself. One statement by a temperance orator, Abel found himself compelled to think over until his mind was made up on the subject. "Now, you working men," said the orator, "just listen to me. Beer's four cents a quart, isn't it; very well—now, how long do men have to work for fourpence? Different times, from (say) half an hour to an hour. Now, let us look at the fellow working hard for his fourpence—fair work for good money, as it ought to be. Well, he takes the fourpence he has worked for, and goes toward home, passes a public-house, goes in, calls for a pot, and puts down his fourpence for it. What has he bought for his hard-earned money? Bone, muscle, flesh, strength, cheerfulness? None of these; he has simply been fool enough to give his money for a quart of water absolutely spoiled for any useful purpose whatever? I say fool enough, but only in this one respect. He can judge a joint of meat, a coat or waistcoat, or boots or furniture, keenly or correctly, but when it comes to beer or spirits, habit and custom have so befogged him, that he complacently gives his earnings for less than nothing.

"I don't drink any more beer or spirits," said Abel, "until I find some one able to answer that," and thus his brain was always clear and ready for work or play.

Another thing that furnished Abel with material for thoughts, many and deep, were the infidel attacks upon the Scriptures, and to these Abel carefully applied his thinking powers. He had taken the precaution to purchase a Bible, and always had it ready on Sabbath mornings. He had also been constantly reading it at the day and Sabbath-school, and knew many portions of it well from early lessons there.

The first thing he noticed was the utterly unfair method of quoting the Scriptures adopted by the infidels, and next their unjust fashion of twisting them to serve their own purposes. "I'm positive of it," said Abel, after much listening, "either these men don't know the book they are talking about, or they are cheating with it, making it say what any plain, common-sense man can see it was never meant to say; and I'll tell him my opinion in the plainest words."

Accordingly, Abel waited and watched for the coming of one of the infidel lights from London, who would lecture in the meadow on a certain Sabbath morning, on the subject of "Life, Death, and Immortality."

Amid a dense crowd of closely packed workingmen, the light from London was raised upon a rather rickety washingstool that had been hastily borrowed, and commenced his lecture:

"Brethren," said he, "I'm a humble student, come from the greatest of all cities, to enlighten your dark minds on the mighty themes that are to occupy our free thoughts this morning, and I intend to devote the greater part of my lecture to the subject of Life; I may as well dispose of the two last subjects in a few words. As to Death—it's a disagreeable necessity, resulting from the conditions of our being; it is a law of our nature as much as sleep is; we cannot help ourselves, so we had better think of it as little as possible until it comes. As to Immortality—that is simply a poetic dream, which has been made hideous to many minds by the idea of judgment and punishment hereafter; some think they will sit on a damp cloud always, and sing 'Hallelujah.'

"I think I have said quite enough about Death and Immortality, as they are subjects of which no one knows anything, and so I will turn to the consideration of Life.

"That Life exists in many forms is clear—in two great divisions as far as we know, animal and vegetable; but modern science has shown that the two are nearly or altogether one. The same science has also shown that all Life commenced in the sea, and is subject to what we call 'Death.' How life began on the earth or in the sea, we do not know, but that it was self-originated is becoming clearer and clearer as science progresses. Life being thus self-originated there is no need to believe in any Creator, and if no Creator, then no responsibility. Still we ought to be moral, so that when we die, as Holyoake quotes in his 'Logic of Death,' at the end, we ought to die as 'one that wraps his mantle round him, and lies down to pleasant dreams.'"

There was some applause when the lecturer concluded, during which Abel elbowed his way to the front, and commenced—

"I say, mister, may a plain, common-sense country man ask a few questions after saying a few words?"

"Cert'n'ly, cert'n'ly," said the chairman; and Abel went on.

"I shall follow your own order. You said, Death resulted from the 'conditions;' it is a 'law' of our nature, did you not?"

"Of course, I did, replied the lecturer; "what then?"

"If there be no Creator," said Abel," I want to know who formed the conditions? who made the laws?"

"There is no 'who' in it," replied the lecturer; "I only meant by 'law,' a series of observed sequences that always occur under given condition."

"But who arranged the 'sequences,'" again asked Abel.

"I don't know," said the lecturer; "they happen, that's all."

"I'm thinking your 'happen' is but your foolish name for God Almighty," said Abel; "but let that go, as I want to come to your next point, 'Immortality;' are you going to tell us there's no such thing?"

"Certainly not," said the lecturer; "I'm not such a fool as to attempt to prove a negative!"

"Then don't tempt others to play the fool with it until you are certain about it yourself," said Abel; and so I come to 'Life;' and here I will tell you a little story. When I was a lad at home my father used to keep fowls, and my sister had to take the eggs to market and sell them. One day he was sitting on a barrow with his hat on the back of his head, and he took up one of the eggs in his left-hand thumb and finger, and he asked us this question:

"'Which was first the hen or the egg?' Now, Mr. Lecturer, I pass my father's question on to you. 'Which was first, the hen or the egg?'"

"Why, of course, the egg must have been first," said the lecturer; "the principle of evolution makes that quite clear."

"Then where did the egg come from?" returned Abel.

"Have it your own way then," said the lecturer, "and say the 'hen' was first.',

"I have no way about it," said Abel; "but now I ask you where the 'hen' came from?"

"Time's up," said the chairman; "our friend from London will lecture this evening in our hall, on 'Marriage.'"

"That's not fair! that's sneaking out of it in a cowardly fashion that I'm not the man to put up with," replied Abel, excitedly, "and I appeal to my fellow-workmen if it's fair?"

"No! no!" roared the crowd, "fight it out, fight it out fairly."

But the lecturer and the chairman had departed, and were hidden in the surging crowd.

So Abel continued—"Fellow-workmen, my own common sense tells me not to trust such teaching. All life must come from life, and it is far easier to believe that God made the hen at first, than to believe in the egg with life in it, happening by chance at some remote period of time. Suppose you found an egg now, and you said, 'This egg happened, no hen laid it,' we should think you a fit and proper candidate for a lunatic asylum. And why should it not happen now as well as long ago? Or if you said 'the hen happened,' there was no egg in the case, we should think the same way. But when we say that God Almighty formed the hen at first we produce a cause sufficient for the effect, and this, common sense teaches us, is the only right way of thinking. But I musn't say any more, or your dinners will be cold, and the ladies at home will be waiting."

So Abel descended from the rickety stool and went home to his dinner, whistling softly, as if rather pleased with himself that morning.

It comes to this:—we must either believe in "accident," "happening," "chance," which are but blind ways of feeling after God; or we must believe in an Almighty, loving, revealed Father in heaven.—Sel.

LOVING WORDS.

Loving words will cost but little,
Journeying up the hill of life;
But they make the weak and weary
Stonger, braver for the strife.
Do you count them only trifles?
What to earth are sun and rain?
Never was a kind word wasted,
Never one was said in vain.

When the cares of life are many,
And its burdens heavy grow
For the ones who walk beside you,
If you love them tell them so.
What you count of little value
Has an almost magic power,
And beneath their cheering sunshine
Hearts will blossom like a flower.

So, as up life's hill we journey,
Let us scatter all the way,
Kindly words, to be as sunshine
In the dark and cloudy day.
Grudge no loving word my brother,
As along through life you go,
To the ones who journey with you,
If you love them, tell them so.

EMMA'S HAPPY THOUGHTS.

"If there were any way in which I could earn some money!" said Emma, looking very wistfully at her cousin Kate, who was giving the last touches to a beautiful plaque. The plaque had been ordered by a lady of taste; for Kate's dainty and delicate work was known favorably all over the village, and had even been sold at the Decorative Art Rooms in New York. As soon as Kate should send it home, she would receive ten dollars.

Ten dollars in shining gold, or perhaps in crisp, rustling notes. If it came from Mrs. Emory, it would be fresh clean money, fit for a lady's purse. And Kate, having her own little income did not need to ask papa for funds whenever she wished to help some poor person, or subscribe to some charity, or, as to-day, send fire and food to the sick woman whose case had been presented in the prayer-meeting the night before. Emma wanted to help that woman. One of her little girls—a blue-eyed, sweet-faced, wee thing—was in the infant class, where Emma saw her every Sunday. What could Emma do?

"I haven't a single talent," she said, dolefully. "I can not play, I do not paint, I don't know how to embroider. The only accomplishments I have are the plain, every-day ones. They don't count in the way yonrs and Mattie's do, Kate. Why, Mattie receives checks every month for her stories, but I couldn't write a story if I sat with my pen in my hand a year."

"I am snre, Emma," said Mrs. Maclean, who had been sitting silent during the progress of her daughter's remarks, "I am sure yon have on of the best accomplishments in the world; you know how to make home happy; and yon are so nseful in catching up all the dropped stiches and loose threads that we could not do without you. Your biscuits, your bread—all your cooking is just perfect; and then you sew so beautifully—" "You partial little mother!" said Emma, bestowing a kiss on the dear lips; "yon are a darling; you know the praise I covet. Bnt I have an errand, and must hasten out."

Emma was much interested in Home Missions,and she had been among her friends soliciting books and papers to send to a little school in Dakota—a school in great need of a library. She was going to call on one or two ladies who had promised to give her books, when it occurred to her to make her morning round wider, and visit Mrs. Bowers, whose little Susy was so sweet. . . "Though I have no money, I may be able to cheer her up a little, and perhaps make her room more comfortable. I can shake a pillow, and arrange an apartment, and stir up grnel, at least," she thought contemptnosly, for Emma did not value her gifts as others did.

Jnst as she left her chamber, her eye fell on a little magazine for children, bright with pictures, stories and verses. . . "I'll take that with me for Susy," she resolved. "It will amuse her, and her brother may read the stories aloud, and thns be kept ont of the street."

Idly turning its leaves, Emma came npon a page which had as an illustration a street scene in China. It represented a woman with a little basket containing, needles, thread and other sewing tools. The cut was explained by a letter from a missionary lady, who said that in Chinese cities, the mending woman, plying her trade in the street, was a familiar object. She would repair a rent while a person waited, or, taking her stand by some shop door, wonld patiently stitch for hours,doing whatever she attempted with care and pains.

I am not about to tell you of Emma's call on Mrs. Bowers, though it brightened and sweetened the day for the poor sufferer. Some girls are like snnbeams. Wherever they go they carry light and cheer. Whatever they tonch they beautify. They scatter blessings without appearing to try very hard, just becanse they are snnbeams. They have heard the dear Master saying, "Let yonr light shine," and they are obeying his voice.

After Emma left Mrs. Bowers's attic she went to a very different home. It stood on a stately street, and was an ample mansion, with flowers and ferneries in the windows, and charming pictnres on the walls. Emma was sent for to come to Mrs. Archer's own room, and there she fonnd her qnite annoyed at an accident that had befallen a lace flounce. . . "I fear it is rnined," she said; "and I am so very sorry, for it was one of my wedding presents." . . . "I think it can be mended, dear Mrs. Archer," said Emma, scanning it critically. "Yes, I see that it can; but it will require an expert to do it." . . . "Where can I find any one to whom I shall dare to trnst snch lace as this?" said Mrs. Archer. "I do not want to send it ont of the honse. I wonld willingly pay to have it put in order again, for yon know I am not skillful with the needle myself."

A struggle went on in Emma's mind. Shonld she offer—shonld she not? She thought of the Chinese mending woman, and the money she longed for that she might aid the Lord's work with something of her very own. She threw her false pride to the winds, and spoke bravely: "Mrs. Archer, I want to earn some money, and, if you will allow me, I will restore yonr flounce to its first state. I will mend it so perfectly that nobody shall discover that it has been torn." . . . Yon precious child!" said Mrs. Archer. "I'll be only too glad to engage you. I wish I dared ask yon to do all my fine mending. It wonld be such a relief!"

Emma's happy thought proved a good beginning. Her father, struggling to support a growing family, and educate his boys and girls well, was obliged to practice the strictest economy. It proved a real assistance to him, when his eldest daughter found that she could exercise her womanly art of mending, one of the most delicate and lady-like arts in the world, to such good pnrpose that she was able to buy her own clothing, and to give librally to the cause she loved.

Where there is a will there is also a way. Where there is a strong desire, and a real fitness, defeat seldom comes. The talent which makes no special show, but which keeps the home wheels moving without friction, saves John from fretting over a ripped glove or a missing shirt button, prevents Louise from tripping on a loose tuck, and lightens a mothers's burdens, is a beautiful talent for any girl to have. And then, girls, in our giving to the Lord; shall we give of what costs ns nothing, or shall it be sweet to us to make an offering to the Lord of that into which our own thought and service have gone? What is there that yon and I may do for Jesus?—Sunday-school Times.

TEMPERANCE.

THE RESPONSIBILITY OF THE CHRISTIAN CHURCH FOR THE LIQUOR TRAFFIC.

BY W. JENNINGS DEMOREST.

The delusive apathy which exists in regard to the crime of rum-selling is awful to contemplate. The people have been so long accustomed to a subserviency to the rum interest that this interest has now possession of almost the entire government. The judicial and selfish blinduess that pervades the masses on this subject is such that it will require a moral earthquake to awaken them to a sense of their danger, and compel an active effort to crush this monster evil—an evil of such huge proportions that it threatens to engulf us in a maelstrom of crime and debauchery.

But the most marvelous aspect of this great question is the stupidity and seemingly willful blinduess of a large proportion of the Christian church, especially when the responsibility for this awful scourge is presented in the light of God's word, "Am I my brother's keeper?"

In the present attitude of some Christians, this argument and appeal acts like water on a duck's back. The conscience is all rock, aud flinty rock at that, when applied to personal responsibility for the crime of rum-selling. It would seem that all moral sense on this vital question was benumbed and paralyzed, else how soon would this hideons traffic be blotted ont of existence. How easily the church, with its millions of voters, could crush this monster vice and jnst as soon as she chose to act. Nothing stands in her way bnt her stupid, wicked apathy, aud in some cases her actual sympathy, connivance, and participation in the crime, bnt we actually hold up the church as a screen for onr duplicity. The ministers of the church are especially responsible for the active conscience of the people on all moral questions. They, of all others, reflect, energize, and control the sentiments of the community, and they ought to see and realize what God and humanity requires at their hands on this most momentons question. The church shonld lead on moral questions, not be led. The awful load of guilty responsibility that rests on the members and ministers of the Christian church for the crime, misery, and wretchedness that flows from rum-selling is appalling. What a grand revival would there be of Christian sentiment could they be awakened to see how easily the vile traffic could be annihilated by them; how easily it conld be removed from onr land if the chnrch would but offer active aud enthusiastic co-operation with the people in a political crnsade against this crime of rum-selling. And it is only this political action for the prohibition of the liquor traffic that the rum-seller dreads. To him moral snasion, license laws, Gospel temperance, or any other temporizing with the question of rum-selling at this stage of the discussion is so much sentimental nonsense. Let him have relief from the political action of the people and he cares little or nothing about your teaching, your preaching, or your prayers, for he knows mnch better than the church are willing to believe that "faith is the substance of things hoped for, the evidence of things not seen," and if the church had this faith it would act. That is, act in the most efficient way to accomplish the purpose desired, and that this not being done, is the best evidence to the rum-seller that the chnrch has not this necessary faith, and therefore the rnm-seller's secnrity.

No visionary attempt to meet the evils of intemperance will accomplish the purpose. We must have practical measures that strike at the root of the difficulty; and however ingenious the sophistry of moderate drinkers, rum-sellers, and their sympathizers, the final conclusiou must be that nothing short of a prohibitory law and (an equally important matter) a party to enforce the law will prove effectual to annihilate the traffic, and the sooner we reach this conclusion the sooner will our country be relieved from this infamous curse.

The church and its members ought to learn the truthful and important lesson that our not doing is set down among our worst crimes. Good intentions will not save us. Christ said, if you had faith yon could remove mountains. He evidently meant mountains of difficulty. But you must have faith, "A faith that laughs at impossibilities and cries 'it shall be done.'" Every other moral and religious virtue is dependent on this faith.

What a mountain of crime aud wretchedness, what an incubus on onr world is this liquor traffic, and yet how easily could it be removed if we had the faith that means strong, active conviction. Armed with this faith all difficulties in the way of abolishing the liquor traffic wonld vanish in thin air. It is only necessary that we determine to nse the most effective means that God has put in our hands, and the work is done. Let each individual Christian use that powerful weapon, the vote for political prohibition, and it will prove the effective and mighty sledge hammer to demolish the citadel of the rum interest. Let us take the ballot battle-axe, political Prohibition, and demolish this hydra-headed monster before it is too late. Especially demolish this legal sanctiouing delusiou, the license humbug, which is the strongest fortification of the rum power. An active faith demands Prohibition. This is the only way and meaus to do it, and until it is done the crime of rum-selliug will lie at our door.

The sickle, the scythe, aud the cradle were good and efficient methods for gathering the harvest some years since, but we have wonderful improvements in machinery in these later days. We now have mowing and reaping machines that laugh at the immense fields that are ready for the harvest. How impressive and beautiful the sight of such a harvest as now lies spread out before ns in the development of the Prohibition movement; how inviting, and what a promise of magnificent results we have in the work. Let us use the new and effective machine of Prohibition. The North, the South, the East and the West are all clamorous for Christian, patriotic combinatiou and co-operation. Political Prohibition is onr new reaper aud mower; to do yeoman service in secnring this splendid harvest for God aud humanity let ns echo the watchword and with this reaper, political Prohibition, we shall accomplish results that will astonish ourselves. Our enemy is a formidable monster that threatens ns with a stnpendous array of numbers, combination, power and treachery, bnt with right, jnstice, and God on onr side we will take the little sling and the pebble from the brook, the ballot, and hit the giant between the eyes, and such a howl from the monster will be heard as will shake and startle the earth. The two-edged sword, Party Prohibition, will finish the work, and the death struggle of this fiendish enemy of onr race will soon be over. Our glorious country will then be free, and a glad hallelujah of praise and thanksgiving will go up for our deliverance from this awful sconrge that had well-nigh engulfed our nation in a vortex of crime and wretchedness.

And when the monster lies low in the dust the grand deliverance will echo our Christian character more effectively than all the missionary efforts we have ever put forth, and our moral and religious redemption and regeneration will carry more conviction to the world aud do more to stimulate and ennoble onr higher aspirations than any and all other achievements recorded in history, placing our glorious country on the high pinnacle of national progress, as the beacon-light of Christian civilization.—From Demorest's Monthly for March.

The Woman's Christian Temperance Union of the United States has prepared a petition to be presented to the governments of the earth beseeching them "to strip away the safegnards and sanctions of the law from the drink traffic and the opium trade." This petition is to be signed by women only, and duplicates of it will be presented to Mrs. Leavitt, who is now making a journey rouud the world for the purpose of organizing the World's Woman's Christian Temperance Union. She will have it translated into the language of every conntry visited by her, and the names will be duplicated and the entire list attached to each petition, so that each goverument will be asked not only by the women of its own country, but those of all other civilized countries, to abolish the liquor and opium traffic.

THE CHURCHES.

—Rev. Milton Wright, Pacific bishop of the United Brethren church, is revisiting Ohio. The Telescope of Dayton says that he spoke in the Summit Street church of that city Feb. 14, preaching a grand sermon from Luke I: 32, "He shall be great, and shall be called the Son of the Highest." Among those who joined the church was a son of the bishop.

—Rev. C. W. Hiatt, of the High Street church, Columbus, Ohio, which has lately been blessed with a gracious revival, is spending a few days in needed rest at his father's home in Wheaton, Ill.

—At Cameron, W. Va., five miles from Wheeling, a revival began a week ago that has resulted in the conversion of over two hundred persons. The revivalist is a woman. The wealthiest men in the town have professed conversion, and have bought out nearly every liquor-place in the town, emptying the contents into the street.

—The Herald and Presbyter has the good news that there is a decided revival of spirituality in the Cincinnati churches, that the moral atmosphere of the city is much improved, that the Citizen's Committee, and the Law and Order League are receiving a strong support, and that the Y. M. C. A. noon-day prayer-meetings are attracting more than usual attention.

—The interest in the revival services in the Walnut Street Baptist church, of Louisville, Ky., continues unabated. The church is crowded at every meeting. It is said that of the one hundred and thirty-seven persons confessing conversion during the revival conducted by the Rev. Sam Jones, at Chattanooga, Tenn., all but four have united with the churches of the city.

—There is a revival in Brockton, Mass., in which four congregations are interested—two Congregational, Baptist and Methodist. These have united in engaging the services of two well-known evangelists, Messrs. Sandford and Towner, and two congregations, a Congregational and Baptist, have engaged the services of the Rev. Dr. Hamner, of Baltimore, and a band of jubilee singers. The churches are filled to overflowing.

—Nellie Gould, says the New York Sun, the only daughter of Jay Gould, joined the West Presbyterian Church in New York recently. Mr. Gould was present at the service.

—The North India Conference, which includes most of the native work of the Methodist Missionary Society in India, reports 5,278 communicants, including probationers, with 1,016 baptisms during the year, besides 248 at the Ajudia Mela from all parts of India. Of the converts 27 were Mohammedans, and 744 Hindus. The native Christian community numbers 8,045.

—Rev. Philip Phelps, D. D., of Holland, Michigan, has accepted a call from the Reformed churches of North Blenheim and Breakabeen, in Schoharie county, New York, and begins his pastorate immediately.

—Beginning with the week of prayer the several churches of Cedar Falls, Iowa, united in a union meeting for two weeks under the charge of Bro. A. J. Bell, the evangelist of Ravenswood, Ill. As a result the number of conversions is large, eleven teachers among them. The Presbyterian church was increased by 37 additions and the three other churches probably received as many each.

—Rev. Dr. Loomis, in a recent letter from Japan, corrects a certain misstatement as follows: He says: "It has been published in various religious and other papers that of the Christians of Japan only one-fourth were females. I have compared the most recent statistics, in which the sexes are divided, and the figures are as follows: Male, 3,136; female, 2,335. It is also observed that as the membership increases the proportion becomes more and more equal."

—Mr. C. T. Studd, the Cambridge University athlete, converted during Mr. Moody's visit, on going as a missionary to China offered Mr. Hudson Taylor, the founder of the China Inland Mission, the whole of his large fortune of £100,000. Mr. Taylor refused it, but Mr. Studd insisted, and put it in the hands of trustees, who pay the interest to the mission of which he is now one of the self-denying missionaries.

—Iceland was lately visited by a German statistician. We clip from his interesting report the following data: The Icelanders are all Lutherans. Some French missionaries tried very hard to make converts, but without any result. There are, 1 Roman Catholic, 1 Methodist, 4 Unitarians and 3 Mormons to be found among a population of 72,445 souls (Census of 1880). The island is divided into 20 deaneries, with 141 pastorates. The head of the clergy is the bishop at Reykyavik. 217 of the 299 churches are built of imported timber, 75 of peat or turf, and only 7 of stone. The well known fact is confirmed that the Icelandic Lutherans, poor as they are, possess the true and lasting riches of knowledge to a remarkable degree. As many of them are settling permanently in the Northwest, they form a very desirable addition to our ranks.—The Lutheran.

CHICAGO EVANGELIZATION.

Following closely upon Mr. Moody's week of meetings, the Southern evangelists, Jones and Small, have, after urgent invitation, come hither from a great success in Cincinnati. Mr. Small began with two meetings a day last week Tuesday: at noon in Farwell Hall, in the evening in the (Moody) Chicago Avenue church. He will work alone for two weeks, when Mr. Jones will come to begin a more extended work February 28th. The Casino Skating Rink, corner of State and 26th streets, has been hired for a month for evening meetings. It will seat some 7,000 people. Committees from the churches of the South side have all arrangements in charge, and have districted that part of the city for religious visiting this week and next.

Samuel Small is a tall, slim young man of 35 to 40 years, with a typical Southern look. He dresses in a neat clerical suit and wears glasses. His voice has a slight harshness which often comes from the use of tobacco (for both he and Jones smoke). But his address is cordial, earnest, logical, well expressed, and free from mannerism. His evident sincerity appears at once. From the story of his life he was the son of a praying mother, and evidently was well educated, but falling into habits of dissipation he wandered far from his mother's God. He was aroused to see his danger about five months ago at a camp meeting sermon preached by Jones, was converted and began to preach immediately at his home in Atlanta, Ga. He soon joined Mr. Jones and the two have worked together ever since.

A Presbyterian minister, writing of Mr. Jones, says: "He is a very quiet, earnest man, and preaches almost entirely in a conversational tone, with an entire absence of anything like ranting. The flashes of wit and humor which sometimes appear in his sermon seem to be natural and spontaneous, and the greater part of his discourses are characterized by deep solemnity and earnestness, and often by great beauty and pathos. Thus far he has laid the ax at the root of the tree, preaching (for the most part) the law with great power and directness. He is one of the most fearless men who ever addressed an audience in his scathing denunciations of prevailing sins."

Mr. Small's discourses have been fully reported in the papers, and thousands press daily to hear him. The following abstract of his sermon last Wednesday evening shows that he is at least fearless in his preaching, and inclined to deal in faithfulness when he comes against the sins of

POPULAR AMUSEMENTS.

We have a direct command to be pure in speech, and any impurity of speech in a Christian is despicable. Yet there are many parents who pick up the phrases of the day and use them, sowing the seeds of impure thoughts in the minds of their children. Impurity of person, as well, must be looked after. What do you think of a Christian who is continually playing cards? Do you see anything pure in that? J. G. Holland has said that it was a game invented for and practiced by mental and spiritual starvelings. Card-playing leads to all the evils summed up in the word gambling, and nine-tenths of all the gamblers catch the spirit of play at home. If you have arrived at such a point of mental paucity that you can't amuse yourself except by resorting to card-playing, then don't profess to be a Christian. You say your father played cards and yet you are not a gambler. I don't know why you ain't a gambler. You've got all the spirit of a gambler, and if you ain't one it's because you haven't any money or else you haven't got the nerve to risk it. You can't keep cards and the Bible in the same house and do your duty to both. You'll either play cards and neglect the Bible, or you'll read the Bible and burn your cards.

Then, there's the theater. You profess to be a Christian, and yet you go to the theater about as often as you go to church. I don't believe that a true Christian was ever seen in a theater. One of these theater managers doesn't want anything better than the sight of a big, professing Christian sitting in the first row. You are acting a lie if you go to the theater, and you are setting a wrong example to all the young people in the land. The tendency of the theater is immoral, and it distracts the attention of the Christian and takes the time that he should give to the discharge of his Christian duties. The theaters have even invaded the nomenclature of the Bible for the names of their plays. Posted up all over this city, in letters six feet high, are the announcements, "Wages of Sin," and "Saints and Sinners." As much is being done to uproot the ideas of conjugal, fidelity of virtue, and of honesty, by the theaters as by all the other agencies in this land put together.

The licentiousness of this country is getting to be something appalling. If the records of these divorce courts in Chicago were thoroughly searched, and if the names of the people who have figured in them were brought to light, you'd find that many of them were persons who were shams and hypocrites, and yet they had professed to be followers of Jesus Christ If some wives knew as much about their husbands as the police officials and the newspaper reporters here know, they'd leave them in a hurry.

Speculation is a polite name for gambling. They don't use any dice or checks or roulette wheels on 'change, and there is no statute of the State of Illinois against it, but God will pass his judgment on it, finally, and the speculators will find that their "futures" have materialized in hell. I can go down to Hankin's gambling house and find men who make no profession of Christianity, and yet men who will denounce the vocation as pernicious, wrong and sinful; but if I go to the exchange I shall find men who belong to all the churches, who profess to be Chri tians, and yet who are gambling in the mercies and providences of God. They're gambling with that which God has permitted to grow on the earth for the support of this great nation, and they're wringing from the people a terrible tribute of toil and blood and sweat.

A man came to me recently, and asked: "Is there any harm in dancing?" "Are you a member of the church?" I asked. "Yes, sir." "Well, do you like to dance?" "Yes, sir." "Well, go ahead and dance, then," I said. Why did he come and ask me anything about it? Because it troubled him and he wanted to air his views on the subject, and give me his opinion. I wouldn't give a snap of my fingers for the opinions of all the biggest men in America about a thing. What I want is God's opinion about it. The true Christian has got no business anywhere if he can't go singing the praises of God. If you can open a ball with prayer and close it with a benediction, why, then go to it. If you want to go to dancing parties; then take your name out of the church of Christ. If you won't be pure, do be honest. Leave these things to people who make no profession of Christianity. What I mean to emphasize by it all is that Christ's doctrine means that the men and women who accept it must remain unspotted by the world. I love to see people who are meek, gentle, pure; people whose faith is unalterable; who practice temperance in all things; who are patient and long-suffering; and I like to mingle with people who are joyous.

We come to those things that are of good report. Reputation is good only for an ornament. It has nothing to do with a Christian character. I am willing to be accounted a crank, a fool, and an idot in exchange for the blessedness of the knowledge of Jesus Christ. The gamblers down town and the theater-goers will think I'm a fool when they read what I say about them—and that's only half of it, for I omit the expletive that they will couple with epithet. They won't make the charge against me on the judgment day, however, for they'll have other business.

On the 1st of March forty of the seventy-five Sioux and Modoc Indian children, who for two or three years have been receiving education at the Normal Labor Institute, near Wabash, Ind., will be returned to Indian Territory, where the boys will be given tracts of land, and the girls be installed as instructors in the Indian schools. The class which was sent to the Institute by the United States Government in 1883 has made remarkable progress; and from a totally barbarous state the members have obtained a high degree of civilization. They are patient and industrious, and have mastered thoroughly the English language, arithmetic and geography, besides becoming proficient in tillage of the soil and in performing housework. The remaining thirty-five, nearly all Modocs, will continue their studies. Secretary Lamar will be requested to send seventy-five more children from the reservations. This would give the Institute 110 Indian pupils.

Sing the Reform

Into the Hearts of the People!

One of the most popular hooks against lodgery is the latest compilation of GEORGE W. CLARK, the Minstrel of Reform, a forty-page hook of soul-stirring, conscience-awakening songs appropriate for lectures, conventions and the home circle. What can add more to the interest of a meeting than a song well sung? What means will more quickly overthrow the power of the secret lodges than to sing the truth into the popular conscience?

FARM NOTES.

PLAN THE LAWN IMPROVEMENTS.

Those who expect to occupy a new place next spring, or propose to remodel and improve the home grounds, will find winter highly favorable for the most important part of the work. We do not say that winter is the most favorable for grading and shaping the surface of the ground, for making durable road-beds and opening walks, the sowing of lawns, and the construction of beds and borders. There is work that precedes these, and more important than either. The determiniug of where roads and walks are to be, the decision whether this part shall be graded, or left with its present undulating surface. The most important part of the work of the laying out of a new place, or the improvement of an old one, is not that done by the laborers, but the brain-work which directs the mechanical operations. If a landscape gardener is employed, he is paid, not for doing the work, but for showing what is to be done. In building a house, the work of the architect is of more consequence, and is paid much better than that of the mechanics who carry out the design.—Dr. Thurber in American Agriculturist for January.

FRONT FENCES.

In years past every owner of a house thought he must have a fence of some kind in front of his house and generally all around his premises Some of these fences were high, some were ugly, and few of them were ornamental. In some cases they were necessary to keep out cattle that were permitted to run at large; but that necessity, we are happy to say, no longer exists in the more civilized communities, and many people are taking down their front fences, and, in some cases, their division fences. We believe this to be the correct thing. Fences are not only unsightly, as a general thing, but they are expensive. We have been informed that in Williamstown, Mass., by general understanding, all front and division fences have been removed in the village. The same thing is true, to a considerable extent, in different parts of Newton, and the feeling is growing that it is a very general improvement on the old method. Let improvement societies use their influence to bring about this much-to be desired result. No one building a new place should put up a front fence, unless he has the misfortune to live in a community where one is necessary to exclude stray cattle. We feel sure our readers will come to the same conclusion that we have if they will give this subject attention.—I. F. C. Hyde, in Congregationalist.

NO GOOD REASON EXISTS why the country-door yard should not be one of the most tasteful and attractive of places; but nowhere is carelessness, shiftlessness and slovenliness more apparent than in many door-yards. The wood-pile is in disorder, heaps of old bones, broken bricks, ashes, tinware, cast-away axe and hoe handles, broken crockery of every description, old hats and rags, boot legs and rubbers, hoop-skirt wires, glass and chips lie all about. Used up tools occupy various positions in corners, and look as if they had been tumbled in a hurry where they lie, and had not been touched for twenty years. Some look very old indeed; also, wheels and hubs of old carts, and pieces of harness, and old iron mixed together. The fences around the house are of all imaginable kinds, refuse pickets with tops broken off, and frequent omissions to let a cow through; a piece of board fence with no two boards alike; with now and then a slab tucked in; then a remnant of some former elegant fence to fill up a gap, the gates off the hinges, and leaning up against a fence. Scenes of door-yards like this may be found without much searching. The owner says he has not time to attend to it, but will straighten it up some rainy day; that rainy day never comes, so he lives and dies with his door-yard full of all sorts of rubbish. Is it a marvel that his children leave early such a home to swell the crowd of our large cities, where they can earn little more than their board and clothes?

BUILDING TOO NEAR THE ROAD.—This is a common fault in many parts of the country. Discussing mistakes in rural embellishment, Professor Bailey wisely remarks, that there is too much of a disposition to "save land" for corn and potatoes. This economy is often short-sighted. It is like storing the cob and throwing away the corn. A farmhouse cannot present a good appearance unless it stands four or five rods or more, back from the road. Such a situation is also a matter of convenience in escaping dust, noise, and publicity.

IMPROVE THE RURAL HOME.—As an observing writer remarks, the home of the farmer has never been what it might be. The children on the farm have not found it as pleasant as it should be. The parents have not been the best companions for their children. Farmers have carefully and wilfully made farm life repellant to the rising generation. Ignorance in the performance of labor has made the hand grow weary. Failure to cultivate the mind has made the culture of the soil a servitude. The opportunities of the farmer for broad, deep, and intellectual training are always within his own neighborhood and under his own control, yet too rarely improved.

LUCILLE VERNON.

Cloth.....75 cents.

THIS is a pleasant surprise in many ways. The author is Rev. W. T. Meloy, of the United Presbyterian Church of Chicago, and the book is published by the Board of Publication of his denomination. It is a love story, not "fascinating," but with so much of genial interest that the reader is in no danger of laying it down unfinished. * * * The moral purpose of the book is to describe and vindicate Christian character, in its more heroic aspects, and it is a success. We congratulate the author and the United Presbyterian Board of Publication on this literary lily of the valley.—The Interior.

"LUCILLE VERNON" is evidently not an ideal sketch, but the fictitious names used represent to a great extent real men and women of flesh and blood. The characters of many of them are by no means attractive, but are perfect counterparts of querulous, obstinate and parsimonious professors who are thorns in the flesh of many a pastor in all the churches. But as in all the churches, there were also good and true men and women at Lansington, who upheld and encouraged the pastor. * * * In its author will he recognized the worthy pastor of the First United Presbyterian Church of Chicago, and a welcome contributor to these columns.—United Presbyterian.

The heroine, who becomes the bride of the pastor of the church at Lansington, is a wonderful exemplification of how a woman who is a true wife and help-meet may throw her life and energies into the great work of saving souls; aiding, by gentle words and sympathy, wise counsel and brave endurance, the husband having charge of a congregation where the Demon of Misrule held full sway. We follow with interest the history of the wife and husband through their hours of despondency and discouragement to the happy ending, where religion, harmony and peace have gained the ascendency and the good man and wife find their reward.—Pittsburgh Daily Telegraph.

IN THE COILS;
— OR —
The Coming Conflict.

A NEW AND STRANGE STORY BASED ON STARTLING FACTS, VIVIDLY PORTRAYING A MYSTERIOUS AND DANGEROUS POWER AT WORK IN THE GOVERNMENT, THE CHURCH, AND THE HOME.

"All will agree that this is a powerfully written story."—Evangelist, (Chicago, Ills.)

"A book which we trust may have a wide circulation."—National Baptist, (Philadelphia.)

"So intensely interesting did I find it that it was hard to pause until the last sentence was read. This work places the author high among the writers of fiction."—W. W. Barr, D. D. in Christian Instructor, (Philadelphia.)

"Unless we are greatly mistaken, the work will do more to awaken the American church and people to the evils of Freemasonry than any other book recently published."—Evangelical Repository.

"The book will create a sensation in Masonic circles, and evoke criticism of a most relentless character. The courage of the author in attacking such a rock-rooted bulwark as Freemasonry is something to admire, Fanatic though he be."—Nebraska Watchman.

"Light is needed on this subject and needed badly, and we welcome this contribution to the literature of anti-secretism, and cordially commend it to the favorable attention of our readers."—United Presbyterian, (Pittsburgh.)

"A charming work, fit to be classed with 'Uncle Tom's Cabin;' it is indeed less a work of fiction. The volume is as valuable as a work of reference as it is agreeable, truthful and useful. Our young folks will not leave the book, if they begin it, till they 'see how it turns out.'"—Cynosure, Chicago, Ills.)

HOME AND HEALTH.

HOARSENESS AND LOSS OF VOICE FROM "COLDS."

Dr. John W. Corson, of Orange, N. J., writing on "Borax and the Nitrate of Potass. in the Loss of Voice from 'Colds' in Public Speakers and Singers," says:

"Some years since, while in charge of the class of diseases of the chest and throat in connection with the New York Dispensary, at the suggestion of a non-professional friend engaged in teaching elocution, we were led to test the efficacy of borax, or the biborate of soda, in many cases of sudden hoarseness from cold. In mild attacks it often acted like magic. About ten minutes before any continued effort at speaking or singing, a lump of borax the size of a garden pea, or about three or four grains, was held in the mouth till it was slowly dissolved and partially swallowed—distilling, as it were, down the throat. For an hour or so it would frequently render the voice quite silvery and clear. For this purpose, we discovered that it possesses three special advantages. It was easily obtained, convenient to carry in the vest-pocket, and perfectly harmless.

Borax, thus slowly melted in the mouth till it distils down the throat, as any one in health may safely prove, stimulates the secretion of saliva, and makes the whole mouth and throat "water" profusely. Physiologists tell us that the glottis, the organ of the voice, is both a stringed and wind instrument; and the action of borax in moistening its orifice and musical "strings" seems precisely like the "wetting" which restores the missing notes to a flute when it is too dry.

An early friend and patient of ours since deceased, a New York dock-builder, much exposed to the weather, claimed to have a secret remedy for "colds." But he was too generous to bury anything useful. At length he confessed that it consisted in covering up warmly in bed, drinking a glass of water, and sucking a piece of the nitrate potass—or "saltpeter," as he preferred to call it—the size of a garden pea, or a little larger, till it was slowly dissolved and swallowed. We think we improved his prescription by sweetening the water, to cover the mawkish taste of the "saltpeter," mixing them and swallowing both together. We also increased the dose, from gratifying personal experience, to five grains.

As a courtesy from our profession to clergymen and singers, we may suggest that they will find it very convenient, in traveling, to carry a few five-grain powders of the nitrate of potass, prepared by the druggists for ready use. Like the borax, it relieves the dryness of the vocal cords. It is also easily obtained in every household, and, taken in the dose recommended, is quite harmless. With the help of the extra clothing and the glass of water, it excites for a whole night a gentle perspiration, and thus, taken at the very commencement, "breaks up the cold." It accomplishes this, as do warm foot-baths, with hot teas, or Turkish or Russian baths, if used early, by opening those millions of pores of the skin which Erasmus Wilson counted through his microscope. As the aching, the weariness, and the headache of a severe cold tell us, the blood is slightly poisoned by suppressed perspiration. And the simple lesson of cure is promptly to open these pores.

We need hardly say that after any treatment of this kind the patient should prudently wear an extra shawl or great-coat, and avoid standing in the street or exposure to the cold wind next day. Nor is this care in vain. The recent views of Niemeyer and others, as to the frequent inflammatory origin of the tubercles in consumptives, have lent a new interest to "neglected colds."

TAYLOR'S CHEROKEE

—OF—

MULLEIN.

The sweet gum, as gathered from a tree of the same name, growing along the small streams in the Southern States, contains a stimulating expectorant principle that loosens the phlegm producing the early morning cough, and stimulates the child to throw off the false membrane in croup and whooping-cough. When combined with the healing mucilaginous principle in the mullein plant of the old fields, presents in TAYLOR'S CHEROKEE REMEDY OF SWEET GUM AND MULLEIN the finest known remedy for Coughs, Croup, Whooping-Cough and Consumption; and so palatable, any child is pleased to take it. Ask your druggist for it. Price, 25c. and $1. WALTER A. TAYLOR, Atlanta, Ga.

ALL-NIGHT INHALATION!

"A positive revolution in the treatment of Air-Passage Diseases of the Nose, Throat, and Lungs, and, for the purpose designed, as valuable a discovery as vaccination."

THE PILLOW-INHALER.

A Speedy, Positive and Permanent Cure for Catarrh, Bronchitis, Asthma, and Incipient Consumption.

It is a hair pillow, with reservoirs of evaporating liquid, the fumes or vapor of which is inhaled all night long, whilst sleeping as usual, and without any discomfort. It is used only at night, and is perfectly safe to the most delicate. There is no stomach-dosing, douching or snuffing; but just as a smoky lamp will leave a deposit on a whitened wall so the PILLOW-INHALER, for say eight hours at a time, spreads a powerful healing balm or salve on the inflamed inner coating of the diseased air-surfaces, from the nostrils to the bottom of the lungs, and hence into the blood. Old-fashioned inhalation, through a tube, for a few minutes a day, sometimes cured. Think of eight hours constant action, on the same principle, but intensified a hundred-fold! There are no pipes or tubes. The medicine is breathed in, not swallowed, and goes right to the diseased parts.

CATARRH. BRONCHITIS. CONSUMPTION.

HON. E. L. HEDDEN, Collector of the Port of New York, says: "I take pleasure in stating that the PILLOW-INHALER has been of the greatest relief, and I believe of permanent benefit, to my wife, who has been a great sufferer from Bronchial and Catarrhal Troubles, accompanied with distressing Asthma. I recommend its use to all persons afflicted with such maladies."

E. L. HEDDEN, 38 West 49th St., New York.

MR. H. G. TEELE, 50 Bryan Block, Chicago, Ill., says: "I suffered fifteen years from a severe case of Catarrh; coughed incessantly day and night. I bought a PILLOW-INHALER, and since using it my cough is gone; my lungs are no longer weak and sore, and I am in better health than I have been for years."

During the six years of its existence the PILLOW-INHALER has wrought cures of Catarrh, Bronchitis, Asthma, and Consumption, that have been more like miracles than the usual treatment of disease. It is not expensive, and is within the reach of every one. Send for Explanatory Pamphlet and Testimonials, or call.

NEWS OF THE WEEK.

WASHINGTON.

The Chinese Minister has laid before Secretary Bayard reports from California to the effect that there was a concerted movement in progress to drive out the Chinese from all the towns and cities of California, except San Francisco, and that the governor of the State and the sheriffs of the various counties evince no disposition to protect the Chinese in their rights.

The Cabinet meeting Tuesday considered the propriety of urging legislation to indemnify the Chinese for losses sustained by them in the recent outbreaks in the West. Claims for damages caused by the anti Chinese riots at Rock Springs, Wy. T., last fall have been filed with the Secretary of State.

COUNTRY.

John B. Gough, the famous temperance advocate, died at Philadelphia, at 5 o'clock Thursday evening.

George Q. Cannon, the Mormon apostle, was released at Salt Lake, Wednesday, in bonds of $45,000. A Nevada sheriff was offered $1,000 to permit Cannon to escape, but refused the bribe.

A masked mob at Nicolaus, Cal., Thursday morning forced the forty-four Chinamen in the town to board a steamer, and compelled the captain of the vessel to take them to San Francisco.

A statistician figures that the inhabitants of Milwaukee county, Wisconsin, pay for beer, annually, $3,600,000, and for flour $1,140,000, thus expending $2,460,000 more for beer than they do for flour.

The Congregational church and seven business places at Braceville, Ill., were destroyed early Wednesday morning, the losses aggregating $23,000.

French Canadians raided stores at Pasbebric, P. Q., Wednesday, carrying off 260 barrels of flour and other articles of food.

Policemen at Cincinnati are guarding employes of a harness manufactory, whom the proprietors imported from St Louis. The goods of the firm have been boycotted, as have certain dining-rooms, the owners of which supplied the "scab" workmen with food.

The Polack church riots were renewed at Toledo, Ohio, Wednesday, incendiaries setting fire to St. Helwig's church which was entirely destroyed. There is great excitement in the Polish quarters, and a strong force of police are kept on duty.

The floods in the Roxbury District of Boston have caused great distress, and fuel and clothing are being dispensed in quantities to the sufferers. Physicians walk the streets with policemen and agents of the poor, dealing out drugs and cordials to those who need them. Serious mortality is expected.

Several of the fleet of government boats at St. Louis were sunk by the ice, others are badly damaged, and many are missing, but may be picked up at points down the river. The loss is placed at $200,000.

Benjamin Knoop, of Chester township, Wabash county, Indiana, was bitten on the leg by a rattle-snake fifty years ago, and is now so troubled by pains in and ulcers on the limb that amputation may be necessary to save his life.

Mrs John Ullery, of North Manchester, Ind., was attacked by a ram Tuesday morning and fatally injured.

At Greenbush, Sheboygen county, Wisconsin, early Tuesday morning, a dwelling was destroyed by fire. James Ehle, his wife, father, three children, and a young woman perished in the flames. The hired man, who escaped, is suspected of having fired the house.

Recently, at Atlanta, Ga., a son of David W. Henderson, a street car driver, lost a leg by being run over by a car on which his father held the reins. Henderson, Sr., now sues the company for $10,000 damages.

Notwithstanding that the penitentiary authorities had advertised in several papers that they had convict labor to let, when they assembled at Joliet, Friday, they found that not a single bid had been made. It is believed that the agitation of the convict labor question has deterred contractors from making proposals, and the commissioners are puzzled as to what they should do with the idle men.

FOREIGN.

Lord Rosebery, the new Minister for Foreign Affairs, has reiterated to the Greek Government that England is firm in her resolution to oppose a war between Greece and Turkey. The French and Italian Governments having asked, whether it is intended to order an English attack upon the Greek fleet, Lord Rosebery replied that England would act only in concert with the other powers. The latest orders dispatched to Sunda Bay are to the effect that no active measures shall be taken by the fleet assembled there without the special permission of all the governments interested.

Parliament reassembled Thursday. In the House of Commons Mr. Gladstone said that the desire of the government was to propose to the House measures of a positive and substantiative character, dealing with Ireland respecting social order and the questions of land and the future government of Ireland, including a method for such government. He said that a further statement on the subject would be made on the 22nd of March. The Parnellites are willing to wait.

Prime Minister De Freycinet explained that the proposed treaty between France and Madagascar represented a maximum concession. Although the word "protectorate" did not appear in the treaty, French influence would penetrate there through the efforts of the French Minister resident there. The French Government would establish a port and victualing and coaling station at Diago, on Suarey Bay, and would be in a position to protect the rights of foreigners on the island. He urged the committee to agree to a credit of 300,000 francs, to enable the treaty to be ratified. The committee approved the ratification of the treaty.

The people of Paris are pleased with Emperor William's order prohibiting the drama "Sedan" which action they accept as proof that Germany considers that France has regained her former position in Europe and is worthy of conciliation.

There has been a radical change in the French policy respecting Egypt. The new French Minister will support the demands of the Porte for the formation of a Turco-Egyptian army to replace British troops in Egypt and the evacuation of the country by the English at the earliest possible date.

A portion of the Shipper's Exhibition Building, in Liverpool, collapsed Feb. 16th, while several score of workmen were engaged upon it. Most of them have been recovered from the wreck, eighteen of them with broken limbs. These have been sent to hospitals. It is known that several men were killed by the accident whose bodies remain buried in the debris.

Iowa is still leading on in the temperance reform and is beginning to feel for the cigar box and tobacco plug. The other day a bill was introdueed in the legislature prohibiting teachers, members of college faculties, state and county superintendents, and members of the State board of examiners from using alcoholic and narcotic stimulants.

Washington churches are not in a happy condition when politicians can choose their pastors. Dr. J. P. Newman made a sad failure in the Madison Avenue Congregational church in New York, leaving it disrupted, ruiued. He was during Grant's administration pastor of the Metropolitan M. E. church in Washington, and was popularly known as General Grant's pastor. He also went across to California to pronounce a eulogy over the body of Senator Stanford's son, report said for a great fee. Now through the lobbying of Logan and Stanford he has returned to the Methodist church and is again in his old pulpit, though the members of the church were well satisfied with Dr. Huntley who has been several years their pastor.

Judge A. W. Tourgee, author of "The Fool's Errand," has made a more profound study of illiteracy in the South than any other of our public men, certainly more than Mr. Logan, who wauted to wash out the dark stains of ignorance with whiskey. Senator Blair's bill, so perseveringly urged in the Senate, Judge Tourgee shows with great force from a formidable array of statistics, is a very weak document in its present form. That bill divides the total sum appropriated among the different States in proportion to their illiteracy. This gives a small sum to each of the Northern States, which do uot need the money, and are perfectly able to care for the small per cent of illiterates, which in the whole North averages 8.5 per cent. But the bill is more defective in that it provides that each State may distribute the sum allotted to it to each race, white and black, in proportion—not to the illiteracy in each, but to the population. Thus, if a State have 1,000,000 whites and 500,000 blacks, the former will have two-thirds of the allotment, or twice as much money for schools as the latter, while they may not have one-half so many who need it. Thus it appears that each illiterate in Virginia will draw $1.90 from he Gener al Government, but the white illiterate will draw $3.54 and the blaek 90 cents. Senator Allison, of Iowa, last week moved an amendment in a long speech, obviating this unjust division, and a futher amendment limiting the appropriation to States which have ten or twelve per cent of illiteracy ought also to be added.

We shall be glad to hear that Mr. Moody has testified as frankly and powerfully in the South against the lodge as in his Northern meetings. Besides his word of warning at Altoona, Pennsylvania, Rev. J. T. Allen writes to Our Banner, New York, of the meeting at Newburgh, in that State. "It was very encouraging to hear him, in response to inquiries in the query box, proclaim the duty of Christians to separate themselves from secret societies and come out if they wanted power with God; and to hear him apply the golden rule to the question of buying and reading Sunday newspapers and of riding on cars, etc, on the Sabbath. There is manifest also a holy boldness, which does not wait to consult proprieties of time and place and circumstance; but, breaking through any timeserving policy and setting aside false modesty, his whole aim seems to be to declare the will of God and win men to the Lord Jesus Christ."

The Mormons are enraged at the arrest of Cannon, and last week Monday, two sons of the Mormon magnate with a third and unknown man attacked United Sates Attorney Dickson, attempting to kill him. The two were arrested and fined, but the great crowd which gathered were just as bloodthirsty, but not so bold. The Mormons it is reported in Washington are planniug a new and desperatc move. Discouraged at the failure of their plans to erect a State in which they would become self-governing and have again their representatives in Congress, they are hoping to move enough of their number across the line into Nevada to control the elections and gain their end. The project is viewed with some apprehension in view of the new and complicated questions that would arise between Federal and State authority. In Congress Mr. Woodburn of Nevada has introduced a more stringent anti-Mormon bill than any yet considered. Thus the lines are being drawn more closely on either side, and the final struggle cannot much longer be put off.

Joseph Cook in opening his second lecture this season in Tremont Temple, Boston, began his prelude on Mormonisn in these words: "The Mormon monster is both a secessionist and polygamist. His disloyalty is secret, so far as he can make it such; his polygamy is open and defiant. The American flag has been often placed at half-mast on Mormon buildings, as an insult to Federal officials. A Latter Day Saint is first a Mormon and afterwàrd, and a long way afterward, an American citizen. It has been again and again established that he takes the most horrible secret oaths to obey the polygamist Mormon hierarchy, even when their commands conflict with the laws of the land. He actually thus obeys the aristocracy of the harem, whenever he becomes a polygamist perjurer and assassin. My conviction, obtained after much consultation with specialists on this theme in Utah and elsewhere, is that the American Bluebeard is quite as dangerous in his character of a disloyalist as in that of a polygamist."

Rev. N. R. Johnston, for several years missionary of the Covenanter churches among the Chinese in California, writes to Our Banner a graphic and truly alarming picture of California anti-Chinese politics: "The condition of society on this coast in reference to the Chinese is like a seething pot. The Wyoming massacre, against whose perpetrators not even an indictment was found, and the success of the people of Tacoma, W. T., who by force ejected the entire Chinese population, seem to have emboldened the enemies of these strangers among us. In many places hereabout similar scenes occur; and all over California meetings are being held to take measures to get rid of the hatcd Mongolians. In some places these measures succeed, in others they fail. Ordinarily those meetings are called and managed by men of the lowest type of morals, or by leaders in the secret orders, labor unions, United Workmen, or probably by some ambitious office-seekers. In San Francisco the notorious O'Donnell, the city coroner, and a blatant Irish Catholic, more bitter in his Chinese hate than even Dennis Kearney, is so elated by his election by an unparalleled majority, and that without nomination by either of the leading parties, by his success in getting up large anti-Chinese processions, and by the hurrahs of the tumultous rabble, voters of course, that he will probably be a self-nominated candidate for governor. Nothing but fear of the police, or of the U. S. troops, not far away, prevents these thousands of foreign naturalized citizens and the native-born savages from violently attacking or killing the Chinese. That O'Donnell and others are permitted, in public places and generally on the Lord's Day, to make the most fearful threats of violence and conflagration in order to drive out the Chinese, is passing strange. And it is amazing that against all the wrongs done to an unoffending people few Christians of any denomination bear a public testimony, or plead in behalf of the wronged. With few exceptions both pulpit and press are silent, if they do not favor the wrong."

The Woman's suffrage meeting held in All Soul's Universalist church, Washington, called out a sermon from the pastor of the church in which he said the question had narrowed down to a single issue, the right to the ballot. He was still in doubt, but it was hard not to favor it when the appeal came from women. He had drawn near the fence, and was looking over, but this fence was one that thoughtful people could not clear at a bound. It was at least a six rail fence. Speaking of women in Congress, he said the morals of Congressmen were much better when they brought their wives to Washington with them than when they left them at home. "If good women should be elected to Congress," he added, "It is to be hoped they will bring their husbands with them. I should be sorry to see them leave their husbands at home to keep house during a two or six years' term."

WEEK-DAY SERMON.

BY E. E. FLAGG.

There are Bethels for every waiting soul, ladders reaching from earth to heaven on which angels ascend and descend; but there comes a time when the ladder is withdrawn and the angels go away from us; and whatever other Bethels may open golden gateways for our souls, in the future this particular one can only be a remembrance.

There is a certain little room and a certain easy-chair therein which to-day miss their old-time occupant. The light can stream in unchecked now, for eveu its meridian glory cannot pain the eyes that look on Him who walketh in the midst of the seven golden candlesticks. The ripe counsel, the saintly wisdom, the communion with celestial mysteries are no more for earth.

Mrs. F. once said to me quietly, "I have chosen the fourteenth chapter of John to be read at my funeral. Mr. F. and I agreed years ago that when the other died the exercises should be as simple as possible—a chapter of our own choosing and a prayer, nothing more."

I could understand the shrinking of these devout and humble souls from "funeral sermons." But only when I heard these last words of Jesus read in the silent room of death did I feel that even a Bossuet or Fenelon could never have preached half so eloquent a funeral sermon as they contained; and then it was in the strange abrupt closing that their comforting lesson really came to me. "Arise; let us go hence." But the heart shrinks back and says, no. It would fain linger in the shadow of its lost Bethel even when there is nothing left but a pillow of stone. It eannot realize that "it is expedient" for the rarest, sweetest, purest souls to go away leaving their words and example to fructify in the rich soil of our tender memories of them, and bear fruit a hundred fold in stronger faith, lives more spiritual, and affections more heavenly. Arise; they are not dead but sleeping. Let us go forth out of the shadow of this closed Bethel though it may be into a world where Christ is continually crucified, and where like Peter we may be tempted to deny him; to take up our daily toils and bear our daily crosses, and keep them all to ourselves, and then find in some hour when the pain of our loneliness grows intolerable, that the true Comforter is a little nearer to us than he ever seemed before.

The flowers will spring on a thousand hillsides, and the birds will sing and the suns rise and set, and we shall grow used at last to missing the dear presence that once we thought we could not live without. And we find suddenly that we have risen and gone hence unconsciously to ourselves—that we are walking in the old ruts, saying and doing the same things, and yet with a difference. For in the transfiguration light of memory our beloved is still with us—beautiful with more than mortal loveliness, pure with more than mortal purity. Shall we let the earth dust cling to our soul garments when we walk in such company? Shall we let the things of flesh and sense veil from us that seraph countenance? And we are better men and women though we have "arisen and gone hence" and the world thinks we have forgotten.

WAS HE HONEST?

BY A. M. PAULL.

The Freemasons of Providence, R. I., dedicated their new temple February 3, and as usual, a minister of the Gospel, in this case the Rev. G. M. Fiske, rector of St. Stephen's Episcopal church (High) of Providence, and a member of the order in New York, was chosen to advertise and defend the order, which he did in a long and labored eulogy, chiefly remarkable for the frequent and glaring contradictions and untruths. Let us glance at a few of the most prominent ones.

I quote: "It is an exponent of that Truth, divine and heavenly, which alone can beautify and irradiate our daily lives and make us truer men, and it continually holds up before us the prospect of the life of the world to come. In its own graphic manner it admonishes us of death momentarily impending, of that resurrection victory in which death is swallowed up and of the eternal bliss which we shall know, face to face, when brought to light in the blazing splendor of that orient for which the heart of every Mason yearns and whitherward his feet are ever tending."

This is as succinct a statement of the religion of Masonry as can be found in any Masonic authority. Those Masons who have been knocked over by the setting-maul of Jubelum in the "graphic manner" hinted at above can testify to that. It does not seem possible that an intelligent man can flatly contradict the above sentiments in the same speech; but look! I quote again: "Masonry is not a religion, and whoever would attempt to substitute it for religion or for the church has misconceived its intention and its spirit, and will never rise into the strength and glory of its teachings." This last quotation is utterly false. If those two quotations do not flatly contradict each other then there is no such thing as contradiction.

Again "Masonry is of ancient and venerable extraction, and opposed to this we read: "The best writers upon Masonry tell us that Masonry in its present form, includes as one of its special ideas the idea of cosmopolitan brotherhood, and that this fact alone is enough to show that Masonry could not have been of very remote antiquity."

Now, a man who will contradict himself so flatly in one speech will not hesitate to contradict the highest Masonic authority, and we shall not be disappointed in finding the most reckless statements made concerning the fundamental principles of the order. I quote: "It is alive in this new world, still living because of its creed of faith in God and of dependence on his aid and grace." etc. Mr. Fiske evidently uses the word "God" here and everywhere in his speech in the sense of the Christian's God, the one only true God, the Trinity. No other meaning can be put upon it as he uses it. But when he intentionally gives such an impression, as he does undoubtedly, he tells an untruth. For, see Mackey's Jurisprudence, page 95: "The fundamental law of Masonry requires only a belief in the Supreme Architect of the Universe, and in a future life, while it says with peculiar toleration that in all other matters of religious belief, Masons are only expected to be of that religion in which all men agree, leaving their particular opinions to themselves. Under the shelter of this wise provision, the Christian, the Jew, the Mohammedan, and the Brahmin are permitted to unite around our common altar . . . its religion being of that universal kind in which all men agree."

This of course shuts out entirely the Christian's God, as all men do not agree to worship the Christian's God, but different nations, communities and groups of men, in some instances, worship different gods or idols; and the Christian's God will never mix with other gods that are no gods. Besides the temple in which Mr. Fiske made his address has one room specially prepared for the Ancient and Accepted rite. The 28th degree of that rite is called Knight of the Sun, is the philosophic lodge, and explains more fully the teachings of the lower degrees. It tells us "that there is but one God and to adore him only without any subdivision or interpolation." This is meant to strike at the doctrine of the Trinity, and strikes out entirely the Christian's God. Nothing is said of Jesus in this lodge. The words "Holy Spirit" sometimes used in Masonry are explained as "the image of the Universal Spirit that gives light to all in the three states of nature; and on the animal, vegetable and mineral." And "the figure of our soul which is only the breath of the eternal, and which cannot be soiled by the works of the body."

If this is not enough, we will give one more quotation from Rebold, a standard authority,(p. 412): "Now that we have seen, as exhibited by their priests and prophets, the God of the Jews, of the Christians and the Mussulmans, let us examine him who is revered by Freemasons. Here is their idea of a Supreme Being. From the first they have called him the Grand Architect of the Universe," etc. Rebold is very plain, and most deliberately sets aside the God of the Christian, along with other gods, as unworthy the reverence of Masons. He contrasts these different gods with that of Freemasonry, and makes it appear to the advantage of the latter—interesting reading as to the point in question, but too long to be inserted here.

Again Mr. Fiske says, "The boast of Masonry is that it takes the Bible for its guide. It founds itself upon the oracles of God, the Law, the Prophets and the Gospel. The Bible is the central object and the chief illumination of the duly constituted lodge." Nothing can be more false than that statement, as the 21st landmark of Masonry, as explained by Mackey, p. 33, will show, viz: "It is a landmark that a book of the law shall constitute an indispensable part of the furniture of every lodge. I say advisedly a book of the law, because it is not absolutely required that everywhere the Old and New Testaments shall be used. The book of the law is that volume which, by the religion of the country, is believed to contain the revealed will of the Grand Architect of the Universe. Hence, in all lodges in Christian countries, the book of the law is composed of the Old and New Testaments, in a country where Judaism was the prevailing faith, the Old Testament alone would be sufficient, and in Mohammedan countries and among Mohammedan Masons, the Koran might be substituted." See also Chase's Digest, page 207: "The Jews, the Chinese, the Turks, each reject either the New Testament or the Old, or both, and yet we see no good reason why they should not be made Masons. In fact, Blue Lodge Masonry has nothing whatever to do with the Bible. It is not founded upon the Bible; if it was, it would not be Masonry; it would be something else."

While these contradictions and untruths are falling rapidly from the speaker's lips, he takes breath to tell us that "Masonry has been suspected unjustly and accused most falsely of hostility to the church of God. Whatever grounds men may have had for forming such opinions, those grounds were found in individuals and not in any avowal or disposition of the order." Hitherto his assertions have been in conflict with common sense and the highest Masonic authority; now he attacks that long line of noble men who have taken their lives in their hands in the bold task of stripping the mask from the face of this false prophet—Freemasonry. Some of these men are living now, bruised and wounded by the red hand of Masonry, but, nevertheless, ready to meet Mr. Fiske in open debate upon that point, and prove the correctness of their accusations. As to the avowal by the order, our quotation from Rebold answers that; as to the disposition of the order, it is enough to refer to the careful cutting out of every allusion to Jesus in Bible quotations in Blue Lodge and Chapter monitors, while, notwithstanding which, every initiate of the third degree is, at death, sent to the grand lodge above.

How is it that such a speech is acceptable to the Masonic fraternity? Simply because words of commendation from such a source advertise the order. As long as it is mere speech, the order will stand it; but let Mr. Fiske endeavor to incorporate his ideas into the constitution or by-laws of the Grand Lodge, and immediately a furor of opposition, like that to the Ohio resolution of 1856, would admonish him that he had mistaken the spirit of the order.

Can a minister be honest in commending such an order in this age of enlightenment? Was Mr. Fiske sincere as he looked over the assembly, composed, in no small measure, of rum-sellers, wine-bibbers, infidels and profane men, enemies of the church of Christ, congregated as members of the Masonic fraternity in that pagan temple, in telling them that their feet are ever tending to the "eternal bliss" "of "that orient for which the heart of every Mason yearns?" These questions force themselves upon us. God and Mr. Fiske only know the answer.

Providence, R. I.

COMPANY D.

BY W. S. T.

One day while walking up the street,
A sad-faced wife I chanced to meet.
I could but see while passing by
The tears that trembled in her eye,
And hands fast clinched, and hear her groan
In agony as if alone.
Until this word had reached my ear
Dropped from her lips while walking near,
I wondered what her grief could be:—
"My Jo has joined that Company D
And I fear they'll steal his heart from me."
O, in my soul I pitied her,
For a Drunken set of Drones they were.
To Drink till Drunk is their Delight,
Disgrace the town, Disturb the night,
Drill in the Darkest Dens of vice,
Mid Din of glasses, shaking Dice,
Debauch the young, Decoy the old,
Degrade the high, and Deeds untold
Done in the Dark by Company D
Deserve a Demon's Destiny.
Their Captain Devil in command
Defiant leads his Drunken band.
A Demon on each side you'll find,
Diabolus walks close behind,
This is the roll of Company D.
Declared by "Dastard Orderly:"—
"Dram-Drinker" answers first the call.
Then into line "Deceit" doth fall;
Next "Devotee of lager-beer,"
With "Drawl" and "Drowsy" cry, "I'm here;"
Low "Dabbler in Deceitful wine,"
And "Brandy Drunkard" fall in line:
"Dan Dry-throat" and "Dave Debauchee,"
Then "Dullard" and "Duplicity,"
"Deluded Dunce" and "Driftless fop,"
"Discarded Dude" and Drizzle-chop,"
"Dishonor" and "Derision" low.
"Duplex" and "Discord" whom all know;
"Deserter" now, and "Desecration,"
"Dull-Eyes," "Defilement," "Desolation,"
Then "Devastater" and "Despair,"
Sirs "Dirk" and "Dagger," wicked pair,
"Devourer" and "Disorder" great,
"Dark-Soul" and "Dudgeon," "Dissipate,"
"Divorce," "Disturber" "Desperado,"
"Despite" and "Dealer-in-Bravado,"
"Dough-head" and "Dizzy," "Drunken-Sot,"
"Dirt-Bag," "Dilapidate." "Dry-Rot,"
"Defamer," "Dumps" and "Dregs" and "Dross,"
"Depravity," "Despise-the-Cross,"
"Despoiler," "Dare-Devil," First and Second.
"Deceivers by the score, he beckoned,
"Old Dolor," "Dreadful," "Desperation,"
"Darkness" and "Death;" at last "Damnation."
This is the roll of Company D;
In every Dram-Shop they will be.
Now do you wonder that poor wife
In sorrow grieved away her life,
Because her Jo, her dearest Jo
Had joined a Company so low!

Worcester, Mass.

AN INTOLERANCE THAT IS NEEDED.

BY WM. FENTON.

The prohibition movement in the South has been denounced as 'intolerance." The Baptist Standard, of Chicago, commenting upon the denunciation, observes: "It is a sort of intolerance regarding things iniquitious, that we want more of North, South, East and West." That is well put and quite refreshing from the Standard; it also affords a text for opposing Masonry. Judge Whitney, a late Worshipful Master in Masonry, had good reason to say of Masonry, "It is the darkest and most damnable institution that ever scourged the earth or cursed mankind." Let the readers of the Standard read Judge Whitney's defence when arraigned before the Grand Lodge of Illinois for his un-Masonic conduct in causing the arrest and trial of a brother Mason of his lodge for ruining a young woman and then murdering both her and her child.

Dr. Colver, a penitent Mason, says of Masonry, "It is Satan's masterpiece, a terrible snare to men." Inquiry was made for the biography of Dr. Colver at the rooms of the Baptist Publication Society in Chicago, but the book was not to be found there;

"out of print," the agent said. The editor of the Standard wrote that book and put in it a chapter of Dr. Colver's Masonic experience on the concealment of all Masonic secrets, murder and treason not excepted under penalty of being branded a villain and murdered. The editor suffered persecution for printing that record of lodge rascality. And now the Standard must keep its mouth shut while it very well knows what Masonry is; and its influence in the church, enough to fear it. But what right has the Standard to compound iniquity with the Masons by its silence? It is doubtful if a single paragraph can be found in any current Baptist publication that would show the infamous character of Masonry. We are told that the way to oppose Masonry is to preach Christ, circulate good books, the Bible and the lives of pious men. But if what they call preaching Christ and the lives of good men are sufficient, how is it that with all these appliances the infamous thing flourishes in the heart of the denomination as a "green bay tree," and the true Anti-mason is suppressed while the true Mason is honored and exalted by the denomination. Preaching Christ and concealing the sins of the people is neither preaching Christ nor the truth, but is a sort of Jesuitism that breeds corruption If the sin of Masonry is not proclaimed in common with other sins, Masons will go with other sinners to the same lake of fire and brimstone. The love of Christ would constrain a man to proclaim to Masons the sin of Masonry. But how can the love of Christ be in a man who encourages the Mason in his sin and casts out the true Anti-mason. "Is it not for you to know judgment? Who hate the good and love the evil." Micah 3: 1, 2.

THE ASSOCIATE REFORMED PRESBYTERIAN CHURCH AND SECRET SOCIETIES.

In the discussion of the basis of Union between the United Presbyterian and Associate Reformed Presbyterian churches, it appears that two articles of the U. P. Testimony are especially objectionable to some brethren, viz: the XIV. and XV., or the articles relating to slavery and secret societies. It is intimated by some that the A. R. P. church has no law or testimony on the subject of secret societies and that the divergences of opinion and practice are so great in the two churches as to present an insuperable barrier in the way of harmonious union. "We have no law against them and cannot enact one without destroying our own peace," writes a zealous brother in showing up the practical difficulties that would result from union.

We question the correctness of the brother's statement and ask, "Has the A. R. P. church no declaration or testimony on the subject? And would the ministers and members be doing violence to their convictions of right and duty by voting for adopting the U. P. Testimony on this subject, even if there was no specific article in the basis guaranteeing "that the forbearance in love which the law of God requires shall be exercised towards any brethren who may not be able fully to subscribe to all the the articles of the Testimony?"

The A. R. P. church has a testimony on this very subject and it would not be surprising if the candid reader would come to the conclusion, after reading and comparing the testimony of the respective churches, that that of the A. R. P. church is the stronger of the two.

In 1856, at a meeting of the A. R. P. Synod, at Starkville, Miss., the following resolution was offered by Rev. T. H. Sloan, and on his motion adopted:

"Whereas the resolutions passed at the last meeting of Synod on the subject of secret associations gave much dissatisfaction, and believing that the resolutions of 1850 would give more general satisfaction—therefore be it resolved that we hereby reseind all that was done at the last meeting, and we reaffirm the resolutions of 1850 as our only declaration and testimony on the subject."

The resolutions of 1850, referred to in the above motion, are as follows:

Resolved, 1. That we are opposed to all secret affiliated societies.

2. That we earnestly and affectionately warn and advise all the members of the Associate Reformed church, of the South, against all connection with such associations.

3. That any member of the church who shall hereafter connect himself with such a society in the face of this friendly advice, shall be viewed as acting in an unfriendly and unbecoming manner towards to Synod and the church. We likewise recommend: that those members of the church, who are already in such societies, abandon the same.

4. That the above resolutions are not to construed as requiring Sessions to exclude such individuals from the church.—Mintues 1850 in Chris. Mag., vol. 8, p. 377.

We are not informed of any subsequent action of the Synod on the subject, and, in the absence of any, the above resolutions are, and continue to be, the only declaration and testimony of the A. R. P. hurch on the subject of secret societies.

For the information of our readers, we give the XV. Article of the U. P. Testimony, relating to the same subject:

"We declare, That all associations, whether formed for political or benevolent purposes, which impose upon their members an oath of secrecy, or an obligation to obey a code of unknown laws, are inconsistent with the genius and spirit of Christianity, and church members ought not to have fellowship with such associations."

COMMUNISM VS. INDIVIDUALISM.

The effect of every principle at work in society must from the very logic of necessity be like the genius of that principle. However long it may take for the results to challenge our attention, yet from the first, the tendency of such operating forces is toward results in perfect harmony with itself. This self-evident truth being recognized it is not difficult, knowing the nature of a principle set at work in society, to pre-determine the result.

The genius of communism is one; but its manifestations are legion. Its spirit is unmistakably seen in Freemasonry, Oddfellowship, Knights of Labor, Ancient Order of United Workmen, and all such orders.

In antagonizing socialism, not only its effects and mode of working should be deprecated and declaimed against, but its very genius must be rooted out wherever found; for like the roots of cancer, if any of it remain in the body social, it will soon develop into a nauseating eruption.

The motto "Liberty, Equality, and Fraternity" of socialism with its varied forms of expression, whose dream and object is to establish a universal brotherhood among men. The object and means by which this is to be accomplished are a most monstrous misconception of possible fact and fitness of things. The avowed object being the "solidarity of man," secured by pledge, affirmation, covenant or oath.

Such brotherhood is only a sham! Such solidarity is only another name for disintegration; such fraternity is as unsound as depravity. It is simply selfishness held in check and constrained to a given course, through fear of certain invoked consequences or recognized self-interest. All such bonds for securing "equity" are severed by the touch of self-interest as quickly as thread of tow in the flame.

All such methods are obstructive rather than constructive.

When it comes to pass that the controlling forces of human action are extraneous to the individual and not motives of conscientiousness within, and within are desires and cravings which are at variance with those restraining influences it is a very uncertain and precarious condition at best. It is only a question of time and a slight modification of the relation of the individual to the object of desire and he will break over the restraint which has hitherto held him, and grossly violate the very principle he most solemnly covenanted to respect.

The power of restraint, which all mere extraneous forces possess, lies in the ill consequences which as a sort of penalty follow a given course of action; destroy the fear of these consequences, or let a condition of things be developed from which it seems quite probable that there will be immunity from said consequences, and there exists no barrier to the commission of the most heinous crimes.

This method of regulating society and giving shape to individual action, is practical atheism—is to eliminate all moral ideas and secularize the whole of man's instincts, sensations, and modes of thought. Just in proportion as this state of things comes to exist in society, plunder, murder and anarchy fall on with all their horrible attendants.

The whole history of combinations, monopolies, pools, etc., and of societies formed whose bond of union lay in an oath or pledge merely, such as the Fenians, Ku Klux, Masonry, and Odd-fellowship, etc., with all various degrees, also all these societies formed for the purpose of protecting certain secular interests, as Knights of Labor, Ancient Order of United Workmen, Grangers, etc. All these show, beyond question, their utter inability to permanently correct the evil their existence is designed to remedy.

But is there no remedy? There is. But is obtained by altogether another line of effort. The true impulses and motives of action must come from within the individual himself. Not by coercion; if by coercion then the actor is a mere slave. So also the strongest restraints upon human action comes from within, a conscientiousness of purpose, a sense of right and wrong.

To cultivate in society the idea that the good of the greatest number is to be secured by a combination of interests, by the fear of certain consequences to be personally suffered, etc., if a given course is pursued, is to develop in each member of that society a spirit of supreme selfishness. Such will only aggravate the trouble an effort is made to cure.

The true method is to develop in society a vigorous sense of right and wrong as the moral quality of actions. Educate the individual to feel, as a moral sensation, that true merit and deserved praise come not so much from material success as from a clear discrimination of right and wrong in a given course of acting, and a firm adherence to the right. Human interests touch at a thousandpoints; so complete is their blending that human skill can never legislate on general principles so as to meet every particular case. To meet this emergency a strong conscientiousness is imperatively necessary. Let our effort be then to urge the truth as of first importance and will this or that method succeed, but is it right; not labor so much to perfect combinations, social fraternities, commercial pools, labor unions etc., etc., as the efficient method of securing business interests and personal rights, but by a true and thorough education of the individual as to the moral quality of an action, accompanied by a strong, active conscience in the application of that knowledge to personal actions.

History shows that a conscienceless people devour and prey upon one another. Prosperity, peace and happiness are the portion of that people who act always under the dictates of an enlightened conscience.—C. E. Harroun in the Free Press, Birmingham, Iowa.

ITALIAN MISGOVERNMENT.

Mr. William Jones, secretary of the London Peace Society, who has recently traveled through Italy, describes his impressions of that country in a pamphlet, in which he remarks that the dismal condition to which modern Italy has been reduced, mainly through its military ambition, is terrible and widespread. Especially pitiable is the condition of the agricultural population. For example, during the summer of 1884 a meeting of the merchants of the Campagna was held, and amongst the resolutions adopted was the following: "That dead animals shall be buried in quicklime to prevent the peasants from digging up and eating them, as often happens!" This is no isolated or extraordinary fact. Those who have seen these unhappy persons moving in gangs at early dawn towards the fields where they are to work, conducted by an overseer on horseback, can scarcely have avoided a mental comparison between them and the slave-droves of former times. Respecting the miserable state of Italy, M. Emile de Lavaleye, writes: "Military and bureaucratic centralisation crushes these poor people who scratch the earth. Is it surprising that Socialism and Nihilism should arise to throw down all these engines of pauperisation? How many villages have to be ruined in order to construct one war-steamer such as the 'Lepanto' and its famous hundred-ton guns? The official personages who order these formidable ironclades, the pride of Italy, do they think of the tears, of the sickness, and of the ruin which they have cost?" The disease, to which the name of pellagra is now applied, has largely increased in late years throughout Italy. The pellagra is caused by wretched food and the want of salt; and so it must remain, as long as salt continues to be a highly-taxed Government monopoly, regarded by the peasant as a luxury reserved for the cattle. Italy has the ambition to be reckoned a great power. With a view to being strong, she so arranges her affairs as to consign tens of thousands of the flower of her population, for generation after generation, to the pellagra and, its frequent result, the madhouse, and to despairing agonies which result in wholesale suicide. She knows right well that the supplies voted for her absurdly-bloated and useless armaments are raised by taxation, which is crushing the nation into increasing poverty from day to day. Had Italy, during the past ten years, devoted one-fourth of the energy expended on sustaining the role of a great power to the amelioration of her material condition, her hills might have been re-wooded, and her waste lands reclaimed, whereas she has squandered her treasures upon useless vessels of the type of the "Italia," "Lepanto," etc. Many believe they will render no service, and that they are the destined prey of torpedo-boats and steam-rams. But no matter; Italy will have armor ships, and these monsters, which no one knows how to manage. "Floating coffins" was the sarcastic term applied by a French naval commander to one of the newest of them, at anchor in the Bay of Naples. "On no account would I risk my person on one of them in a rough sea," he suggestively added. Well might M. Lavaleye exclaim, "Poor Italian cultivators!" What misery, what sufferings, what tears, yes, what vices and crimes are represented by the hundreds of millions of frances that four of these iron-clad ships have cost! What colossal and culpable folly!"

THE INFLUENCE OF THE LODGE UPON THE DESTINY OF THE COLORED RACE.

AN ADDRESS BY PRES. J. BLANCHARD IN THE AFRICAN METROPOLITAN CHURCH, WASHINGTON, FEB. 23, BEFORE THE BETHEL LITERARY ASSOCIATION.

[Supplement to the American.]

Mr. President and Members of the Association:

I am to speak against secret societies: and I am told that nine in ten of my audience, male and female, if not nineteen in twenty of you, are members of such organizations. If, therefore, I shall fail to please, profit, and convince you, I shall fail, as Phæton did when he undertook to drive the chariot of the sun, "in a vast undertaking."

You have, wisely and well, celebrated the memory of General David Hunter, and made honorable mention of Pueblo and Fremont, and when I tell you that General Pleasonton's mother and mine were own sisters, and that, from boyhood, we were nearer together in our abhorrence of slavery than we were by blood; that, when I was a young minister, I preached and lectured against slavery, and that I wrote the action of the large and learned synod of Cincinnati, by which that august body suspended Rev. William Graham from the Gospel ministry, for teaching that "Jesus Christ authorized slave-holding;" that the college of which I was president sent sixty five stalwart young men at one time to the war, after Sumter was shelled, when I tell you that I should have obeyed the orders of Salmon P. Chase and Owen Lovejoy, and gone as the colonel of these young men, but at that time Gen. Hunter had ordered slaves sent back to their owners, and I must have sworn to obey him, which I never would have done: when I tell you that I aided to send Dr. Bailey to Washington, and fugitive slaves to Canada; that I was the American vice-president of the World's Anti-slavery Convention in London in 1843; when I assure you that since I entered public life, more than half a century ago, during much of which time, as Lord Brougham said when the crowd hissed him, "I have been slowly growing fat on popular applause," I have never swerved one hair from the sentiments here uttered; and, not to be tedious, when I tell you that your last week's meeting in this place, its fearless truthfulness, lofty patriotism, true eloquence, almost seraphic singing, and reverent worship of God, more than repaid me for the little I have attempted for human freedom; you will all acknowledge that I have some small claim to your patient candor while I speak.

I have praised your last week's meeting. Let me criticise it. Your eloquent young Professor Cook lauded John Brown, and you endorsed his praise. Now just fifty-five years ago (1831) Nat Turner, in Virginia, who was John Brown with a darker skin; without Brown's education, with equal courage, and with less fanaticism than he; with no free States to flee to, and with no awakening nation to back him, (for all were slave States to him), with no light but his conscience, and no guide but his God, this wonderful man, the Toussaint L'Overture of America, struck a blow on the chains of his race which sent echoes around the globe. I wish to hear Professor Cook on Nat Turner.

But why fight wind mills? Why not rest on our Abolition laurels and let lodges alone? The answers are various. The principles which the lodges subvert, and the interests which they endanger. Gen. Grant in his Memoirs, pp. 612-13 says: 'All secret, political oath-bound parties are dangerous to any nation." . . "If a sect sets up its laws as binding above the State laws, this claim must be suppressed at whatever cost." And the Democratic party in 1856, when it wished to beat the Know Nothings, put into its national platform these words: "We have a well-grounded opposition to all secret societies, by whatever name called."

Now Gen. Grant and the Democratic platform primarily refer to the Know Nothings. But Freemasonry and her children are precisely those societies which Grant's dying message says are 'dangerous' and "must be suppressed." William H. Seward, Millard Filmore, and Francis Granger, along with thirty-six others, thirty-nine of the best and ablest men in the State of New York, over their own names, say of Masonry: "It tramples on our rights, defeats the administration of justice, and bids defiance to every government which it cannot control." Indeed everybody knows that Masonry is the modern mother, model and type of the secret lodge system; that the whole family, little and large, wear more or less of her livery, and consciously or unconsciously, are her moral bric-à-brac. Their secrecy, "degrees," orders, titles and shows, prove them children of the mother lodge, as patches of gray on blue uniform would have proven the wearers children of the rebellion. If Masonry is political, all who drill voters to secrecy are political. This terrible New York condemnation was signed by such men as Seward, Filmore, Granger, John C. Spencer and others, and they never went back on that indictment. No rational man of average information, doubts that that indictment was at that time true: and it is a well known principle of this mother order that its landmarks never change; and, if so, then Gen. Grant's dying injunction for suppression applies to this model and mother lodge and her offspring.

"Absurd" cry many. "We know many good men, patriots, and Christians who are Masons; men who would scorn to commit or shelter crime. How do you account for this?"

The explanation is, that, as a rule, but one in five Masons attend the meetings and know what is going on. The lodges are chiefly supported by men who do not attend their meetings! Then there is a sorcery in lodgery that blinds the minds, even of good men. If there were any good men in Western New York in 1826 they belonged to the Masonic lodges. Yet it was proved before Special Justice Wm. L. Marcy, that sixty men shared in abduction and murder, and thousands at first justified it; but thousands afterward repeated and confessed. Fifteen hundred lodges gave up or disused their charters, and forty-five thousand left their lodges to return to them no more.

Let us follow this mother order down to our late slavery war. Gen. Jackson, who was a Mason but a patriot, was elected some two years after the Morgan outrage. He had run for the office before; but now the lodge had fallen in the North and become a Southern institution. Gen. Jackson and his Cabinet, Livingston, Barry, Eaton, and Poinsett, were Masons, and Jackson's majority became overwhelming. The original large slave-holders were almost to a man Freemasons. And this is one cause of the present craze for secret societies among the colored people. Their ideas of freedom naturally were to be like their masters, and their masters belonged to lodges.

The rebellion was born of the lodge. Two intelligent men, who were Union men, and both personal friends of Jefferson Davis, who are now here in Washington, will tell you that Mr. Davis was at first opposed to secession; but went into it as Lee did, because he was overborne by his State; and his State was carried by nightly discussions in the lodges.

The first secession ordinance was issued from Columbia, S. C., December 17th, 1860, In the debate, Parker, Inglis, Keitts, and Rhett, said they did not advocate secession on account of Lincoln's election; or the non-execution of the fugitive law; but that they had been "working it up" for thirty years; or, from the time of Jackson, who, with his Cabinet, were made honorary members of Federal Lodge, No. 1, in this District. Slavery, it is true, was a chief bone of contention, but slavery alone never would have carried out eleven States who loved the Union and the flag if their leaders had not been drilled and sworn and drunken in long, late night lodge meetings. Just as sure as we know that secession had been "worked up" for thirty years in South Carolina, which we have on the testimony of her sons, just so truly do we know that it was "worked up in the lodge-rooms of the South which became council chambers of treason in perpetual session. The ten lodges in this District all went for secession. They are, therefore, Gen Grant's "oath-bound secret political parties" to be suppressed at whatever cost." And if this is true and the reasonings sound; if the great mind of Grant, illumined by the clear shining of eternity, saw things in a correct light, our national salvation depends on our riddance from the lodge. It is heathen in its origin, heathen in its nature, and heathen in its effects. It came from Egypt, where a secret priesthood plundered the people and made "Egypt the basest of the kingdoms." Ezek. 29: 15. In modern times it overthrew popular liberty and restored Charles II. to the throne of England: who, after swearing to support the Protestant religion, died gazing on a silver cross held before his eyes by a priest named Huddleston, who was brought into his chamber by a secret stairway through which his courtesans had been admitted. The Masonic historian, Rebold, tells us that this debased monarch gave Masonry the name of "Royal Art," because it restored him to the English throne.

In France the exploits of the lodge have been similar to those in England. It overturned monarchy and overturned republics. Apostate Romish priests formed the Jacobin lodges and turned the rivers of France red with the blood of her people. It overturned the first French republic. President Lamartine compares the French lodges to venomous reptiles in pools, hidden and secreted beneath their slime. On this continent, the school historian, Wilson, in his "History of Mexico and her Religion," tells us that Gen. Jackson's minister, Poinsett, introduced a new rite into Mexico, and that the secret conspiracies of the Scotch and York rites against the government kept Mexico for years in a state of chronic bloody revolution; and in our own beloved United States, we have received half a million of dead soldiers and more than a billion of taxes from the plottings of lodges.

I do not ask you to accept these terrible indictments on your faith in this single discourse. But you have men whom you know and can trust. Commit this paper to them. Let them investigate and give you the truth. In your last week's memorial of the good Gen. Hunter you applauded Hon. Robert Small for calling Frederick Douglass the first of the American colored race, and I joined in the applause. You have no want of men able to refute or verify what I am saying.

Beside the warning words of our greatest general since Washington, let us place the utterance of young Seward whose father and himself were mangled in this city when Lincoln was murdered. Seward's words were "A secret political society is hostile to every American principle."

But let us be definite. The term principle is vague: and all claim to be Americans. What, precisely, are "American principles?" Obviously the principles on which the country was built. And the first of these is—

THE RECOGNITION OF GOD.

Cavalier and Roundhead; Jamestown, Virginia, and Massachusetts Bay; South and North—all built on a recognition of the Bible, in their constitutions, laws, bills of rights, and even in their writs and indictments. Thieves and felons were charged with acting "without the fear of God and by instigation of the devil." The first free constitution ever written, off Cape Cod, begins, "In the name of God, Amen." And though errors multiply, and forms change, recognition of God still underlies everything American but crime. I have seen Chief Justice Chase, in yonder Capitol, swear in an attorney on the Bible; not on its lids, but on its contents—supreme love to God and equal love to man.

2. Another American principle was and is the Sabbath; that every laborer shall have one day in seven, not one-third of each day, in his working clothes, to drink, gamble and caucus in saloons, the work-shops of corrupt American politics; but one whole day, in his clean clothing, with his clean-faced children and their mother, to meet with his neighbors, and, if he wishes, worship God. Mark, I am not saying that God is good, or the Bible true, but that both are American.

3. Another American principle is Human Equality. This is copied from the Bible into the Declaration of Independence. For if men are "of one blood" they are of equal blood. This excludes all pagan shrines and lodges built on higher and lower orders; invented by men, inhabited by devils, and administered by priests. There are no priests since Christ. He can have no motive to swindle us, and his priesthood is perpetual.

4 We can stop to mention but one more American principle, which is Christian marriage between one man and one woman. "They twain," not they twenty, "shall be one flesh." This Eden relation is to guard home, promote purity, and protect property; and wherever it does not exist government is despotism, and property plunder.

Such are some of the grand principles, or pillars on which American society rests. The lodge is hostile to them all

1st. It substitutes for God, its "Grand Architect," or "god of this world." 2d. By excluding Christ, it destroys the Sabbath which is Christ's, or "the Lord's" day. 3d. It destroys the very idea of human equality by its constitution which, as its greatest writer, Mackey, says, "is completely despotic." Alexander H. Stevens, the Vice President of the Confederacy, said, its "mission was to found an empire whose corner stone was slavery!" And, by swearing or pledging its members to obey, before they know what or whom, it makes them, in the words of Prof. Robison, of Edinburgh, "sworn underlings to unknown superiors." 4th. And it is equally hostile to marriage, by swearing every husband to life-long concealment from his wife. And it is equally hostile to every other element of American society.

Every member of a Masonic lodge is forsworn for life. Such is the mother, and the children resemble the parent. Some, as the "Eastern Star," and "Order of Rebecca," etc., are lodges of women to which men have access—coal-shed or back kitchen degrees invented to silence complaining women. The Grange was started from this city by secret service money from the United States Treasury, furnished by President Andrew Johnson. It is a farmer's secret theatre, in which women act as dramatis personæ, with the names and characters of heathen goddesses. But the time would fail even to enumerate the sham mysteries of iniquity involved in the secret lodge system. It is a complete system of subordination and subjection of man to man—despotism covered and concealed by mystery, show and religious imposture.

Following I give, proximately, the number of colored people in this District embarked in these secret orders: Fishermen of Gallilee (estimated) 6,000; Good Samaritans, 12,000; Knights of Labor, 30,000; Chaldeans, 8,000; Love and Charity, 1,000; Freemasons, 500; Odd fellows, 3,000; Knights of Jerusalem, 300; Ancient Order of Moses, 2,500; Sons and Daughters of Liberty, 4,000; The Tents, 600; True Reformers, 800; Good Templars, 150. These proximate numbers are given by respectable, educated colored men who belong to several of these orders. There are other popular orders in the South, and extending into Northern cities, as "The Immaculates," "Wise Men," "The Temple," etc., etc., who do not appear in this District. There is one church in Chicago which has three secret orders in it; one for small children, another for youth, and another for adults; each having a secret initiation fee and monthly tax. This District may be taken then as a fair average. And the above figures give in the District of Columbia sixty-eight thousand eight hundred and fifty members. There are some eighty-two thousand colored people in the District, and the same person will belong to and pay dues in from one to four, five and six secret orders. So that the figures given above are doubtless below the actual number of members; and if initiations, dues, degree fees, death taxes, regalia, and rents, cost an average to each member but ten dollars a year, these societies cost the colored people here, in cash, $688,500 a year; and they cost the colored population in the United States sixty or seventy millions a year.

When these lodge dues are all paid there is often not a penny left for pastor, church, wife or children. They are disintegrating the churches and drowning the families in poverty. Thousands of wives take in washing to feed husbands whose wages go to the lodges. In Jackson, Mississippi, a man whose whole visible estate would not have sold for $25, had managed to raise $35 for regalia, $7 for hat and plume, $5 for gauntlets and gloves, and came to his pastor, Rev. Mr. Harris, to help him to a $17 sword. A man in this city selling perch, which he caught in the Potomac, at 10 cents a string, had paid $25 for two initiations and was paying monthly dues. Ten barbers who have shaved me on my present Southern tour, have paid a tax of about $3,000 for having their moral sense debased and their intellects befogged by the false worships and lying legends of the lodges.

These lodges are joined by the lure of secrecy and the hopes of advantage. But the hopes are false. Your shrewdest, wisest, most sagacious men, as Douglass, Lynch and Scott, never join them. They only profit the men who make these orders their trade. When Chicago was burned, Masons raised, by their own report, $90,000 and paid only $30,000 for relief. Such a tremendous swindle would sink anything on earth but a secret, false religion. For a quarter or a half dollar one can buy the secrets of any of these societies. They sell secrets which are not secrets, thus obtaining money by false pretenses, which is sin and crime.

But the grand, controlling objection to secret orders that no one ever followed Christ into a secret society, and we are commanded to "follow" him. No one, therefore, can be initiated without trampling on the example and teaching of the Son of God. . . . .

Why should colored men quail or shrink from opposing lodges because their name is legion? In three prolonged visits to Washington, I have often been asked for alms in the street, but the beggars have all been white; no colored person has asked me for a penny. You have seven million people and more than a million votes. Cast these votes for God and goodness, against the lodge and liquor, and the key of yonder White House will soon be in colored hands. The white minority party will join you and give you the casting vote. How long is it since chained coffles of unoffensive men and women made the bridge that crosses the Potomac like that in Venice,

"A BRIDGE OF SIGHS."

The walls of Franklin and Armfield's old slave prison still stand there in Alexadria; but the moans, sobs and shrieks are all still and their echoes have forever died away; and little children play peacefully in those tranquil streets, in the grey summer evening, whose parents in those same streets have been seized and scourged for being out without a pass.

"But," you ask, "do you really think these lodges, like slavery, will be done away?" I know that they will. They are not of God's planting, and Christ, whose "words will not pass away," says that such "Shall be rooted up." The men who took the country through the war, Lincoln, Sumner, Chase, Seward, Stanton, Stevens, and Lovejoy, with Charles Francis Adams and Thurlow Weed in England, to keep off the British Lion—these were all Anti-masons, and the race of patriots is not dead yet, and, if it was, God could raise up more.

"But," once more and last: "Do you really believe that hatred and ostracism on account of color will cease; and that what we now see in colleges, and in the street cars of Washington, will be seen in schools, societies and the churches of God?"

And why should we not? The great majority of mankind are colored people, not white, and the telephone is bringing them together, shoulder to shoulder. Besides, crushed races always rise; and proscribed people always, in the long run, outstrip the proscribers, and in these days long runs are getting short. An African of Cyrene bore the cross after Christ, and Africa has furnished the cross bearers of the world ever since; but history, reason, philosophy and. above all, Christ assures us that "the last are becoming first," The cross ever leads to the crown. I hope this Metropolitan church will speedily change the word African in its title, to American. We have no "African" citizens in America, and churches, even in their titles, should teach the truth.

Complexion is accident not principle. Character is every thing. Our complexions will be one in Christ, for when "He shall appear we shall be like him, for we shall see him as he is." When all that sat in the council saw the face of the much forgiving Stephen, "as it had been the face of an angel," think ye that any one thought of his particular complexion? And when John in Patmos saw "the countenance" of Christ "as the sun shineth in his strength," do we fancy he could have told the natural color of his skin? In heaven we shall all look like each other because we shall all look like him. And as "Coming events cast their shadows before," as society rises higher and higher in magnified attainments, I apprehend that the hue of our skin, and the questions it gives rise to, will disappear in the coming splendors of God, as dark and white clouds blend and disappear at evening, when the sun shines through them both.

WASHINGTON LETTER.

The National Woman Suffrage meeting.—Mrs. Stanton's anti-Christian tactics.—The National Education Bill.—Pres. J. Blanchard's Address and the Debate which followed.—The Indians and Oklahoma.—A new Colored Society.

Dear Cynosure:—The national convention of Women Suffragists has again been held in this city—this time in the Universalist church. It was large and enthusiastic, and is said to have been the best ever held. There were many speeches of marked ability, and a most hopeful feeling of progress in the movement in which they are engaged. The attendance was large, especially in the evening, and though there is no marked advance in local public sentiment in favor of this movement, it is doubtless growing in public respect. It is to be regretted that Mrs. Stanton should mar her own work by endeavoring to commit the association to an antagonism with the church and the ministry, and, by implication, with Christianity itself. It by no means follows that because the majority of the ministry have accepted of certain interpretations of Scripture that the Christian system is to be held responsible for it. The same sad mistake was made by some who held that because the Bible was interpreted by certain divines as in favor of slavery, therefore, the friends of freedom should array themselves against it. Such a concession was hailed with joy by the slave-holders, and was a most powerful weapon to resist emancipation. Besides, it tended to promote infidelity and to sap the foundations of morality and civilization. The truth is, that the Christian Scriptures are the great charter of human freedom. He who came "to preach deliverance to the captives, the opening of eyes to the blind and to set at liberty them that are bruised," will not fail nor be discouraged till all shackles are removed and until in the state as in the church "there is neither male nor female, but a man shall be more precious than fine gold, and the sons (or daughters) of man than the gold of Ophir." Mrs. Stanton's resolution was adopted with the preamble left out, and simply calls on the churches and the ministry to recognise and urge the claims of woman to an equal citizenship with the rest of mankind.

The Blair Educational bill has been under discussion, and Mr. Evarts, of New York, has made a speech in which he sustains his high reputation as an orator. He held that one of the objects of the government was to "provide for the common defense," and that no danger is more menacing than ignorance. Surely we have more to fear from ignorant, misguided ballots than from bayonets. It would be almost infinitely cheaper, as well as inconceivably better, to educate the heads and hearts of our Southern negros than to control our disorderly elements by force of arms. The school-house and the church are mightier than arsenals and forts. Nevertheless, it is not improbable that this most beneficent measure will be defeated, and mainly by Southern votes.

Last night I had the great pleasure of attending the Bethel Literary Society, in the A. M. E. church on M. street, N. W. No other literary society in the city equals it in ability and enthusiasm. On last night the audience could not have been less than 600, and included the most cultured colored people of the District. Pres. J. Blanchard read a paper, which speaks for itself, on the relation of the colored people to the secret lodge system. It was listened to with the most respectful attention and a vote of thanks to the speaker was adopted. The discussion of the paper, which followed, was most interesting. It was marked by courtesy and good feeling, and if it did not indicate a profound knowledge of the subject, it did an unusual amount of candor and a desire for knowledge. There was perhaps one exception, Hon. J. Milton Turner, formerly U. S. Consul to Liberia, spoke by invitation. He told us he had been a Freemason since he was twenty-one, and that it was one of the most beneficent of institutions. He said that it was religion. Rev. George Moore, pastor of the Lincoln Memorial church, said that it differed from the religion of Christ, and that, as his minister, he must contend for the faith once delivered to the saints, and for a Gospel that is open and free. There were a number of other able speakers and manifestly a large minority, including the more intelligent portion, sympathized with the sentiment of the paper. Considering the exceeding prevalence of the orders in this city, this was a most encouraging fact. It is not probable that any white audience would have considered this matter with so much freedom and calmness. Mr. Turner's speeches were marked by great shrewdness, but would have been more effective if it had not been evident that their inspiration was drawn from the dramshop rather than from the Bible. A large number of copies of the address were distributed in the congregation.

The persistent efforts to call public and official attention to the condition of the Indian race has not been without fruit. It is said that notwithstanding the severe winter, there has been less than usual suffering among that people. This is in part owing to increased attention paid to farming rather than to the chase. The proposal to organize the territory of Oklahoma, whatever may be the result, is meeting a vigorous resistance. Rev. Dr. Sunderland and Mr. Phillips, who are agents for the Cherokees, have appeared before the House Committee on Territories and addressed them in opposition to the measure. Dr. Sunderland may be set down as a friend of the Indians.

Every day secures the presentation of additional petitions for the Educational Temperance bill. There seems to be good reason to hope it will become a law. So fearful are the liquor-dealers of its effect on their business, that their association holds nightly meetings to defeat this and other temperance measures.

There seems to be a deep-seated conviction among the colored people, especially the poorer and more ignorant, that they need some kind of organization besides the church and the state to protect and aid them. This supposed want hasled to the multiplication of that large number of secret orders that, like the flies on Esop's fox, are sucking out their life blood. To meet this want, and as a substitute for the lodge system, some friends of freedom in Baltimore have organized "The Mutual United Brotherhood of Liberty," of which Rev. Harvey Johnson, of Baltimore, is president. This is purely an open organization. I am acquainted with all of its officers, and know them to be anti-secrecy men. It is not restricted to any race or nationality, and has for its primary object to protect personal rights. They have opened a commodious and pleasant office in Baltimore, and have a considerable fund which they can use for the proposed objects. Whether the simile will hold good, and this will prove the more hungry swarm which the fox dreaded, remains to be seen. There can be no doubt, however, about the honest endeavor of the good men, Revs. Johnson, Baxter, Alexander and Brown, who have undertaken this movement. Another thing is not less certain: the state ought to be sufficient for the protection of all its people, and the church ought to be the medium for ministrations to human necessity. This is God's plan and surely it is wiser than man's.

The Senate has just passed a bill appropriating $250,000 for a monument to Gen. Grant, in this city. It will doubtless pass the House, and more marble will be piled up in our city parks. Possibly this is wise, but it seems to me that the Garfield Memorial Hospital is a finer monument than a statue could have been. The birthday of the Father of his country was a national holiday and had an indifferent celebration. The only procession was by the colored troops, a quite too common event to excite much interest except with those who do the marching. If our colored citizens were less fond of show and more practical, it would be wise in them.

H. H. Hinman.

Alluding to the gayety of Washington this year, a writer in the Cleveland Leader says: "Mrs. Bayard's death is another offering upon the funeral pyre of Washington society. There is no doubt that Miss Kate Bayard was killed by social overwork, and the terrible strain which its costume and its duties entailed upon her. Mrs. Endicott has not been well for some time, and a number of the young ladies of the higher circles have suffered greatly from their nightly wining and dining, dancing, reception-going and reception-giving."

CORRESPONDENCE.

A RADICAL LETTER FROM THE FAR NORTH-WEST.

Walla Walla, W. T., Feb. 20, 1886.

Dear Cynosure:—I say amen to Bro. Gault's defense of Bro. Dissette. If the waters of revival meetings were troubled by more such testimony as Bro. Dissette gives, there might be added to the church daily of such as should be saved. Mrs. Jones is a female evangelist who meets with some success, but leaves the discussion of religion to dilate upon the beauties of "Those secret societies whose object and aim is charity and to promote brotherly love." Imagine a secret society apologist in the role of a religious evangelist!

Next Sabbath evening the Knights of Pythias celebrate their aniversary in the Presbyterian church building. Last night they had a masked ball; but this does not seem to be evidence sufficient to exclude them from the churches. My wife and I have refused to contribute to the support of the church of our choice because it will tolerate secretism. I do not fancy communing with those who partake of the cup of devils by night and then are brazen enough to sit at our Lord's table. Never again will we contribute a farthing to any church or society that is not committed against fellowshiping secrecy. Holding the principles we do, we fail to see the consistency of countenacing the conquest of the church by the lodge. Many seem to be deterred from speaking their convictions on the subject by what they call a conservative spirit, and are afraid of being termed radical, fanatical or crazy. May God graciously pour out his Spirit upon us, that we may be purged of this man-fearing disposition and have the courage of our convictions.

Quite a number of the temperance reformers here are members of most of the secret orders. So are saloonists whom they profess to wage war upon. How long will it take the temperance people to see that the lodge power is the mainstay of intemperance and the sole hindrance to prohibition and the enforcement of law against liquor criminals? Local option has passed the territorial assembly and met with the approval of Governor Squiers. If the law is voted here, we expect a diabolical, underhanded resistence to its enforcement, as the saloons are many and strong, and will be assisted in the fight by those (some of them church members) who rent property for liquor, gambling and houses of prostitution.

May God bless the Cynosure and its noble corps of workers. My prayer is in behalf of every afflicted and perseeuted saint connected in the remotest degree with the reform. Bro. Blanchard's Southern tour letters are gems of knowledge and interest. May God extend his life of usefulness yet many years.

GOOD MEN OR BAD.

ALBION, Iowa.

EDITOR CYNOSURE:—A Freemason lately said to me that "Freemasons were good men and he could prove it by the Cynosure." I suppose he had reference to an article in the Cynosure of Dec. 24, 1885, entitled "Plain Talk." I liked the fore part of the article; but when it said, "There were good men who were Freemasons," I took exception to that at once. I cannot understand that a man can go into the lodge denuded of his clothes, all but his shirt, with a rope around his neck, his eyes blinded, and on his knees with the Bible in his hand, take those blasphemous oaths, and call God to witness that should he ever violate this oath to have his throat cut, his tongue torn out and his body buried in the sand below high-water mark; then, after all this, continue to meet with the lodge which is composed of all sorts of characters, the gambler, the profane swearer, the horse-racer, the burglar, the adulterer, the drunkard, the dishonest scoundrel, and take such men by the hand and call them "brother," and be a good man—impossible! If he is a good man he will renounce those blasphemous oaths and come out from among them as Mr. Finney did, and as thousands of other good men have done. A man that denies the Saviour in the lodge is not a good man. "By their fruits ye shall know them." I was twenty years old when that great convention assembled at Leroy in Gennessee county, New York, on the 4th of July, 1828. Those 103 Freemasons by a formal declaration against the Masonic institution, renounced, denounced and exposed Masonry, giving their names, place of residence and number of degrees each had taken. They were good men.

A. C. MOFFATT.

AN HONEST RENUNCIATION.

To whom it may concern:

This certifies that I have renounced and denounced secretism as found in the various secret benevolent and protective organizations, including the I. O. G. T., of which I have been a member for some time. I believe that temperance and charitable work may be better effected by working in the light, than in secret. It is proper that those, for whose benefit we labor, have opportunity to hear and know our deliberation and councils.

A. W. VANALSTINE.

NOTE FROM THE PASTOR OF THE U. B. CHURCH.

Mr. VanAlstine has been a member of the I. O. G. T. for over two years, and being a young man (only past twenty) the lodge easily got a hold upon him, and he was made Deputy G. W. C. T. of Dakota and started out to organize lodges in good faith. I undertook to show him the true tendency of the lodge-power, which he was not long in seeing, although he was not willing for a time to admit that his "order" is in line with the other stepping-stones down to Masonry. I urged him to pray over the matter carefully, in the meantime I prayed for him, and the statement made above is the result. Another young man who is able to serve the Master well is thus saved from the lodge-evil. Mr. VanAlstine is a teacher, and State Editor of the Worker, and is now firm for all lines of reform. C. E. WALKER.

INSTRUCTION WANTED.

Many things in this world are clear and easy to understand; but once in a while I come in contact with something I cannot see through. I study closely, and think diligently, but still all is unintelligible and misty. One of the things over which I have puzzled my brain is the brotherhood claimed, by secret organizations. I know that children of one father are brothers; others might be adopted, which would constitute them sons also, and give them equal rights with the natural children. Then there is the great Christian brotherhood, acknowledging God as the Father, head, and controlling power. All this is plain. But I was at the funeral of a friend a while ago, and after the usual services by the pastor, the chaplain of a uniformed company present read a eulogy on the character of the deceased, in which he frequently referred to him as "our brother." The next day, as I was alone for an hour, the matter came up and I thought it over carefully. That man had died a Christian; and those others standing round, a mixed multitude, found a common platform somewhere on which they met in brotherhood. But where was it? Who could be found as the father of such a brotherhood as that? And so I have been thinking the matter over, but the mystery is not solved. I would like to see through it if I could. But there are wiser heads than mine in the world, and if they will turn their attention to the matter, they may be able to make it all plain to my dull understanding, and dispel the mist now hanging around it. H. H. H.

PITH AND POINT.

A LODGE MEETING AT A FUNERAL.

A near neighbor and an Odd-fellow, a man of some thirty years, died a short time since. The clergyman who led in the religious services was also one of the order. After he concluded the services he requested all to leave the room where the corpse lay, to enable Odd-fellows to perform some secret service over the body that none of the uninitiated were allowed to see. Have you any tract, pamphlet, or book upon this heathen pow-wow?—RICHARD MCCLELLAND, Cannonsburg, Pa.

This is the first case of a secret performance over a dead body we have heard of in modern secretism. The Odd-fellow manuals have no requisition of the sort. This performance must have been an extra, made up for the occasion.

THE UNITED BRETHREN COMMISSION AN "OEFENSE."

He is very much grieved and hurt over the doings of the United Brethren church: in fact, we both are. It is our home now. We are doing what we can to sustain Bro. Dillon, and waiting the result, knowing there is still a God in Israel. There is nothing being done in the anti-secrecy cause here. We have a good anti-secrecy element but it needs agitating. We feel willing to do what little we can to help. We often wish we had a stirring man for a State lecturer.—MRS. W. MILLIGAN (written for her husband), Portland, Ind.

"YE ARE MY WITNESSES."

When God converts a man he does more than one thing for him. When convicted he feels he is a sinner, "in whose breast a thousand thoughts revolve," but when he is converted he gives them all up to God—yes he seeks God with the whole heart; the day he does this he is found of God, saved in Christ. Thank God, we are all the Lord's. Before I was converted to God I desired to join the Masonic lodge. It was one thought that revolved in my soul when convicted, but I gave it to God along with all other thoughts and would not join a lodge except it was essential to salvation. But the Spirit of God would not lead me into the lodge; and I have a right to speak in any of God's meetings when the opportunity presents itself, and say that one of the great things that Jesus does for me is to save me from all desire to belong to any secret society. If reformers do not give in their testimony they will murder their own conscience.—CYRUS SMITH.

STUDIES IN JEWISH HISTORY.

LESSON XI, March 14, 1886.—Esther's Petition. Esther 4: 10–17; 5: 1–3.

GOLDEN TEXT.—So will I go in unto the king, which is not according to law; and if I perish, I perish. Esther 4: 16.

[Open the Bible and read the lesson.]

COMMENTS ON THE LESSON BY E. E. FLAGG.

1. We find our greatest good when we seek the good of others. vs. 10–13. Esther had reason to shrink from the perilous mission with which Mordecai had charged her. She well-knew the passionate, capricious, despotic nature of the king, the inflexibility of the Persian law which punished any intruder into the royal presence with death; and ignorant perhaps of the real magnitude of Haman's plot, it is not strange that she tries to excuse herself from the undertaking by pleading the mortal danger in which it would involve her. But Mordecai's stern answer, "Think not that thou shalt escape in the king's house more than all the Jews," appeals at once to her fears and her patriotism, by reminding her that in spite of her queenly station the blood of the prescribed race runs in her veins. She must dare to lose her life in order to save it. The spirit that is content to selfishly enjoy its own exemption from the evils which others suffer, runs unconsciously the greatest risk. The wretched sanitary conditions which invite typhoid fever or dyphtheria in the crowded tenement house, will spread infection into the palatial homes of the rich. The vice and crime permitted to fester in the slums may come to dominate our cities in the form of riotous mobs. To say of any great evil, "It does not concern me," is to take a very short sighted view of our own interest. We may be indifferent to the rum traffic, and the next time we take a journey be maimed or killed by some accident which it has caused. We may care nothing for the secret society question until socialistic plots endanger our lives and property and force us to care. If a heathen poet could say, "I am a man, and what concerns man concerns me," certainly the Christian should feel that he has a vital interest in all matters which affect the race.

2. To win all we must venture all. vs. 14–17; 1–13. There is inspiration in united prayer, and Esther was doubtless strengthened by the thought that a nation was praying for her—grayheaded men, fair young maidens, innocent little children. She had come to the kingdom for such a time as this, because she accepted her mission when it came. This is where life's greatest mistakes are made. Had Esther proved unequal to the crisis, another deliverer for the Jews might have been raised up, but she could never have been the saviour of her people. If we falter and hesitate, and so lose our life's opportunity, we lose it forever. Esther's faith and courage won her suit, but the only parallel between her and the sinner, or Ahasuerus and Christ, may be said to lie in the striking points of difference. The sinner has a standing invitation to the throne of grace; and his reward for venturing is not half the kingdom but the whole of it,—"an inheritance incorruptible, undefiled, and that fadeth not away."

LIGHT FROM THE WORD.

What was Paul's spirit of self-sacrifice for others? Acts 20: 24. Where do we find an instance of the value of united prayer? Acts 12: 5.

From Peloubet's Notes.

Xerxes, the Persian Emperor.—Xerxes (the Greek form of Ahasuerus) was the son of Darius Hytaspes, and reigned over the Persian empire for 21 years (B. C. 486–465). This empire was larger than any previous one known in the world, and surrounded its chief with almost unimaginable splendor and wealth. The martial deeds of Xerxes are fully told by Grecian historians, especially Herodotus and Xenophon. According to Herodotus, Xerxes held an assembly to arrange for the Grecian war in the third year of his reign, and it is probably this feast which is described in the first chapter of the book of Esther, as given to the nobles of the realm, assembled at Shushan from all parts of the empire. It lasted 180 days, or six months, and was concluded by a feast with broader invitations to all in the palace. This lasted seven days; and it was at the close of this feast, when the king was excited with wine and revelry, that he offered the insult to his queen which led to her removal.

An interval of four years occurs before a new queen is found in place of Vashti. It was during this interval that his great invasion of Greece took place. "Dipping his pen in the life-blood of Persia's noblest, he well wrote for himself a record on fame's glittering temple."—Van Dyke. "It is said that the army with which he invaded Greece numbered 5,283,220 souls, exclusive of women and other attendants. This multitude was met at Themopylæ by Leonidas and his three hundred Spartans, at whose hands twenty thousand Persians fell, Aug. 7, 480, B. C. Two months later the Persians were terribly defeated in the great naval battle of Salamis. Themistocles, with 380 Greek vessels, defeated Xerxes with 2,000 sail. This disaster was closely followed by others, which compelled Xerxes to abandon the field and return home," with scarcely 5,000 soldiers left of all the multitude with which he set out.

Why would not Mordecai bow before Haman? It was because in so doing he would have been untrue to his God and his religion. "The Persians," says Curtius, "not only from motives of piety, but from prudence also, worship their kings as gods." So that the act of prostration before Haman would be understood to imply worship or religious homage. Herodotus mentions certain Greeks, who, on being introduced to the royal presence at Susa, and being pressed to prostrate themselves before the king, refused, alleging that "it was not their custom to worship a man (8: 36)."—Haley's Book of Esther.

According to Esther 6: 4, 5, and Herodotus 3: 140, any man might present himself in the outer court, and seek and await audience with the king. Why did not Esther avail herself of this privilege? (1) It might have been deemed an unseemly thing for the queen to present herself in the manner of a common suppliant, and have ruined her hopes. (2) It may be that women were not allowed in the outer court at all.—Haley. From Oriental customs we may be sure that the last reason is correct, and this would give double force to the first.

"Who knoweth whether thou art come," etc. The providences that brought you there are wonderful. Perhaps God's hand shaped them, that you might be the saviour of your people in this terrible emergency.—Cowles. It is a great blessing to have some work assigned us by God, and to see God's hand in our lives, accomplishing that work. This makes us strong, and renders life glorious, since it is a plan of the almighty and all-wise God.

—The Massachusetts papers tell of a lady in Sharon Heights who died under the care of a Taunton "mind doctor." He never saw the sick woman, but said he could prescribe just as well. So he sent postal cards and a root medicine daily, and, looking into the dim distance, would write down on the card her state of health. She died the other day, but the postals came all the same and root medicine too. The first day after the patient's death, the doctor wrote: "I find you about the same; the acid in the blood has diminished." The second day after the death, he wrote: "I find you about the same; a little better, if anything."—Ex.

—A large number of missionaries in Japan, sent out by American sectarian churches becoming convinced that their divisions were a hindrance to to the Gospel, have united their churches into one body, known as the church of Christ in Japan. The increase in membership within two years has been about 70 per cent. It appears that the Japanese Christians do not fancy nicknames.

AMERICAN PLATFORM.

Viewing with deep concern the corrupt and unsettled condition of American politics, and witnessing with alarm the fearful prevalence of caste and clannishness by which our citizens are being arrayed in hostile bands, working secretly to compass political ends, a method directly and powerfully tending to increase corruption, to destroy mutual confidence, and hasten disruption and bloodshed; and having no hope of adequate remedy for these evils from existing parties, and believing the foundation of a party based upon the fundamental principles of the Declaration of American Independence, both inevitable and indispensable:

We, therefore, a portion of the American people, believing with our fathers that we have our rights and liberties, not from men or parties, but from God; believing in the Christian marriage, and not in Mormonism; believing in the religious democracy of the New Testament, and not in the despotism of the lodge; believing, also, with our Scotch and English ancestors, that civil government, though ordained in God, is "founded in nature, not in grace," and, therefore, that all have equal civil rights; while we abhor the idea of enforcing religion or controlling conscience by human laws and penalties as calculated to make hypocrites, not Christians, and savoring of the days of priestism, the fagot and the stake, we at the same time as firmly believe that atheism and priestcraft are twins and both alike foes to human liberty and welfare. We further most firmly believe that a government without God has none but lynch power, and is destitute of all legitimate authority to maintain civil order, to swear a witness, to try a criminal, to hang a murderer, to imprison a thief; and while we consider government without God as a mere usurpation, we regard all religions and worships invented by men, and so having no higher than human origin, as mere swindling impositions and cheats. We believe in peace and in national arbitration as a means of perpetuating it; yet we as profoundly believe that the bravery and blood of our soldiers have bought us the peace which we enjoy, and we honor the memories of the dead and will be just to the claims of the living; and we take up and prolong the strain raised by the women of this country: "For God, and home, and native land," and trust that this beautiful and patriotic motto will soon be not only echoed by their voices, but sustained by their votes.

We, therefore, solemnly adopt and present the following, as containing a brief synopsis of the principles of our government, by which we intend to be governed in casting our votes. We hold:

1. That ours is a Christian and not a heathen nation, and that the God of the Christian Scriptures is the author of civil government.
2. That the Bible should be associated with books of science and literature in all our educational institutions.
3. That God requires, and man needs a Sabbath.
4. We demand the prohibition of the importation, manufacture, and sale of intoxicating drinks.
5. We hold that the charters of all secret lodges granted by our Federal and State Legislatures should be withdrawn, and their oaths prohibited by law.
6. We are opposed to putting prison labor or depreciated contract labor from foreign countries in competition with free labor to benefit manufacturers, corporations or speculators.
7. We are in favor of a revision and enforcement of the laws concerning patents and inventions; for the prevention and punishment of frauds either upon inventors or the general public.
8. We hold to and will vote for woman suffrage.
9. That the civil equality secured to all American citizens by Articles 13, 14 and 15 of our amended National Constitution should be preserved inviolate, and the same equality should be extended to Indians and Chinamen.
10. That international differences should be settled by arbitration.
11. That land and other monopolies should be discouraged.
12. That the general government should furnish the people with an ample and sound currency
13. That it should be the settled policy of the government to reduce tariffs and taxes as rapidly as the necessities of revenue and vested business interests will allow.
14. That polygamy should be immediately suppressed by law, and that the Republican party is censurable for the long neglect of its duty in respect to this evil.
15. And, finally, we demand for the American people the abolition of electoral colleges, and a direct vote for President and Vice President of the United States.

The Christian Cynosure.

EDITORS.

J. BLANCHARD. HENRY L. KELLOGG.

CHICAGO, THURSDAY, MARCH 4, 1886.

THE EDITOR OF THE NATIONAL REPUBLICAN, Washington D. C., Mr. Allen, says he hates and fortells prohibition, that he can show that "Maine and Iowa are worse off than when they moved for prohibition" etc., and he goes for license and regulation. That Republicans, Mrs. Ellen Foster included, should claim that party as a prohibition party in the face of its organs, is an absurdity only transcended by the hope of the Republican party to triumph in 1888 in contempt of the swarming Prohibitionists.

The lull in politics is like that which precedes the storm. The lodge and liquor have an Ætna and Vesuvius of wrath and falsehoods to pour out when prohibition shakes off the lodge and the issue is fairly made up.

THE EVANGELIST SMALL must not be misjudged by the note in our columns on the probability of his connection with the Freemasons. He cordially received the secretary and treasurer of the N. C. A. last week in his room in the Sherman House, and conversed with them frankly and in a Christian spirit. He was never a Freemason, but the fact that his father gave much attention to the order, and took many degrees probably accounts for his occasional use of Masonic terms. His mother was as devoted to the Christian church as his father was to the lodge. About a year and a half before his death she had the blessed satisfaction of seeing her husband happily converted to God, and knowing that he renounced the world and died a Christian man. After this good news, we hope to learn also that the cigarette has been put away—it is a stone over which many young men and boys of Chicago will stumble into ruin. Mr. Small was joined by Mr. Jones last Sabbath and both spoke in different parts of the city to crowded audiences.

THE EDITOR'S APPOINTMENTS.

The address of the editor of the Cynosure was an occasion of some moment among the colored people of that city as may be seen in the Washington letter, but more especially in the graphic account from the pastor of Lincoln Memorial church. We have therefore printed the address nearly in full, for our readers who will find it worth their attention.

The movements of Pres. Blanchard in the immediate future are told in the following note from Cincinnati Saturday last:

I spend Sabbath, to-morrow, at Clifton, Cincinnati; expect to preach in the Presbyterian church there. Notices are given for speaking in Lane Theological Seminary Chapel on Monday evening; also at the colored church on 7th near Central avenue on Wednesday evening.

Also on next Sabbath arrangements are made in Dayton, Ohio, for three meetings. In the morning in the Presbyterian church, Summit street; in the afternoon in the United Brethren Theological Seminary Chapel, at night again in the Presbyterian church in Summit street. W. B. Stoddard is with me and divides the labor. Those in Ohio and Indiana who wish meetings please write me at Dayton at once, care Dr. L. Davis. Please "pray without ceasing."

J. BLANCHARD.

DR. NATHAN BROWN.

The Japan Weekly Mail, of Yokohama, Jan 16th, brings us the most unwelcome news of the death of Dr. Brown, at his residence in that city on New Year's day at 10:30 in the evening. He was buried on the following Monday, his body being borne to the grave by Japanese Christians, in accordance with his special request. Thus passed away in his 79th year one of the most remarkable of American missionaries. He united with the people of God in church relation in his 9th year, and graduated at Williams College in his 21st, as the head of a class of thirty, Mark Hopkins and Samuel Ireneus Prime being among his student mates. In 1832 he went as missionary to Burmah and Assam accompanied by his wife. Three children were buried in those inhospitable regions, where the missionaries suffered severely at times from native animosity. In 1846, fourteen years later, Mrs. Brown returned to America with two living children, but rejoined her husband three years later. Both returned to their native land in 1855, Dr. Brown's health being considered wrecked, both in body and mind. Health, however, returned, and he became associated with the American Baptist, as editor, a position he held for fifteen years. During these years he was warmly identified with the anti-lodge reform, writing powerfully in the Baptist and attending the early conventions of the National Christian Association. His able address at the Cincinnati Convention, in May, 1870, was published and will long be remembered. He continued to receive the Cynosure till his death, and was always glad to hear of the progress of the reform, which he had assisted to inaugurate. On account of these principles he was largely, we believe, sustained in Japan by Peter Howe, of Wenona, Ill., a warm supporter of the reform. He was also a champion in the abolition cause, and his pronounced views and unflinching adherence to what he believed to be right sometimes brought him into difficulty and danger, and was the occasion of the mobbing of his office in New York.

His wife died in 1871, and next year, though already an old man, he returned to the missionary field; this time to Japan, where he engaged so vigorously in acquiring the language that in 1879 he had completed the translation of the New Testament from the Greek into Japanese. He composed and translated also many hymns in Japanese. Few Europeans have so long lived in Asia as he—thirty-four years. He was also enabled to translate the New Testament and parts of the Old into Assamese and Japanese. His hymns were also sung in Burmese, Assamese and Japanese. During his long missionary career he was literally "in journeyings often, in perils of waters, in perils of robbers, in perils among his own countrymen, in perils by the heathen, in perils in the city, in perils in the wilderness, in perils in the sea, in perils among false brethren."

CAPITAL AND LABOR.

The labor reformers in the French Chamber of Deputies have sent word to their co-workers in the British House of Commons proposing an interuational movement for laboring men, the main objects of which are to secure a reduction in the hours of labor, improvement in the sanitary condition of workshops, proper limits to the work obtained of women and minors, and an absolute prohibition against allowing children of either sex under fourteen years of age to work at all in shops or factories. The telegram suggests that the workmen of those countries unite in an invitation to the workmen of Europe and America to send delegates to a congress to be held next September in a place to be designated, for the purpose of discussing means to "emancipate the workmen of all countries."

The reforms suggested are reasonable, and a great convention urging them upon the attention of legislatures, if controlled by the real friends of labor, ought to secure the attention of all republican and Christian nations. Even the eight hour system we believe might, with mutual benefit to all classes, be adopted generally, as well as by our Government alone. The improved machinery of our day doubles the power of manual labor, and if a resonable adjustment can be made by manufacturers, they, as well as workingmen, may be the gainers by such a movement. It would give the laborer time for social and religious duties, and especially for such as are demanded by his family, now too often neglected. Such a change will be an opportunity for the Christian church which she should be ready to improve to the utmost.

There is one most important item left out of this list of reforms. The adjustment of all questions of difference between employer and employed ought to be settled by arbitration, and provision should be made for this by law. It has occasionally been adopted and always with benefit; but it is a method not often to the liking of the lodges, which bind the workingmen by secret oaths in a more desperate bondage than capital can devise. The business men and laborers of Richmond, Virginia, have wisely come together and agreed on such a settlement of their difficulties. Had an arbitration been held in the McCormick case in this city there would not as we write be such a dread of bloodshed.

After being closed for nearly two weeks, the McCormick reaper factory in this city opened, Monday, and some 350 men ventured to return to work. But only the presence of 400 policemen made this possible. Dozens of loud-mouthed lodge-men, all armed with pistols, were arrested, some of them after threatening to use their weapons. The employes of the establishment have all along assured Mr. McCormick that they would accept his terms, but they were too much in the power of the lodge leaders to venture on any general proposition to return to work. What may yet be the result must depend on the firmness of the police in protecting from assault men who need bread for their households.

—Secretary Stoddard went to Paxton Friday evening, expectiug to speak there and hoping to find also an opening in Champaign this week.

—The Ohio agent went last week to Cincinnati to meet Pres. J. Blanchard aud assist in arranging a series of meetings in that part of Ohio.

—The latest from George W. Clark is a hopeful promise of his recovery. The severe cough which promised for a time to cut him down is relaxing, aud he yet hopes to see the birds of spring.

—Let all our Iowa friends read Bro. Hawley's letter and be diligeut in taking heed thereto. The N. C. A. has furuished Iowa one of our best lecturers for six months; now let the State be self-supporting and the National Association be released to look after other more needy districts.

—Rev. L. B. Dennis, a prominent preacher in the Methodist Episcopal church in Iowa, was once a Mason and Grand Chaplain of a Grand Lodge. He has now left the order and jnstifies the separation of the Free Methodist brethren from the old church, under the lead of Rev. B. T. Roberts and others.

—Bro. Loggan in Kansas has been much hindered during the past five weeks by the deep snows that preveuted the use of his own conveyance. He made, however, the best possible use of his time preaching in protracted meetings and lecturing as often as an occasion opened. He gave two lectures week before last.

—We have neglected to notice the visit of Rev. Mr. Wylie, of Ray, Indiana, to Wheaton College not long since. Like Bro. Gault, he represents the National Reform Association of Philadelphia, and, in a course of five lectures to the students of the institution, expounded the principles of that important movement with great clearness and force.

—Bro. Countee's letter last week mentioned several pastors in western Tennessee who had come to the light in Christ on the lodge question. To their names may be added that of Rev. A. T. Stewart who has lately removed to Brinkley, Tenn., and who writes: "I am now doing all I can for the circulation of this paper [Cynosure] among the members of the church of which I am pastor."

—Rev. C. L. Harris of Jackson, Miss., who spoke ably on the lodge at Wheaton and before the Chicago Congregational ministers last fall, writes: "Our work here is still progressing finely, notwithstanding we are surrounded by fearful odds. But God will protect and sustain the right at whatever cost. I think it a grand thing that you have published the colored orders, and the letters of Pres. Blanchard will tell for the right."

—A note from Bro. D. L. Schively of Raleigh, North Carolina, tells us that George C. Needham, the evangelist, for several years pastor of the Chicago Avenue church in this city, has been preaching in that city to crowded houses. In one of his discourses he witnessed against the lodge by warning Christians to be separate from snch combinations of unbelievers. "You join secret societies to leaven them," he said, "and they leaven you."

—The Bible Banner of Philadelphia, which has, from its first number under the editorial charge of Rev. A. A. Phelps some fifteen years ago, been with us heartily against lodgery, has just removed to Chicago and has opened its office in the metropolis of the lakes in room No. 35, Central Mnsic Hall building, corner of State aud Randolph streets. We heartily welcome the Banner to Chicago, and pray that its influence may be felt for Christ and his kingdom in this great and wicked city.

—A lodge journal says: "At the last meeting of the Grand Lodge of Washington it was resolved 'that hereafter any person engaged in the manufacture or sale of intoxicating liquors, for other than medicinal or sacramental purposes, shall not be eligible to the degrees of Freemasonry in this jnrisdiction.'" This is very well for morality, but it is not Masonry in any special sense. So do not let the temperance papers, for the sake of their lodge readers, print it as proof that the Masonic lodge is a temperance society.

—Bro. J. W. Wood will fiud a suggestion for another argument on the lodge insurance business in this note from the Wesleyan Methodist: "The Grand Lodge of A. O. U. W., at its meeting in Syracuse, appointed a committee to investigate the 'assessments' made so often npon them by the National Lodge. It looks as though these frequent assessments to pay on the death of some unknown, in some unknown parts of the country, are a swindle. These assessments are declared 'a burden' as they come so thick and fast. While the Grand Lodge of the State of New York swindle their members out of over $21,000 a year for 'expenses,' the State lodge ought not to be snrprised if other and superior lodges swindle them in their turn. There is a financial swindle at the bottom of this whole secret society business. Beware!"

DID THE LODGE DEFEAT BLAINE.

A typographical contest for the championship in type-setting has just terminated in Chicago. Looking in upon it we saw, over the New York "cases," in large letters, "Boycott the New York Tribune!" "What does that mean?" was asked of a Chicago typo standing near. "The New York Tribune employs non-union type-setters and of course the union is down on it," was the reply. "It taught the Tribune a thing or two, in the Presideutial contest" he continued. The Typographical Union controls many thousand votes in New York, and orders were sent to all not to vote for the Tribune's candidate. These orders of course, had to be obeyed, and I shouldn't wonder if it was this that beat Blaine." But we do not recall any vials of wrath poured out on the heads of the boycotting type-setters; these were all reserved for the women, who having no votes could only "lend their influence."—Union Signal.

REFORM NEWS.

PRESIDENT BLANCHARD'S WASHINGTON ADDRESS

ON THE SECRET LODGE SYSTEM, BEFORE THE BETHEL LITERARY ASSOCIATION.

One of the largest, most representative and interesting meetings ever held under the auspices of the Bethel Literary and Historical Association gathered at the Metropolitan A. M. E. church last evening, to hear Dr. Blanchard's address on "The Influence of the Secret Lodge System on the Destiny of the American Colored Race, and through them on the United States." After prayer and the reading of the minutes of the previous meeting the president of the Association, Lewis Douglass, Esq., son of Hon. Frederick Douglass, introduced Dr. Blanchard as the speaker of the evening.

The address, speaker and occasion will long be remembered. The introduction of the paper, reviewing the speaker's patriotism, anti-slavery struggles, and his service in behalf of the complete liberty of the colored American, prepared the way for the masterly address which followed, every word of which was listened to with undivided attention from beginning to end. At the close of the address five hundred printed copies of the address were distributed among the immense audience. Every body clamored for a copy. The paper was discussed pro and con for an hour or more. The discussion was animated, able and good natured. There were no pauses in the debate; as soon as a speaker's time expired, four or five persons would be on the floor at once, and as soon as the president recognized the first to catch his eye all would be seated and absorbed in the debate. The occasion resembled a scene in Congress.

Mr. Deane, the first speaker, paid a glowing tribute to Dr. Blanchard's services in behalf of liberty and reform, but felt impelled to support "the secret lodge system" as represented by Masonry. He was followed by Mr. Jesse Lawson, a young man of fine ability, who ably supported the paper. He said that the paper was a classic, and the most important subject that had been read before the Association. Said he, "If I were to run for an office in the District of Columbia, it would be suicidal for me to speak what I am about to assert." He thereupon drew up a fearful indictment against the secret lodge system, charging it as one of the chief sources of poverty, ignorance and crime among the colored people.

Hon. J. Milton Turner, ex-Minister to Liberia, was the chief defender of the secret lodge system. Among other fallacies he set Masonry forth as a religion destined to uplift humanity. The Sermon on the Mount was made to support the secret lodge system: the following passage was made to endorse secrecy: "But thou, when thou prayest, enter into thy closet, and when thou hast shut thy door, pray to thy Father which is in secret; and thy Father, which seeth in secret shall reward thee openly." He claimed the blessing of Matthew 5: 11–12 for Masonry which is being persecuted by its enemies. Giving Masonry the rank of a religion brought the young ministry to the front in defense of the faith as it was once delivered to the saints.

Rev. G. W. Moore, pastor of the Lincoln Memorial Congregational church, made a vigorous attack on the secret lodge system's claim to be a religion, asserting that if it is a religion, it was a false religion, as Christianity is the only religion with Christ as its founder, the cross its symbol, and the Gospel its exponent. Christ established a church and not a lodge. If the lodge is wearing the livery of religion it should be exposed and vigorously opposed.

Rev. W. H. Brooks, pastor of the First Baptist church, severely criticised Mr. Turner's perversion of the Scriptures in the support of Masonry. The paper was further discussed by several other gentlemen. The majority of the addresses were in support of the paper. Several of the speakers said that they were on the anxious seat, and that they felt grateful for the helpful paper, and the discussion it had awakened. A hearty and unanimous vote of thanks was extended to Pres. Blanchard for his able address.

The paper, as shown by the discussion, was timely and will do great good. The subject will doubtless come up in the meeting again for discussion. The secret lodge system received a stunning blow, as probably nine-tenths of the audience were members of secret organizations.

Dr. Blanchard preached a sermon of great spiritual power from the text, "Christ hath abolished death," at the Lincoln Memorial church last Sunday morning. GEORGE W. MOORE.

Washington, D. C., Feb. 24.

FROM THE GENERAL AGENT.

To Champaign via Paxton.—The Officials of the former city in and out of the Lodge.—The Pastors visited.—The effect of Bro. Dissette's visit.

CHAMPAIGN, Ill., Feb. 27, 1886.

Leaving Chicago last evening, I reached Paxton, and after an hour of hearty good cheer this morning with Rev. W. W. Blanchard, so long and favorably known as the standard bearer of anti-lodge reform in Ford county, I spent what remained of the forenoon in looking up friends. The greeting from Dea. Bushnell was most cordial and his suggestions wise and timely. Meeting Rev. Edgren where he was instructing a class of about twenty-five pupils, I made partial arrangements to return and speak to his people on Monday and Tuesday evenings of next week. Rev. Mr. Morrow gave his pledge of hearty co-operation with other friends. Less than an hour's ride brought me to this city of 7,500 inhabitants, and I began first to make the acquaintance of ministers and city officials. In the absence of Mr. Wilder, the pastor of the Presbyterian church, Mrs. Wilder gave me quite a minute history of affairs connected with Bro. Dissette's visit. Her husband coming in, gave me his view of the matter, and kindly accompanied me to the office of Dea. Beardsley, who paid Bro. Dissette's fine and secured his release from jail. He gave me his version of the case, and stated that he was a non-affiliated Odd-fellow. My next call was at the office of Justice Bryan, who assured me that he was never connected with any secret society, and from others I learned he was an active member of the Baptist church and superintendent of the Sabbath-school. He showed me the warrant under which Bro. D. was arrested. I next met Mayor Beach, who is free from all secret societies and sees no use for them in a free country like ours. He knew nothing of the unpleasantness about Bro. D. until it was all over. "I don't want you to go away thinking we are heathen or opposed to free speech," he said. I replied, "It's a pretty serious matter when a minister is incarcerated in a filthy prison, and is proof of a grievous wrong somewhere." Encountering the marshal, I explained to him my mission, and asked from him the freedom of the town, which he guaranteed on conditions of good behavior. I did not ask him, but from others learned that he is a Mason.

My next call was on the pastor of the Congregational church, who properly excused himself from extending to me the hospitality of his home on account of sickness in his family. He spoke very freely, fully and kindly of Bro. Dissette. My most extended interview was with the pastor of the M. E. church, who gave me much information respecting the attitude of clergymen in his own connection on the subject of secret societies. The Baptist church was without a pastor during the week of prayer, a Bro. Jones acting as leader at the time Bro. Dissette spoke in the church.

No door has as yet opened for me to speak on the Sabbath, but I feel I am getting somewhat acquainted and taking the measure and learning the attitude of the leading men of the town. It is quite evident that Bro. Dissette's labors here have caused much talk, and more thinking, on the lodge question. I open the "Directory" and find twelve different lodges advertised, yet I am told they exert no perceptible influence in the community. I met a legal gentleman on the train to-day from Danville, who was of quite a different opinion respecting matters in his town; and a lady whose wedded experience had been with a husband who belonged to the Masons, Odd-fellows, Knights of Pythias and Temple of Honor, did not fail to note the absence of her companion four nights in the week and its effect upon her husband and every other member of the household. I shall "watch and pray" for an opportunity to open my mouth boldly before leaving the place, for it is evident that the "uninitiated" in Champaign need "more light on Masonry." J. P. STODDARD.

REPORT FROM MICHIGAN.

The Lights and Shadows of a Colporteur's Life.—A Hopeful Month.—The next State Meeting.

Bro. Tucker has closed his first month. For lack of funds we fear he must be recalled.

He reports success; has nearly collected his expenses. In his travels he has visited Bedford and vicinity, Hickory Corners, Battle Creek, Concord, Jackson, Horton, Hanover, etc., everywhere witnessing good results. At Concord, his former worshipful master threatened to bruise his face. At another place the man of the house ordered him to take his books and leave, but brother Tucker maintained his position, making favorable impressions upon the wife, who was all the while opposed to the lodge. The Catholic priest of Battle Creek bought a book and expressed sympathy for the cause. One man was found to sympathize to the amount of ten dollars, and paid the money. Others gave less, while some railed and threatened.

Let readers of the Cynosure, who are willing, send subscriptions for the furtherance of this good work to me at once, and let us see what can be done in our State.

We must have a State meeting in April. Where shall it be? The call should be sent out soon. Let us have an invitation somewhere, or let several invitations be sent to my address, and then the committee can decide, and the notice be published.

THE IOWA NEWS-LETTER.

Lectures in Kossuth.—Birmingham fulfilling Scripture.—The Lutheran State Conference.—A warm Welcome and pleasant Acquaintances.—A Vacation.—An Arraignment and Appeal.

WHEATON, Ill., Feb. 22, 1886.

DEAR CYNOSURE:—I lectured according to appointment in the Swedish Lutheran church, near Kossuth, Iowa, Rev. Mr. Nelson, pastor. The truth was received without a ripple of dissent by his people. I formed a very pleasant acquaintance with Rev. Mr. Nelson, as I had with Rev. Franzen, of Swedesburge, before. I arranged with pastors Franzen and Nelson to go with them to Marshalltown to attend the Iowa Conference of their church.

I went from Rev. Nelson's church to the Oakland school-house, where there are several Covenanter families, to fill an appointment made for me by Rev. Mr. Dill. The rain, the darkness and the bad going were against this meeting, but, notwithstanding, the attendance was very fair.

After this I spent a little time between trains in Fairfield, distributing tract literature. I was amused to hear one gentleman, as he looked at the tract I gave him, inquire, "Are you from Birmingham?" I thought of what the Saviour said about placing lighted candles on candlesticks, instead of under beds; and rejoiced that Birmingham was as a city set upon a hill.

The following week I attended the Swedish Lutheran Conference at Marshalltown. Here I was very hospitably entertained in the family of Mr. Peterson, a member of the Swedish Lutheran church of Marshalltown. The pastor, who is a young man, boards with Bro. Peterson. The Rev. brother, who had been President of the conference for six successive years, also boarded at the same place, and was my room-mate. I formed a very pleasant and interesting acquaintance with both of these ministerial brethren. Before I left, the president of their college at Rock Island, Ill., came and made his home with us, and I had the pleasure of making his acquaintance. He spoke of the time when he and Pres. J. Blanchard were neighbors and friends in Galesburg, Ill.

The Conference gave me one of their evenings for a lecture. I spoke to them of the infidel character of the religious philosophy of Freemasonry. They listened with profound attention, and at the conclusion the pastor thanked me, in behalf of the Conferenee, for the lecture. The pastor of the United Presbyterian church was present and conducted the religious services. They showed their readiness to aid in freeing the Ameriean churches from the poluting embrace of the lodge by voluntarily taking up a collection in aid of the National Christian Association.

THE HOME.

GOD'S LOVE.

As flows the river, calm and wide,
In silence toward the sea,
So floweth ever and ceaseth never
The love of God to me.

What peace He bringeth to my heart,
Deep as the soundless sea,
How sweetly singeth the soul that clingeth,
My loving Lord, to thee.

As calm at evening sinks the sun
Into the boundless west,
So, tempest driven, into the heaven,
I reached my longed for rest.

SPIRIT-GIFTS.

BY REV. JOHN G. HALL, D. D.

They are not those of sense; we do not see them with our eyes, we do not hear them with our ears; we do not handle them with our hands. The kingdom of sense is what we are naturally inclined to, even in religion. But the gifts of God's Spirit are for our inward souls, not for our outward senses.

Of the many gifts of God's Spirit to his people, there may be especially mentioned:

1. Truth-gifts. Our Saviour is very particular to call the Holy Spirit "the Spirit of truth." On all points of religious truth, therefore, every one to whom God has given his Spirit will think as God thinks, in his revealed thoughts, according to his honest apprehension of these thoughts. About creation, about providence, about grace, he will believe what he understands the Spirit as teaching him in the Bible. God's Spirit never imparts to his people unbelief in his Word. All his children "walk in the truth."

2. Faith-gifts, or what might very properly and significantly be called Christ-gifts, since the faith that God's Spirit imparts has Christ as its peculiar object in regard to salvation, as he himself says, "If ye believe not that I am he, ye shall die in your sins." The Spirit of God brings the soul to the Son of God, so that they take the very name of this Son and are called Christians.

It is narrated of an old disciple, near death, and who had lost all common memory of persons and things, that he was asked in vain, "Do you know me? Do you know this one, and that one?" His constantly reiterated answer was, "No, no." He did not remember his own wife, nor his own children. But when asked, "Do you know Jesus Christ?" he instantly responded, "Oh, yes; I know him! He is my Saviour." That name seemed to be written upon his heart as with a diamond's point. It was a Christ-gift of God's Spirit to him which age and nature-decay had failed to take from him.

3. Virtue-gifts, of which there is a large cluster, all of which nestle, as it were, under the wing of that celestial dove, the Spirit of God. They are sometimes called "the fruits of the Spirit," as "love, joy, peace, longsuffering, gentleness, goodness, faith, meekness, temperance, against which there is no law." A heavenly brood, indeed, for which God expects us to make room, if we make room within us for his Spirit.

4. Comfort-gifts, as our Saviour himself names the Spirit the "Comforter." And these comfort-gifts, in their outward form, are mainly the promises, as in this one, "I will be a Father unto you, and ye shall be my sons and my daughters, saith the Lord Almighty." What an ocean of comfort is in this thought if the soul can really and fully grasp it! Indeed, all the promises of God to his people are "exceeding great and precious," reaching unto great things, and being beyond all price.

So that, on the whole, the way that we may know whether or not we are the people of God, is to notice how his Spirit works within us. Our own spirits form the pulse upon which we are to put our finger, if we would know whether the Spirit of Gods dwells within us. If the two spirits agree, concur, or harmonize, then, in the language of the Scriptures, they may be judged as "dwelling" together, having "fellowship" one with the other; and so making a union that is the earnest of our eternal salvation. For "as many as are led by the Spirit of God, they are the sons of God." And it is "the Spirit that beareth witness with our Spirit that we are the children of God."—Am. Messenger.

HONORING THE HOLY SPIRIT.

It is related that at the close of an evening service, conducted by Mr. Moody, in the early part of his evangelistic career, he was met by an aged Christian, who, with fatherly tenderness, said, "My dear young brother, always honor the Holy Spirit in all your work."

This simple remark proved a precious seed-thought and suggestion in the heart of this faithful servant, who, in seeking to honor the Holy Spirit, has been so signally honored of God in bringing sinners to Christ.

There is reason to think that the office and work of the Holy Spirit does not hold the place that it ought in the heart and faith of professed believers. In an introductory note to an edition of "The Tongue of Fire," Dr. W. M. Taylor very truly says: "Though we are living under the dispensation of the Spirit, it is remarkable that the work of the Holy Ghost has not received anything like the attention it demands and deserves. Few sermons are preached upon it—few treatises are written upon it—it does not enter as it ought to do into the thoughts and prayers of the people of God; and in this, perhaps, more than in most other things, we may find the explanation of the comparative feebleness and inefficiency of modern piety."

In the words of authority that fell from the lips of Jesus, there are none that convey a more explicit message than those that refer to the mission and work of the promised Comforter. It will avail but little, however beautiful a conception we may have of Christ, if we fail in our faith and teaching to show that only a heart renewed by the Holy Ghost can be saved by this divine life. There is a possibility of preaching or teaching a Christ-like morality that is very noble and exalted, but it has no saving quality beyond other lofty standards of morality. It does not redeem men from their sins.

In honoring the Holy Spirit by the surrender of our souls in personal faith, and humble, trustful reliance in his work and power, we shall so voice the truth that it will be made savingly efficient. We ought not to rest satisfied until we see the truth leading to repentance and faith in the Lord Jesus Christ; for then alone is witnessed on the human side a change of which regeneration is the divine side. The more we come into vital contact and sympathy with the work of the Holy Spirit, we shall be faithful and direct in presenting the truth, of lesson and sermon, in ways that shall reach, by the divine blessing, the citadel of the will. Our duty is to bring ourselves and others face to face with the Holy Spirit. Let us not shrink from dwelling upon his office and power because the work wrought is mysterious. In this very fact we discover an assurance that the Gospel is life eternal, and not simply a code of morality.

To be filled with the Holy Ghost! Is there any secret of power, in guiding and saving souls, to be compared with this? We need, as teachers of the Word, that is made effectual by the Holy Spirit, not only to believe in the baptism of fire, but earnestly to seek for this enduement with power from on high. When this gift shall be more generally sought and used, may we not hope to see the opening of a new book of the Acts that will disclose chapters of redeeming love and grace more wonderful than any the world has as yet witnessed?—Rev. E. B. Sanford in S. S. Times.

CHRISTIANS OR CRIMINALS—WHICH?

Chaplain Bass, of the Brooklyn penitentiary, says that twenty years ago only about five per cent of the prisoners had previously been Sabbath-school pupils, but that now seventy-five per cent of actual and supposed criminals have been such. It is a sad showing. Pastor Crafts gives an account of an inebriate asylum where the per cent is eighty, and another of fallen women where all have been in Sabbath-schools. He thinks the cause is to be found in the lack of fidelity on the part of parents and teachers. This, no doubt, has much to do with it. As a rule, instruction is not what it ought to be, either in the home or school. But there is another conspicuous cause: the lack of the religious influence which the pulpit and the public worship are calculated to exert. The Sabbath-school is now almost universally made a substitute for the sanctuary. Attendance on the former is thought to obviate the necessity of attendance on the latter. When the school hour immediately precedes that of public worship, the incoming worshipers are met by a crowd of youth going away to their homes or to loiter about the streets. When the pastor rises in his pulpit to begin the service, a glance over the congregation makes him painfully aware of their absence. The very material that might be wrought into forms of beauty is beyond his reach. The seed which he had hoped to sow in rich, mellow, virgin soil, he must scatter on hard ground or among thorns. Is it any wonder that he is often discouraged, that the people find something lacking in the services, and that the young are not converted? The fact is, the Sabbath school, instead of being the nursery of the church as formerly, is in too many instances made a pretext for the desertion of the sanctuary at the hour of public worship, by the very class that must supply the material for the church of the future, if there is to be such a church.—Interior.

FAITH CURE.

Mrs. Mahan had a cancer in the breast, which had eaten into her lungs, and was frequently discharging blood from her mouth. The best medical authorities deemed death inevitable from this cancer, and near at hand. At the same time she had a tumor, so located as to be inaccessible to surgical operation, which also gave her great pain. This, too, was declared incurable, and equally threatening as to fatal consequences. Mrs. Mahan's attention had not been called specially to the subject of faith-healing much before this. One night, from the profuse hemorrhage through her lungs and mouth, she thought the fatal hour had come. Dr. Mahan was then out of London, holding a protracted religious meeting, and she declined to have him called home. Regarding death to be very near, she lifted up her soul to God in prayer, substantially to this effect; that if it were God's will to take her then to himself, she could say "Thy will O God, be done!" But she desired to live a few years longer, to assist her husband in certain literary work, and therefore she prayed for immediate healing, yet with entire submission. Upon the utterance of this prayer, yes, instantly, "wonder of wonders," as her written narrative says, "the blood ceased to flow, all pain from both cancer and tumor at once ceased, and she fell into a quiet slumber and slept till morning. She then arose, felt entirely cured, dressed herself, went down stairs—which she had not been able to do for some time—was able to attend to her household duties and her literary work, and has had no trouble since from either cancer or tumor, both having entirely disappeared." At the time this narrative was related (1879), Mrs. Mahan had been healed some two or three years. She is still living, and in good health, as her occasional letters to us bear witness.—Evangelical Messenger.

"AN EXCELLENT SPINE."

A Sunday-school teacher once called on one of his scholars to read the third verse of the sixth chapter of Daniel, from which the lesson was taken. The verse reads, "Then this Daniel was preferred before the presidents and princes, because an excellent spirit was in him. And the king sought to set him over the whole realm." The scholar, not being the best reader in the school, gave a slightly revised version of the text as follows: "Then this Daniel was preferred before the presidents and princes, because an excellent spine was in him."

It is very likely that the revision produced a smile; but it also conveyed a lesson. A man without "an excellent spine" makes a very poor Christian, and would never "dare to be a Daniel," nor "dare to stand alone." The little boy expressed just what many Christians need at the present day. There are some who are willing to sing, "Dare to be a Daniel, dare to stand alone, but they lack Daniel's "excellent spine," and so they never will be Daniels, and will not be likely to stand alone. May God raise up more men like Daniel; men who fear God and work righteousness; men of an excellent spine,—men who have backbone.—Common People.

ANSWERING A FOOL ACCORDING TO HIS FOLLY.—The Interior, alluding to a certain "cosmical theory" of those scientists who believe in a "self-winding universe," to the effect that when two dead worlds clash together they generatea gas by which they are transformed into new worlds, facetiously remarks:

"It is very well known that if two great railroad trains, rushing onward at high speed, come in collision, the result is that they smash up into a number of little locomotives, with little passenger cars, filled with little people, running on new little railroads! When a steamboat blows up in a river, the pieces come down in the shape of all sorts of trim little skiffs, yachts, tug-boats, etc! Of course they do!"

THE CANDLE OF THE LORD.

Fred was taking off his shoe and stocking, getting ready to go to bed. His shoe was wet, and five little water-soaked toes, with seams and wrinkles all over their pink faces, looked at him accusingly. If they could have spoken they would have said: "You got us wet, you did. You told a lie; you said you did not step into the brook."

O! that beautiful brook, so near the school-house, with such lovely stepping-stones, such pretty little lucky bugs, skipping about over the water, such charming mud in which to paddle! Why could it not run in some other part of the town, so little schoolboys would not be tempted?

Fred threw his shoe and stocking under the bed, said his prayers, without mentioning the lie, and went to bed.

"I know I told a lie about the brook, but I don't believe I will think of it," he said to himself, and while he was trying to give his whole mind to some other subject he fell asleep. He dreamed that a beautiful angel stood by his bed, with a bright candle. He said:

"This is the candle of the Lord. I have come to search out all the sins that little boys keep hid away in their hearts, and do not confess. This candle shines right upon them."

Then Fred's heart was all lighted up, and there was found the lie, unforgiven, unconfessed.

"This is very sad," said the angel. "The good Lord loves him, and is ready to forgive that sin if he will confess it. It grieves him so much to have little Fred cover it up;" and the candle shone very bright, and the sin looked very black.

"I hope," continued the angel, "that now this little boy knows that he cannot hide the lie any longer he will ask the Lord to forgive him."

Fred woke with a start, and knelt down and confessed his sin. He went in his nightgown to his mother's room, and as he clasped his arms around her neck, and told her all about it, he promised, with God's help, never to tell another lie.—Christie Pearl, in the Pansy.

A TRUE STORY ABOUT A BIBLE.

There was a little boy who wanted a Bible very much indeed—wanted it more than anything else he could think of. But he was a poor boy, and could not afford to buy one; for he lived a good many years ago, when Bibles cost more than they do now.

One day two strange gentlemen came to his house and asked his mother for something to eat. Although she had only plain food, she gave them a welcome to what she had. As they ate, they saw that the little boy looked sad. They asked him what he wanted, and he told them a Bible.

His mother said, "Never mind. Don't fret about that. I'll take you to see General Washington next week."

"But I'd rather have a Bible than go to see General Washington," the boy said.

One of the gentlemen seemed much pleased with this, and told him he hoped he would always be as fond of the Bible.

The next day the little boy received a beautiful Bible, and on the fly-leaf was written, "From George Washington."

The little boy did not know it, but he had been talking to General Washington himself the day before.—Our Little People.

WASHINGTON'S RULES OF CONDUCT.

One of George Washington's early copy-books contains a list of a hundred and ten "Rules of Civility and Decent Behavior in Company and Conversation." Here are a few of them:

"Every action in company ought to be with some sign of respect to those present.

"When you meet with one of greater quality than yourself, stop and retire, especially if it be at a door or any strait place, to give way for him to pass.

"They that are in dignity or in office have in all places precedency; but whilst they are young, they ought to respect those that are their equals in birth or other qualities, though they have no public charge.

"Strive not with your superiors in argument, but always submit your judgment to others with modesty.

"Be not hasty to believe flying reports to the disparagement of any.

"Take all admonition thankfully, in what time or place soever given; but afterwards, not being culpable, take a time or place convenient to let him know it that gave them.

"Think before you speak; pronounce not imperfectly, nor bring out your words too hastily, but orderly and distinctly.

"Speak not evil of the absent, for it is unjust.

"Make no show of taking great delight in your victuals; feed not with greediness; cut your bread with a knife; lean not on the table; neither find fault with with what you eat.

"Be not angry at table, whatever happens, and if you have reason to be so, show it not; put on a cheerful countenance, especially if there be strangers, for good humor makes one dish of meat a feast.

"Let your recreations be manful, not sinful.

"Labor to keep alive in your breast that little spark of celestial fire called conscience."

These are not unwise rules; they touch on things great and small. The difficulty with most boys would be to follow a hundred and ten of them. They serve, however, to show what was the standard of good manners and morals among those who had the training of George Washington.—From "George Washington," by Horace E. Scudder, in St. Nicholas for February.

TEMPERANCE.

GENERAL GRANT ON SMOKING.

In November, 1880, about ten days after the Presidential election, I was sitting in the office of a banker in Wall street, when General Grant came in.

"General Grant, I would like to ask you a question."

"Certainly. I should be glad to have you."

"Did you tell the Girard College boys, the other day, as the papers reported, that you were glad that they were forbidden to smoke, because, if they do not smoke now they would be less likely to do so in later years?"

"Did the papers say I said that?"

"Yes."

"Well, then I said it!" Then, after a brief pause, as if trying to recall the circumstance: "At any rate that is what I think. If I could have my way, I would let nobody smoke under twenty-one years of age. It is much more injurious to boys than to adults. Whatever it may do to men, it is certainly bad for the young." Then, as if the questionable side of the practice were still before his mind, he went on: "The newspapers are responsible for my smoking."

"How is that? Do they charge you with smoking more than you do?"

"Yes; but that is not what I mean. I mean that it is because of what they did that I am a smoker. Before the war I used to smoke very rarely; once in six months, perhaps, I would smoke a pipe; but I had no taste for smoking, no habit, and was not a smoker. When I went into the army, at times of leisure I smoked more; but not much at first. In those days the papers did not think much of me. I did not pay much attention to their men in the army. I did not have them at my mess. They used to speak of me as inaccessible. They called me, you know, 'the man on horseback,' 'the silent man,' 'the man with a cigar in his mouth;' and when Fort Donelson was taken they got me into trouble. To be sure, I was promoted; I was made a Major-General right off; but the papers were down on me, and on account of what they said I was put under arrest, and my command taken away from me for a week. However, the people up North were so glad to have twelve or fifteen thousand rebels to feed that they said; 'If that man has a cigar in his mouth, he ought to have a good one;' and they began to send me first-class cigars; and from that time there was always a box of the best cigars in the United States on the table in my tent, open, and free to everybody; and I never bought any more cigars from that time until I came East. That is what I mean when I say the newspapers are responsible for my being a smoker."

"Well, General, one question more, if you please."

"Certainly."

"Did you ever suffer any inconvenience from the practice?"

"Not that I know of. I cannot say what injurious effects it may yet produce; but I have never felt any. Yet I often wish I was not a smoker. Especially when I go to supper, sit down at six, and stay till midnight, and there are ladies present, or for some other reason I do not feel at liberty to smoke. That is just the time when I most want to smoke, and if I cannot I wish I was not a smoker."—Rev. S. H. Lee in the Independent.

Mr. Chauncey M. Depew is one of those who have resolutely broken off the habit of smoking. He is reported as saying to a friend who offered him a cigar:

"I was a confirmed smoker, smoking twenty cigars a day, up to about a dozen years ago, when I gave up the habit. I now do not use tobacco. Twelve or thirteen years ago, I found myself suffering from indigestion, with wakeful fits at night, nervousness, and inability to submit to much mental strain. I was in the city of Albany one day, and bought a twenty-five cent Partaga. I was walking up Broadway, and at the corner of State Street I took the cigar out of my mouth and looked at it. I had smoked about an inch of it. A thought struck me. I had been reading a German savant's book on the unhealthfulness of the use of tobacco. I looked at my cigar, and I said: 'You are responsible for this mischief.' I threw that Partaga into the gutter, and resolved not to smoke again. For six months I suffered the torments of the damned. I wanted to smoke, but I resolutely refused. My appetite meanwhile was growing better, my sleep was growing sounder, and I could do more work. I did not smoke up to two or three years ago. After I had worked for seventeen hours continuously one day, late at night I thought I would try a cigar as a soothing influence. I lit a cigar. It was delicious. I enjoyed the aroma of the smoke and the pleasure of the cigar more than I can say. The next day I smoked four cigars, and the next two. I found the use of tobacco was affecting my physical system, and I stopped it entirely, and have not commenced again, and probably never shall."

EFFECTS OF TOBACCO.

A goodly number were present yesterday afternoon at Apollo Hall to hear Dr. Kate S. Graves lecture on the subject of "Tobacco Effects." Mrs. Graves began her address by stating that though statisticians assert that the average duration of human life has been increased, yet physicians say that the average tone of health has been lowered. The one is due to the improved sanitary condition and the quick remedies adopted to curtail the spread of epidemics and infectious diseases, while the other is due to the habits and surroundings of the individual man. Fewer persons are seriously ill, still fewer are really well. One of the prominent reasons for this deterioration of health is the almost universal use of tobacco. After giving the opinions of various authors regarding the origin of the term "tobacco," and giving its botanical history, Mrs. Graves went on to show the effects of the use of the weed upon the human body. These she classified as follows: It impoverished the blood, thus debilitating the system and producing an injurious effect upon the heart; it superinduced dyspepsia, caused bronchitis, and the disease known as smoker's sore throat; it had an injurious effect upon the brain, diseased the optic nerve, and gave rise to symptoms of paralysis. In addition, the use of tobacco tended to make a man careless as regards his personal cleanliness and his surroundings. The speaker then closed with stating that the surplus of the world's earnings were only 3 cents per day for each man, which small sum was all we had for charity and to promote civilization. A large per cent of these meager savings were expended in tobacco and whisky.—Chicago Daily.

DEATH FROM SMOKING.

The New York correspondent of the Buffalo Commercial Advertiser writes: "A case in my own intimate acquaintance has this very week appalled a large circle of friends in this city. The victim was exactly of my own years, and a companion from early boyhood. For thirty years, at least, he has been a daily smoker of the choicest cigars, but in all his other habits temperate and regular, and of excellent constitution—one who, of all men, would have laughed at the suggestion that tobacco was killing him. A week ago last Sunday he was stricken with the progressive paralysis characteristic of nicotine, and on Sunday night he died. His death was most pitiful. First, sight was lost, then speech, then motion of the neck, then motion of the arms, and so on throughout the body; and he lay for a fortnight unable to move or make a sign, save a pitiful, tongueless, inarticulate sound, which sometimes rose to almost frantic effort, all in vain, to make known what he wished to say to his family or friends—for his consciousness and mental faculties were left unimpaired till within two hours of the last, to aggravate to the utmost the horror of his situation—a living soul in a dead body. The sense of hearing was left unimpared, so that he was conscious of all around him while as yet incapable of communication with them as if dead, save by a slight sign of assent or dissent to a question. The doctors were fully agreed that tobacco was the sole cause of this stroke."—Detroit Post, 1873.

—The late George Nungent, of Philadelphia, left his estate, worth about $300,000, to found a home for aged and infirm Baptist ministers and members.

Bro. A. M. Miller, now a member of the U. P. church, of Marshalltown, but formerly a Covenanter, came to me after the audience was dismissed and introduced himself, and gave me a dollar for the cause. He also introduced Mrs. Miller, and they both cordially invited me to their home, which is about two miles out in the country. After endeavoring to interest the Conference in the Cynosure and distributing tracts among them, I took my departure, in the hope that I might meet them again at their Synod, in Minneapolis, Minn., next June.

Having spent nearly six months in the lecture work in Iowa, after conferring with the officers of the N. C. A., I have decided to take a vacation for the purpose of visiting my family, and looking after family interests, after which, if the way of the Lord is prepared, I will return to Iowa and continue the work that is opening out with so much promise there. In the meantime let every friend of Christian reform in Iowa send in money and pledges of monthly payments, to J. A. Laird, the treasurer of the Iowa State Christian Association, that there may be no lack of funds to vigorously prosecute the State lecture work. His address is Wayne, Henry Co., Iowa.

Remember that Freemasonry is organized despotism, and, as such, a conspiracy against republican liberty and equality.

Remember that the Masonic Covenants are declared, by high Masonic authority, to be stronger than the civil law, and that Masonry must come in contact with civil law, in the courts, by binding its votaries to conceal criminal secrets, that by the oath of God, as lawfully administered, they are bound to reveal. Thus, Masonry perverts the administration of justice, and is, therefore, a conspiracy against the administration of equal justice in our courts. In order that republican liberty and equality may be maintained, let me exhort you to personal effort and liberal giving.

Remember, also, that Freemasonry and its kindred orders are an infidel conspiracy against Christ and his church. Consider that Satan is working through the secret orders to dethrone Christ and subvert our holy Christianity. Do not lose sight of the fact that Freemasonry is the most artfully contrived plot that Satan has ever put into the heart of man to devise, for discrediting divine revelation, and overthrowing the Christian religion.

Freemasonry must not be permitted to retain her hold upon the church of Christ, and her influence in the civil courts. Her power to pollute and destroy the churches, and to pervert justice in the courts must be broken. A systematic, and determined, and protracted effort must be made to dethrone this anti-Christ, to exalt Him, whose right it is to rule as King of nations and of saints.

The work of exposing the despotic, unrighteous and infidel character of Freemasonry is an arduous one, but by the power of the Holy Spirit, whom Christ will give to those who stand with him, it can be so successfully done, as to free both the church and the court-house from the dominating power of the lodge. Do not let us sleep until our churches are corrupted, justice perverted, and a reign of anarchy and bloodshed inaugurated.

I shall be glad to resume lecture work in Iowa after taking a vacation, and as the treasury of the Iowa State Christian Association is empty, every friend of Christ and civil liberty and equality before the law will see the need of responding to the appeal made by the officers of the State Association for funds to carry on the State work. The N. C. A. has helped us hitherto, but why should we be dependent upon them to carry forward our work? Are there not friends in Iowa to sustain our State lecture work while the N. C. A. funds are used in spreading the truth into the regions beyond? One of our Iowa friends has paid $20 for the six months. Another has subscribed $1 a month and has paid $6. Another who has subscribed $10 for the year, will pay half of it for the work already done. Another has paid $7.34, and I doubt not will pledge more for the continuance of the State work. If every reform church, and every individual reformer, will subscribe, or pay, much, or little, as they are able, the treasury of the State Association would soon be full, and there would be no lack of funds to carry forward the work. Bro. J. A. Laird, the treasurer, awaits your response; and Christ waits to see you manifest your love for his Gospel, and your desire for the coming of his Kingdom on the earth. If you believe with Rev. Kendig, D. D., (a Mason of 33 degrees) that Freemasonry, more than anything else in the world, stands in the way of the coming of the kingdom of our Lord Jesus Christ, you certainly will give liberally to aid in removing it.

The Churches.

—The Chicago W. C. T. U., says the Union Signal, have commenced work in earnest, trying to reach the outcast women of this city. They have organized a committee of which Miss Willard is chairman, opened pleasant rooms, and secured the services of Dr. Kate C. Bushnell, a noble Christian woman, and thoroughly educated physician, to take charge of the work. The press of the city, especially the Inter Ocean, have rendered valuable aid by publishing circulars, notices of the work, and appeals for aid. In response to these appeals, money and other things necessary have been donated for carrying on the work. Gospel services are held at the rooms every afternoon and evening, and the first week's work demonstrated both the need and the hopefulness of the effort.

—Bro. C. R. Hunt of West Union, Iowa, reports in the Wesleyan a happy revival in the church at Elgin near by, in which there were about a score saved.

—The series of meetings which have been held for nearly two months in the Wesleyan church, Wheaton, closed with some thirty conversions. The students in the Theological Seminary, and pastors and others from other churches, assisted frequently and cordially in the meetings.

—A convention of Christian workers, for prayer and conference, to be held at Topeka, is contemplated for this spring or summer by the United Presbyterian churches.

—Rev. R. W. McBride, missionary to the Warm Spring Indians, met with a painful accident on the 6th inst. While in the act of mounting a horse the stirrup-strap broke and he fell upon the ground, fracturing a bone in the lower part of his right leg and spraining a knee. He will be laid aside from work for some time. Mr. McBride is a son of Bro. Wm. McBride, of Elmira, Ill., an earnest friend of reform.

—It is stated that the net increase of the Methodist Episcopal church, South, for the past year, will not fall below 50,000. This is almost unprecedented increase, giving an average of about thirteen and one-half to each effective preacher.

—The result of fifty years' Gospel work in the Fiji Islands, is that there are now 900 Wesleyan churches, 1,236 chapels, 55 native ministers, 1,785 local preachers, 26,889 communicants, and 40,651 children in the Sunday-schools. All this with a population of only 100,000.

—The Bombay Guardian reports a remarkable revival among the native Christians of the church mission at Tricur, Southern India. It was first manifested in the Girl's Boarding School in the evening after a public meeting, when women and girls were prostrated on the floor in great distress on account of sin. At the next public service so many came forward for prayers that the whole church was required as an inquiry-room.

—On a late Sunday evening the Rev. Jacob Freshman baptized several Israelites at the Hebrew-Christian church, New York, one of them being a rabbi who had formerly preached in several of the synagogues of that city.

—Rev. Dr. J. P. Newman has accepted the offer of the pastorate of the Metropolitan Methodist church at Washington, when Rev. Dr. Huntley's three year's term expires next March, and he will be transferred to the Baltimore Conference.

—The Baptist ministers of Chicago have adopted a resolution pronouncing it impracticable to raise $300,000 to pay an insurance company for the property of the University of Chicago, and recommended that steps be taken toward a new building.

—The Reformed churches, New York city, have begun a series of evangelistic services of a similar nature to those of the Episcopal and Presbyterian churches. The churches are divided into four groups, and the services will continue two weeks in each.

—Mr. F. W. Malden, one of the busiest and wealthiest contractors and builders in Baltimore, has become an evangelist, leasing a centrally located place of amusement for his own use on Sundays, and holding revival meetings Sunday afternoons and evenings. He pays all the expenses, takes up the collections, and says the meetings are for talk and prayer, but not for preaching.

—The Seminary of the Evangelical Lutheran church in the United States, at Gettysburg, Penn., has an attendance this year of forty-three. The real estate of the institution, consisting of a seminary building and three professor's houses, with some twenty acres of land, is valued at about $75,000, and its vested funds amount to about $91,000. The library contains over 11,000 volumes. The Holman Lecture on the Augsburg Confession will be delivered this year by the Rev. J. C. Koller, A. M.

—Rev. J. R. Wolfe, of the Protestant Episcopal Mission in Fuh-Chau, China, is on his way to Corea, with a native, to establish a mission in that kingdom. The native, who is to be left in charge of the new mission, will be partly supported by the Fuh-Chau Christians.

—Now that Germany has gone into the colonizing business on a somewhat extensive scale, there is a noticeable change on the part of many German Protestants. Some of the churches and congregations are already bestirring themselves, and by many who formerly had no faith in missions the missionary is freely spoken of as the pioneer of civilization. In the Congo region, on the northeast coast of Africa, and in New Guinea, Germany has visiting mission fields; and it will not be at all wonderful if North Germany should become, before long in mission work, a rival of Great Britain and America.

—A missionary among the Hawaiian Islanders, in replying recently to a charge of heathen practices urged against a number of native converts, uttered a disagreeable truth in the sentence: "Going back to ancient heathenism is not the danger to which the Hawaiians are exposed; the danger to which they are exposed rather being that they will drop into modern heathenism, and become what the slums of our city are—permanently sensual, vicious and criminal."

—A Swedish translation of the Gospel of John is the first book printed in the language of the Congo. The work was done by a missionary named Vestline, who has labored for many years in equatorial Africa.

—Since the work in that country was undertaken by the Presbyterians, it is said that they have expended over $17,000 in paying traveling expenses of missionaries going to and coming from Japan.

—The slave-trade is still active on the Eastern coast of Africa. A cargo of fifty rescued slaves was brought to Mombassa on July 22. They were turned over to the agents of the Church Missionary Society, and most of them can be sent back to their homes.

—At Champaign, Ill., a series of revival meetings opened February 8, and in 24 hours after the first meeting seventy persons had kneeled at the altar for prayers.

—Conversions have been reported from all the fields of labor of the American Sunday-School Unions from Ohio, Kansas, Minnesota, Nebraska and Wisconsin. Four new schools have been organized during the past month in the Indian Territory.

—The late Kaspar Auch, a successful Christian business man of New Orleans, after bequeathing $28,000 to relatives, left the remainder of his estate of $300,000 to the ten Presbyterian churches of the city to care for their poor.

—An encouraging revival has been going on among the young people in Samoa, and more than forty were recently received into the church at Niatautu.

—It has been proposed by missionaries in China that the new version of the New Testament, prepared by Rev. Griffith John, of Hankow, be adopted as the basis of a union version for all China.

—The New York Chinese Mission has between 4,000 and 5,000 Celestials in its Sabbath-schools. About sixty have joined the various churches since they began to receive instruction. The first Sunday-school for these people was founded in New York about eighteen years ago.

—The Free Church of Scotland has recently sent out the son of a Scottish Lord with his wife—the Hon. Mr. and Mrs. Keith-Falconer—to commence a mission among the Moslems at Aden. They go at their own charges. Mr. Keith-Falconer has been much interested in efforts in behalf of the Mohammedans, and has chosen this point as a most hopeful field for his self-denying labors.

—Advices received from Admiral Davis, of the Atlantic Squadron, state that on the 6th inst. reports were received from Hong Kong of disturbances at Chinkiang, in which missionaries were grossly abused by Chinese mobs. The presence of a man-of-war was requested. It seems that a mob of workmen went to the house of two American Missionaries and took them out by force and, having bound them hand and foot, took them to the local magistrate, who immediately released them. Other assaults were committed on missionaries about the same time, causing considerable excitement in the town. The trouble was caused by the refusal of the missionaries to comply with the demands made by the contractor for the building erected for them.

OBITUARY.

ELIZABETH HYATT GILBERT, wife of I. J. Gilbert of Derby, Conn., died recently at her home at a great age. For more than sixty years she had stood beside her husband, sharing with him the conflicts and victories of life, espccially during the later years in his testimony against the ungodly lodge. The local papers speak thus highly of her character:

"The death of Mrs. I. J. Gilbert is an event of sad interest to this community. Through long years, beyond the memory of most of our people, she has been the ever faithful and loving wife and mother, honorcd and esteemed by every one. Beyond the age of eighty and able to look back over sixty years of married life, the measure of years and days being well filled, she is now called home. An honor to her ancestry, a glory to her home, a benefactor to her children; she leaves a name that is a pride to her acquaintances.

"It will be remembered that last fall Mr. and Mrs. Gilbert celebrated the sixtieth anniversary of their marriage, a full accouut of which was published in the Courier. At that time Mrs. Gilbert was in the enjoyment of excellent health and with her own hands prepared the feast for the large number of relatives and friends that assembled to extend their congratulations on so auspicious an occasion. Among the aged people present at that time no one would have selected her as the first of the number to be taken away, but such is the fact. Mrs. Gilbert has been a consistent member of the Methodist Episcopal church for many years, having united with it in her youth She loved the church and its privileges and was a regular attendant upon the services until stricken by disease."

The funeral services were conducted by Rev. A. C. Eggleston, of the Birmingham Methodist Episcopal church, assisted by Rev. Nathaniel Mead, of Stanford, a former pastor of the same church. Both of these clergymen made appropiate remarks, in which they paid deserved tribute to the virtues and upright Christiau character of the deceased.

BETWEEN TWO OPINIONS.

BY E. E. FLAGG.

Author of "Holden with Cords," "A Sunny Life," "Little People," etc.

The Best Story of the Reform.

Price, only $1.00.

Published by THE NATIONAL CHRISTIAN ASSOCIATION.

This latest and best of Miss Flagg's works is now ready in handsome print, neatly bound. The story begins in a quiet New England home, and paints its homely joys with a delicacy and truthfulness worthy the hand of Harriet Beecher Stowe. The scene then changes to a thriving, growing, palpitating young Western city, and with great power and startling accuracy the writer leads us behind the scenes that we may see the machinery that works the liquor traffic and labor troubles. The story of the strike, the mob, the attempted assassination, the saloon-keeper's wiles, the curse of his trade, the power of the Christian faith to change him to a messenger of mercy, the criminal and the hidden power that shields him from justice, the land robbers tricks, the dark and secret conspiracies of the lodge—these and all the incidents of the book are portrayed with rare tact and great power of description. It is emphatically a book for the hour. And what is better and yet more striking, the incidents are facts, and every one a powerful and convincing argument against the lodge and the saloon.

Every temperance man and woman should read this book. No temperance story like it was ever planned, much less ably executed. A wonderful light is thrown upon the difficulties in the way of prohibition. Learn how they may be avoided.

Every one who loves to read a good story, chaste and elegant in expression, pure in thought, true in incident, deeply interesting in its narrative, should read this book.

READ THESE NOTICES FROM THE PRESS:

The Free Methodist, Chicago.

"Between Two Opinions" is a story, its incidents vouched for as facts, which presents a powerful argument on these questions and must attract thousands of readers among our thinking and observant people. The plot of the story is neither startling nor novel, but it develops a wonderful strength in following the experiences of people in the common, everyday walks of life.

Free Press, Birmingham, Iowa.

It differs from the popular story, "The Bread-winners" of a year ago. It greatly differs from that book in that it is written from the Christian standpoint, and its beautiful and touching descriptions of home life and home duties and heroic self-denyings will waken a responsive echo in every heart, that has not by dissipation lost the taste for the pure joys of home.

The Religious Telescope, Dayton.

The author, Miss Flagg, is a brilliant writer. The stirring questions in American politics are undoubtedly prohibition and the labor movement as championed by the secret unions of working men, which direct the strikes that with more and more frequency occur in our cities. "Between Two Opinions" is a story, its incidents vouched for as facts, which presents a powerful argument on these questions, and must attract thousands of readers among our thinking people.

The Christian Conservator, Dayton.

This is a charming book, written in an attractive manner. It is so full of sunshine and so radiant with light that one is enlightened, warmed, and, before they are conscious of it, set against the lodge. The style gleams, glows and sparkles. It is dignified and simple. It is the right book to place in the hands of your wife or daughter to superinduce co-operation with you in anti-secrecy work. Every minister's wife should read it, and then, if her husband is not an Anti-mason, he should take his turn next and become one.

The American, Washington.

We are reading, in spare moments, Miss Flagg's new book, "Between Two Opinions," and the estimate we have thus far put upon it is that it is masterly both in style and argument. One is insensibly made to feel that he is reading facts and not fiction; that the book is not a play upon the imagination but an unraveling of mysterious circumstances which have an important bearing upon current events.

Law and Order, Boston.

The book takes high ground for prohibition of the liquor curse, for woman's ballot for home protection, and for a better and more honest brotherhood than is forced by their obligations upon the members of secret orders. It is, therefore, a valuable book for several large classes of American readers.

Christian Instructor, Philadelphia.

There are important questions pressing upon American politics to-day; two of them are prohibition and the labor question as connected with the secret unions of workingmen. This work is an expose of the twin evils, secret societies and the saloons. The truths are given in the form of a story; not startling, but thrilling experiences of home life that are vouched for as facts. The evidences presented of the impossibility of reaching the saloon keeper so long as he and the officers of the law are sworn brothers in the den of some secret society, are conclusive enough to awaken the most careless and obtuse member of society. It is a valuable book for the masses to read.

Evangelist, Berea, Kentucky.

The object of the volume is to illustrate the practical workings of Secret Societies, and especially to show how the Lodge upholds the saloon, and this very important design is wrought out with much skill, clearness and power. By reading it temperance people may learn much about the difficulties in the way of prohibition.

The Standard, Chicago.

It is written in the interests of reform, more especially temperance and Anti-masonry. The title of the story suggests the special aim of it, which is to protest against all "halting between two opinions;" in other words, is a plea for radicalism. The story is vigorously written, and will interest even readers who do not altogether believe in its doctrine.

The Pacific, San Francisco.

It is a story intended to do service against the saloons, and in favor of Womans' Christian Temperance work, and especially against the secret orders—Freemasons, Odd-fellows, the Knights of Labor, etc. No reflecting man can doubt that any combination of picked classes and individuals is liable to great abuse. It is obvious, also, that secret orders are specially capable of being used in a selfish and unprincipled way.

HOME HINTS.

CONVENIENCE AND ORNAMENT.

A fire screen that will be unique and tasteful may be arranged with an ordinary clothes-horse as a foundation. The smallest size, to be bought in any house-furnishing shop, is the most manageable. Take off one of the folds, by untacking the straps that hold it. A double fold or panel is left, which is generally found sufficient for a sitting room. Ebonize the whole frame work, including straps; if preferred these may be replaced by bright ribbons afterwards, though it is not necessary, as the webbing takes the black coloring very well, and bows of ribbon tacked on alternate sides has the same effect. The frame-work may be decorated to suit the fancy. A piece of felt, old gold or dark blue, drawn tightly and tacked with gilt nails across one fold forms a good background for a design in embroidery or painting. A bunch of peacock feathers, caught against the felt with a bright ribbon is effective. For the opposite fold or panel an artistic curtain of surah silk, sateen, or some thin Japanese material, with small rings attached at the top to slide on a brass wire. This wire is very firm, and it is well to get the width of the top and have both ends bent into a hook, at the hardware shop where it is bought. The rod is fastened to the screen by these hooks which slip into a couple of metal eyes screwed into the corners at the top of the panel. The little curtain may be finished by a raveling and tying into a fringe the lower edge, or by a row of small tassels. It will be found very pleasant to have this curtain adjustable: it is made so by being on a rod, instead of fastened to the frame-work itself. A few brass hooks suited in size to the screen may be screwed into the standards. The piano duster, the bright little bag for holding the embroidery silks, the diminutive, walnut-mounted hearth broom, will find here a place to be hung, where they will be conveniently ready. Many ideas of decoration will come to mind when the frame-work is once taken out of its crude state by the black varnish or ebony paint, and no one will be disappointed when the finished screen takes its place around the corner of the sofa or in front of the too cheerful blaze. The old-fashioned, low, kitchen stool of white pine may bear this artistic screen company by giving it also a coat of ebony and some further dressing. Before using the black paint, however, it is very necessary to join the parts by small nails, as they are too apt to be held only by glue, and when placed near the fire, in some unexpected moment will collapse with slight pressure. Layers of cotton wadding on top, held in place by a strong cloth tacked over, makes quite enough of a cushion. A remnant of blue or olive-green satin, Turcoman, or cretonne, will do for the cover. Fasten with bright nails—the fleur de lis shape is pretty—and the metamorphose is complete. The ends of the cover may be left to hang an inch or two, and finished with fringe or tassels if desired.

One more inroad upon kitchen furniture, and our trio of additions is complete. A novel waste paper and scrap receptacle was a present received by a lady. A water bucket with two brass bands had been painted by a young girl and lined with crimson satin, fastened in a ruffle around the edge inside with bright-headed nails. The scene without was a quiet little landscape in blue and yellow greens; in the fore ground a cow was unconcernedly licking the paint from a sketch that stood on an easel, while the artist had wandered away. The whole thing made an agreeable change from the conventional straw and ribbon baskets that have held the place, and usefully, too, for many years.

PURIFY THE SCHOOL BUILDINGS.

The Sanitary News urges the sanitary examination of school buildings during vacation. To give force to its own opinion, it quotes the words of Mr. William Paul Gerhard, an eminent sanitary engineer. In a recent article on school and college sanitation, he says: "The annual vacation term would seem to be a particularly fit time to undertake a sanitary inspection of the school buildings, of their interior construction, sanitary arrangements, and of their immediate surroundings." He calls attention to the absolute necessity of such a periodical inspection, by qualified persons, and the correction of such structural and sanitary defects as may be discovered. While the water supply, drainage, and ventilation should be examined into, it is necessary to demonstrate the entire absence of dampness, and to examine the methods of lighting the class rooms, of heating the building, the means of egress in case of fire, the arrangement of seats and desks, and finally into the plumbing appliances.

Count de Lesseps, the great canal maker, is in all respects a wonderful example. He has celebrated his eightieth birthday, and is as full of strength and life as others of half his years. He has just been made happy by the birth of his twelfth child. Says a correspondent of the Chigo Tribune: "It is a fine sight to see him in the park with his family of eleven children. And when you see the eleven drawn up in line you notice that their sizes are mathematically graduated. Their father intends that, if possible, they shall live to as good and vigorous an old age as he enjoys. He inures them to hard ship. In summer time he makes them run barefooted, bareheaded, barelegged, and, in fact, as nearly naked as the usages of civilization allow. And at his country home he has a fenced-in playground for them in which they spend an hour or two daily in the original garb of Adam and Eve. As a result their skins are as tough and healthy as that of an Indian. They never catch cold. They are never sick. In these respects they differ much from most French children, who, as a rule, are what the English call 'coddled' too much."

This is what REV. JOHN G. FEE did at Berea, Ky., and the friends of reform cannot spend 40 cents better than to send for this

A Wonderful Book.

Laura S. Haviland is a quiet, gentle, unassuming Quaker woman, 76 years of age, yet vigorous, who has had a remarkable career of usefulness, and has now given to the world a remarkable history of her "Life Work" as a teacher, at an early day, of the colored refugees in Canada and in Michigan, and in other States, as a traveler down South in the guise of a "berry picker," helping out into freedom many slaves; as a nurse and preacher to the sufferers in hospitals during the war; and with Gov. St. John and Elizabeth Comstock, relieving the destitute and suffering refugees in Kansas, etc.

IN BRIEF.

The crown jewels of France are to be sold, and the proceeds used as a fund to assist aged laborers. Their value is said to be $40,000,000. Rubies, pearls and diamonds, are not counted as legitimate State assets under a Republican form of government.

Uncle Sam pays out $5,500,000 annually to clothe and feed his Indian wards. Some years ago he paid a larger sum to shoot them down. The dead Indian may be the only good Indian, but the peace policy pays in the long run.

What would the United States be today, were it not for its railway system? Without railways, the immense western prairies would still be the home of the Indian and the buffalo. A country that adds 3,112 miles of rail to its system in 1885, and has an aggregate mileage of 128,500 is keeping well abreast of the times.

The eyes of the civilized world are now fixed upon Japan. During the past decade most important governmental reforms have been carried out without disturbances. The Executive Council, which now includes the Prime Minister and the ministers of the Right and Left, will, in April next, be superceded by a Cabinet responsible to the people's represenatives, in which there are to be nine Department Ministers. In the more civilized West such a radical constitutional reform could only have been accomplished after years of agitation, perhaps civil war.

At length, after many years of weary search, the source of the Amazon has been discovered. In a recent paper read before the Royal Geographical Society, London, Mr. Thum, the discoverer, made a graphic description of his perilous clamber up the steep face of Mount Rovainia, upon the opposite declivity of which he discovered a small lake; from this a little rivulet flows down the mountain side, which is the source of the world's greatest river. We can imagine the feelings of satisfaction of Mr. Thum, as he stood beside the tiny stream, which finally entered the sea by a magnificent estuary 180 miles wide, after a course of nearly 4,000 miles.

A number of wealthy gentlemen of New York who indulge the Romanesque luxury of flowers, gathered at Horticultural Hall on Wednesday to witness the sale of the late Mrs. Mary D. Morgan's $200,000 collection of orchids and other rare plants. One orchid sold for the sum of $750. It bore the rather ostentatious name of Cypripedium Morganianum.

Mrs. Carlisle, the wife of the Speaker, recently asked a visitor of her sex: "How many children have you?" "Only one," was the reply. There was a quizzical smile on Mrs. Carlisle's face, and a quick exclamation and inquiry: "Only one! Is that all you have done for your country? Why I have eight!"

Sir R. N. Fowler, the English banker, writes a beautiful hand for a banker. Lately, in a letter, he observed: "I regard the conduct of the Government in this matter as absolutely inhuman." Owing to the inability of a printer to decipher what was meant, it stated in type; "I rarely can compass a tale. My grandmother is the best narrator of amusing incidents."

Thomas Gardner, publisher of the Chicago Farm, was arraigned recently on the charge of using his paper for the dissemination of lottery schemes. Sixty thousand copies of the paper were detained in Chicago by the postal officials. Each copy contained an offer of the paper for four dollars per annum and a lot located in Florida to every one of the first fifteen hundred subscribers. The case was adjourned for the purpose of hearing from the Postmaster General.

Sing the Reform

Into the Hearts of the People!

One of the most popular books against lodgery is the latest compilation of GEORGE W. CLARK, the Minstrel of Reform, a forty-page book of soul-stirring, conscience-awakening songs appropriate for lectures, conventions and the home circle. What can add more to the interest of a meeting than a song well sung? What means will more quickly overthrow the power of the secret lodges than to sing the truth into the popular conscience?

FOR COUGHS AND CROUP USE

TAYLOR'S CHEROKEE REMEDY OF SWEET GUM AND MULLEIN.

The sweet gum, as gathered from a tree of the same name, growing along the small streams in the Southern States, contains a stimulating expectorant principle that loosens the phlegm producing the early morning cough, and stimulates the child to throw off the false membrane in croup and whooping-cough. When combined with the healing mucilaginous principle in the mullein plant of the old fields, presents in TAYLOR'S CHEROKEE REMEDY OF SWEET GUM AND MULLEIN the finest known remedy for Coughs, Croup, Whooping Cough and Consumption; and so palatable, any child is pleased to take it. Ask your druggist for it. Price, 25c. and $1. WALTER A. TAYLOR, Atlanta, Ga.

ALL-NIGHT INHALATION!

"A positive revolution in the treatment of Air-Passage Diseases of the Nose, Throat, and Lungs, and, for the purpose designed, as valuable a discovery as vaccination."

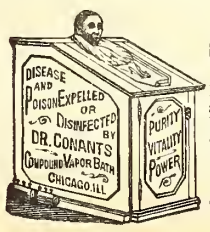
THE PILLOW-INHALER.

A Speedy, Positive and Permanent Cure for Catarrh, Bronchitis, Asthma, and Incipient Consumption.

It is a hair pillow, with reservoirs of evaporating liquid, the fumes or vapor of which is inhaled all night long, whilst sleeping as usual, and without any discomfort. It is used only at night, and is perfectly safe to the most delicate. There is no stomach-dosing, douching or snuffing; but just as a smoky lamp will leave a deposit on a whitened wall so the PILLOW-INHALER, for say eight hours at a time, spreads a powerful healing balm or salve on the inflamed inner coating of the diseased air-surfaces, from the nostrils to the bottom of the lungs, and hence into the blood. Old-fashioned inhalation, through a tube, for a few minutes a day, sometimes cured. Think of eight hours constant action, on the same principle, but intensified a hundred-fold! There are no pipes or tubes. The medicine is breathed in, not swallowed, and goes right to the diseased parts.

CATARRH. BRONCHITIS. CONSUMPTION.

HON. E. L. HEDDEN, Collector of the Port of New York, says: "I take pleasure in stating that the PILLOW-INHALER has been of the greatest relief, and I believe of permanent benefit, to my wife, who has been a great sufferer from Bronchial and Catarrhal Troubles, accompanied with distressing Asthma. I recommend its use to all persons afflicted with such maladies."



E. L. HEDDEN, 38 West 49th St., New York.

MR. H. G. TEELE, 50 Bryan Block, Chicago, Ill., says: "I suffered fifteen years from a severe case of Catarrh; coughed incessantly day and night. I bought a PILLOW-INHALER, and since using it my cough is gone; my lungs are no longer weak and sore, and I am in better health than I have been for years."

During the six years of its existence the PILLOW-INHALER has wrought cures of Catarrh, Bronchitis, Asthma, and Consumption, that have been more like miracles than the usual treatment of disease. It is not expensive, and is within the reach of every one. Send for Explanatory Pamphlet and Testimonials, or call.

NEWS OF THE WEEK.

WASHINGTON.

Senator Wilson, of Iowa, introduced a bill making garden seeds, bulbs, etc., subject to postage charges as third-class matter. They are going as fourth-class matter now, and this will reduce the postage upon them about one-half.

Mr. Wilson also presented resolutions from Post 20, G. A. R., of Council Bluffs protesting against the exhibition at the National Capital of "A Panorama of the battle of Bull Run, showing the success of traitors and the defeat of loyal men." Also demanding "of all loyal members of Congress that they pass an act immediately prohibiting the display of treason on American soil at the National Capital."

A number of gentlemen interested in establishing a permanent American exposition in Washington, and a world's exposition to be held in 1892, in honor of the 400th anniversary of the discovery of America by Columbus, have adopted resolutions strongly favoring the project, and a committee of citizens is framing a plan for this celebration.

Congress has been in session since December and has passed just four public bills—one is known as the Fourth of July claims bill, to pay certain war claims under an act passed July 4th, 1862; another provides for repairs upon the Patent Office; a third to provide for some starving Indians in Northern Montana, and a fourth what is known as the Presidential succession bill.

COUNTRY.

J. Milton Turner, the well known colored lawyer of St. Louis, and recently Minister to Liberia, who is mentioned in our Washington letter this week, says that the early spring will see another large exodus of colored people from the South to the Western States. Several thousand have already left the coast and Gulf States for Arkansas and Texas; but, he says that the most of them have found their way through the Indian Territory to Kansas, where they have finally settled. There have also been agents from the vineyards and farms of California, traveling through the South making contracts with colonists, and advancing the negroes money to pay their fare to the Pacific coast.

The bark Neptune, at Boston from Cienfuegos, reports having encountered, on January 30th, "a furious gale, during which the seas ran so high that the captain was about to lie to, when, as an experiment, he put four quarts of oil in bags and dragged it overboard. The effect was marvelous, calming the waves so that the vessel, instead of having to lie to made the remarkable run of 280 knots in twenty four hours."

While passing through Georgia Friday, Thomas A. Edison the electrician, conceived the plan of a machine for picking cotton, and showed sketches of his new invention to persons in a hotel at Atlanta Friday night.

High winds blew down a number of telegraph poles at Boston Friday morning, causing a blockade in the vicinity of Market and Alabama streets, but no person sustained injury. A blizzard, with heavy snow and wind is reported from the New England States, Nova Scotia, and New Brunswick. The Grand Trunk road is blocked at Bethel, and at Westfield, Mass., the First Congregational church was wrecked by the wind. A hurricane, accompanied by rain, damaged many buildings at Baltimore Thursday night. At Harrisburg, Pa., several structures were unroofed and chimneys leveled, the Lochiel Iron works being badly damaged. A fierce storm prevailed at New York, the waves in the bay reaching an unusual height. Furious snow storms prevailed in the vicinity of Dubuque and in southern Wisconsin Saturday and Sunday. Snow fell 15 inches deep, and drifts were five to eight feet high. At Quebec at the same time the worst storm known for years raged. Snow fell for 72 hours to a depth of 41 inches on a level.

At the conclusion of the trial of a number of cases brought by the Law and Order Society against liquor dealers in Philadelphia, Counsellor Vail and Mr. Jones, of the society were set upon by a mob, which threatened them with cries of "Kill them," etc., and the presence of a squad of police alone saved them from bodily injury.

Fred Sanders, a mechanic at Erie, Pa., who was out of work, and had given what food he could procure to his wife and children, became insane from hunger Thursday morning, tore the hair from his head, and then attempted suicide.

The school for Indian boys and girls near Stearnburg, N. Y., was destroyed by fire Thursday, teachers and pupils narrowly escaping with their lives.

The exports of California wine during 1885 reached 4,500,000 gallons—nearly one million gallons in excess of the shipments of the previous year.

Three ranches at Wheatland, Cal., were visited early Thursday morning by masked men, who drove out the Chinese marched them to Wheatland, and then set them at liberty. At one ranch the Chinese quarters were fired and destroyed.

Two years ago John Halbert broke into a shop at Alma, Ill., and stole some peanuts and a piece of cheese. He has been tried five times, the last time closing Thursday, the jury disagreeing every time. The tax-payers of Marion county have become indignant over the court expenses in the case.

Commenting on the recent decision of the Indiana Supreme Court, in upholding the Legislature's right to control telephone rates, Mr. Edison says if the law is to prevail universally, the Patent Office might as well be closed, for capitalists will not take up inventions. He believes that the doctrine is fatal to progress, and thinks the United States Supreme Court will declare the Indiana statute to be unconstitutional.

FOREIGN.

A man named Peronnier, believed to be insane, caused a sensation in the French Chamber of Deputies on Thursday afternoon by drawing a revolver, and firing twice with a downward aim, at the same time throwing a letter toward M. Clemenceau. Peronnier was quickly seized and hurried to prison.

At a meeting of the Union Left Feb. 25th, M. Forey said that while he was not satisfied with the Madagascar treaty, he advocated its retention in order to avoid another war. M. Vetulcomte opposed the ratification of the treaty, on the ground that it abandoned the hold of the Sakalovas, leaving the Hovas at liberty to conquer the whole island for the benefit of England. Premier de Freycinet said the government could not consent to postpone the treaty. It must be either accepted or rejected. As a matter of fact, instead of 1,000,000 francs, as originally demanded, the Hovas would pay 10,000,000 francs.

The reports of M. Rousseau, the delegate appointed by the government to inspect the work on the Panama Canal, and also that of Chief Engineer Jacquet, are said to be so adverse that the government has already decided to refuse to authorize the issue of lottery obligations in connection with the canal's construction.

The widespread revivals of the present season have hardly a parallel. Certainly not for ten years have we seen the like, and probably not for thirty. Not only are there more engaged as evangelists unattached to any particular church, but denominations always regarded as conservative in this matter are holding special meetings for conference and prayer and are sending out able men as evangelists among their own churches. On every hand we read of revivals conducted wholly by a single pastor, or by the pastors of two or more churches united. The revival record in the last Independent is a most remarkable exhibit. Beginning with the special Sabbath afternoon meetings began last October in Brooklyn by George F. Pentecost, which, says the account, have developed "probably a greater degree of religious interest than has ever been known in that city," the record follows Moody and Sankey to the South and tells of their great success in Galveston. George C. Needham, the evangelist whose testimony against the lodge in North Carolina we published last week, continues the work in that city. The work in Chicago under Small and Jones is next reviewed. The multitudes that attend, especially on the Sabbath, and the fact that all the papers feel compelled to report them, marks their meetings as of a popular nature; but it cannot be said that many have yet forsaken sin and confessed Christ as a result of their three weeks' work. But it is truly wonderful to read the long list of revivals from the country at large. Multitudes have been pressing into the kingdom, and fulfilling the word of Christ, "and I, if I be lifted up, will draw all men unto me."

Two weeks ago we called attention with regret to the fact that Mr. Small, the evangelist, endeavored to make converts to the Lord Jesus Christ by repeating some of the lingo of the lodge initiation. Although he has the evidence in the lives of his own parents of the worldly, sensual and devilish spirit of the Masonic system, he continues to draw upon he lodge for illustrations. But while he may be xcused because of his early familiarity with Masonic literature, it is not so easy to overlook the old advertisement of the Christ-rejecting lodge in the sermon by Mr. Jones last Thursday night in the Moody church. He began his sermon: "I suppose there are degrees in Christianity just as there are in Masonry. In what we call our 'Blue Lodges' we have our Entered Apprentice Masons, and Fellow Craft Masons, and Master Masons. Some men take the Entered Apprentice degree in Masonry and stop there. They never go any further. Others pass to the Fellow Craft degree and stop there, while others are raised to the sublime degree of Master Mason, and enjoy all the rights and privileges of the Master Mason." Then he went on to describe at length the Christian of the first, second and third degrees, so-called. It is difficult to understand why Mr. Jones should use such language if he is not an adhering Mason, and is thus using the language of the craft to attract lodge men to himself. If this be so, and he understands that of which he speaks, he is in this acting the part of a hypocrite and a montebank. But we do not wish hastily to judge him. He must give account for himself to God. If it is also true, as reported, that he is a gross tobacco-user, probably the nicotine poison of the weed has acted with the moral poison of the lodge to stupify his conscience and blunt his sensibilities, until he would with difficulty understand the moral nature of the lodge let it be explained to him never so clearly. In the same sermon he eulogized Mr. Moody, upon whose platform he was speaking, as the "grandest man of the nineteenth century;" yet he must know that Mr. Moody uniformly condemns the lodge as of the devil.

The influence of what Joseph Cook calls "atheistic socialism," in his address quoted in another column, is developing a power among laboring men that we may well dread. It is well that such thinkers as Mr. Cook should early and earnestly call the attention of the Christian church to its privilege at this time, and proclaim a social democracy founded on the teachings of Christ. Washington Gladden's article in the current Century argues excellently for this, but such arguments need to be popularized and scattered widely among working men and preached in the churches to which they resort. Mr. Gladden well says: "Instead, therefore, of pulling down the existing order, as the socialists propose, the thing to be done is to enlarge its foundations. They are right in saying that an industrial system whose sole motive power is self-interest and whose sole regulative principle is competition, will end in pandemonium; but they are foolish in thinking that humanity will thrive under a system which discards or cripples these self-regarding forces. What is needed is the calling into action of the good-will which is equally a part of human nature. This also must be made an integral part of the industrial system; it must be the business of the employer to promote the welfare of his workmen, and the business of the workmen to promote the interest of their employer. The organization of labor must be such that the one class cannot prosper without directly and perceptibly increasing the prosperity of the other. This is the true remedy for the evils of which the socialists complain. The reform needed is not the destruction but the Christianization of the present order."

The Frenchman's definition of "false democracy" suits our "false" socialism: "It is the league of those who wish to live without working, to consume without producing, to occupy posts without having rendered themselves fit to fill them, and to receive honors without being worthy of them."

The reports from California cause us to shudder at the reckless, savage and bloody treatment of the Chinese as we used to do at the horrible record of the KuKlux. The Pacific, after mentioning a number of outrages, goes on to show how greatly the political and secular press are accountable for these murders and abuses, which are likely soon to bear a fearful harvest: "And still the papers are declaring this only a peaceful effort to make the Chinese go! The fruit-growers and ranchmen, in mass meeting assembled at Vacaville, "entreat the great daily newspapers of San Francisco to rebuke the spirit of mob violence;" but, with it may be one or two exceptions, they entreat in vain. We look day after day in the these papers for the stern rebuke, and read instead editorials which encourage the mob to proceed in their nefarious work. The daily newspapers of this city, voicing the wishes of all good, law-abiding citizens, have it in their power, with the faithful officers of the law, to stop this outrageous abuse and crime. Why will they not speak out? Do they want this thing to proceed to the bitter end? They may speak when it is too late."

Another question which our people must answer, not to men but God, is the effect of their injustice and savage proscription upon the conversion of the Chinese nation to Christianity. Our missionaries are beginning to realize the difficulties that must arise from this quarter, and one of them thus writes to Our Banner of New York: "The prolonged abuses endured by the Chinese have so prejudiced their minds against the religion of Americans, as well as against Americans themselves, that it is almost impossible for us to reach them with the Gospel. They care not to hear it; they shun our missions. And there is great danger that the evils complained of will carry their influence to the other side of the Pacific. So many Chinese return to their own land to tell of the abuses endured among and by Christians, the message of the missionaries in China may be rejected. Rev. Mr. Masters, a recently returned missionary, told me that when he was walking on the street in the city of Sinuwi a brickbat was hurled at his head. Turning to see the one who threw the missile and to inquire why it was thrown, one said to him, 'That's the way your people stoned me when I was in California.'"

An Oregon paper, says the New York Witness, suggests that the best way of driving the Celestials out would be for the other foreigners to offer to work as steadily and as well the Chinese for reasonable wages. The answer of the Oregon Ku-Klux is that they cannot live upon the wages that the Chinese live on. The reply to that is that if they drank as little beer and whisky as the Chinese do they could probably get along well enough. Do our foreign workingmen not see that the more they use force and intimidation, and the more they drink, the greater is the inducement to employ Chinamen?

A PLAN PROPOSED.

TO LOVERS OF RIGHTEOUSNESS IN THE METHODIST EPISCOPAL CHURCH.

BY REV. J. T. MICHAEL.

[Will the editors of other papers give this article place in their columns? and will every reader do all in his power to get it to those for whom it is especially intended? The same plan, with appropriate alterations, may be carried out in other churches.]

There are thousands of members in the Methodist Episcopal church who for many years have been praying and hoping for a reformation within that denomination. When told that the change for which they are sighing will never come, and that they ought to leave this sect, they often turn away in sorrow, and reply by giving strong protests against forsaking "the old home." But if they will not leave, they certainly ought to go to work where they are to produce a crisis. For a score of years we have had "holiness camp meetings," "holiness conventions," tons of "holiness literature," and long lamentations concerning prevalent worldliness and indifference. Notwithstanding all this, the crisis has not come, and at the present rate, and with the present method of "the holiness movement," it never will come.

What the world needs to-day more than anything else is a wide-spread manifestation of healthy, vigorous, persistent, uncompromising, sin-destroying Bible righteousness. Will the members and ministers of the Methodist Episcopal church, who hold this to be true, and who believe it to be their duty to remain in that organization, listen to me while I offer a plan of action, which, if properly executed, can not fail to create a tremendous agitation in the dark empire of Satan and a vast amount of permanent good to the glorious cause of God?

Bishop Simpson, in his "Yale Lectures on Preaching," says, "There is no philosophy of education or culture, no combination of associations that can save the human soul. There is no name given under heaven among men whereby we may be saved; no plan outside of repentance toward God and faith in our Lord Jesus Christ which gives any hope, among those who have heard the Gospel, of either present or future salvation."

Robert Macoy, in his "Cyclopedia of Freemasonry," expresses a sentiment which is the exact opposite of this. In the article entitled "Freemasonry," he writes, "The definitions of Freemasonry have been numerous, and they all unite in declaring it to be a system of morality, by the practice of which its members may advance their spiritual interests, and mount by the theological ladder from the lodge on earth to the lodge in heaven." A hundred quotations equally contradicting of each other could be produced.

If the doctrine of the Methodist Episcopal church in reference to the person and work of Christ is false, then the entire doctrinal system of that church falls to pieces, and it certainly is false if the doctrine of Freemasonry is true. That Freemasonry excludes Christ, and that it offers salvation without Christ, even in this country, to many who claim to receive the Gospel, has been proved over and over again. It is absurd to try to evade the force of this proof by referring to the teachings and displays of Knight Templarism. This order does not constitute any part of essential Masonry, and the fact is, the Ancient Craft, or Blue Lodge Masonry, which is the only universal Masonry in existence, both excludes Christ and offers salvation without him. All Methodist Episcopal ministers who, in reading the Bible to their congregations, should omit the name of Christ every time they came to it, and should urge the people to seek salvation according to a plan which ignores that name altogether, would surely subject themselves to trial and expulsion. Why, then, should they be allowed to be Freemasons? It is just as really a violation of Methodist doctrine for them to be members of a secret lodge of Freemasonry, as it would be for them to connect themselves with an infidel association which was not secret. If they would openly unite with infidel clubs, the effect upon religion might be less injurious, for in such cases the offenders would be speedily rebuked and exposed.

Every minister and member in regular standing in the Methodist Episcopal church has a right to prefer charges as occasion may require. Every minister or member who is a Freemason is acting in direct opposition to one of the fundamental doctrines of his church, and unless, after proper labor, he will amend, he should be brought to trial and expelled.

Will a thousand earnest, judicious, holy men, filled with love, and moved only by a desire to glorify God, begin this work all along the line? It will be a hand-to-hand battle, and you will need the skill, the gentleness, the persistence, and the wisdom of the Master. When one of the bishops comes within your reach, if he is a Freemason, labor faithfully and thoroughly with him. If the labor is in vain, then present the charge and specification. Pursue this course in reference to all the General Conference officers, the presiding elders, the pastors, the official members, and every one else to whom it may apply. A charge and specification may be drawn up according to the following form:

Charge—Unchristian Conduct. Specification. In being connected with an association which excludes Jesus Christ, and which offers salvation without him.

Should the official body to which the bill is presented cast it aside without looking into its merits, then publish its action to the world. Do not be discouraged by any treatment which you may receive, but press right on through every obstruction. Convince the church to which you belong that it cannot be in harmony with one of the most subtle forms of infidelity which has ever cursed the earth without receiving your constant and unyielding opposition. Convince the world that the holiness in which you believe cannot assent to this pretended union of Christianity and the Christ-insulting and soul-destroying Masonic scheme of salvation. From time to time give reports of your work through this paper and others which may be open to you. Be sure that you are fully equipped for the business in hand, and that you can not only prove that the accused is a Freemason, but that Masonry is really anti-Christian: that it excludes Christ, and at the same time offers salvation without Christ. Avoid everything which will be an impediment to success. Do not act the part of a fanatic, but "be strong in the Lord, and in the power of his might." Carry on the war in the meetings of the official boards, but do not stop there. Go to the quarterly, the district, the annual, and the General conferences. Introduce resolutions and present petitions to all these bodies. Make yourselves heard and felt. You can bring about a crisis, and if you move on in the Methodist Episcopal church without doing so, how will you escape the accusation which may blaze in your face at the judgment—the accusation telling you that you miserably failed to follow your Saviour in the trying and testing hour.

Look at the facts. See the men who stand in your pulpits, who are bound by penalties which might cause demons in the pit to shudder, to an institution whose religious system, if true, makes Christianity a wretched imposition. See that while your church sets itself against such sceptics as Thomas Paine and Robert Ingersoll, it does not pretend to call its own members to account for identifying themselves with a Christless system which is far more deceptive and far more injurious to the eternal interests of men than anything which these two infidels have uttered. Is it not true that even in the light of all your "holiness revival," you can not point to a single instance in which you have arraigned one of your fellow members or ministers for "promising a cheerful conformity to all the ancient usages and established customs" of an institution which presents a method of salvation the very reverse of the one found in the Bible, while it violates the laws of conscience, degrades the mind and pollutes the heart. Is there not enough in this to make you fall down with your faces in the dust and beg forgiveness for allowing such contempt and shame to be heaped upon the name of the God whom you claim to love and obey? And will you not there resolve that you will sound an alarm which will arouse every slumbering soul to action, that you will hold up a light, and that you will strike a blow which will expose and sweep away the hidden refuges and secret covenants which have so grievously disgraced and corrupted the church of your choice.

If you follow the directions given in this plan, you may feel assured that one of two results will follow: you will either bring about such a change in the Methodist Episcopal church that it no longer will allow the serpents to nestle in its bosom which have stung and poisoned it so long, or you will be thrust out. In either case, the crisis which is so much needed will be produced. May God help you, and may you help yourselves to do your whole duty in this matter.

South Oil City, Pa.

INDUSTRIAL SCHOOLS IN INDIA.

BY O. S. PALMER.

During the past few years industrial training in our schools, especially in the American Missionary Association schools, has taken a more prominent place than formerly. And why? Because we have observed that unless the trades are taught in our schools the colored people seldom learn a trade, and consequently are left to shift about with no fixed business or occupation. The effect of their not having had this kind of training to any great extent can very readily be observed in the South today. The colored people are very generally dependent upon odd jobs, with poor pay, simply because they have not had the opportunity of learning the more valuable trades. The colored boys have seldom been employed as apprentices by Southern mechanics. May we not learn a lesson from our recreancy in our own country and not have the same depressed and poverty-stricken people in our foreign mission fields as we have in the South?

Some of the missionaries in the foreign field are very much exercised upon this subject of industrial training in their schools. An earnest plea has just come to us from Rev. Mark Fuller, Akola, India, for assistance in establishing such a school in that mission. In a letter dated January 6, he says, "I am very much exercised over the question of industrial schools, and have spoken to the commissioner of Berar about it, and he told me he thought I would get help from the government if I would submit my plan. I know that many friends at home speak against any kind of work except the simple preaching of the Gospel, and that sounds well till one gets into the field and sees what are the facts in the case. We cannot support all the converts on missionary pay and we cannot afford to have them left in ignorance. They need to be educated and taught good trades, so that they can earn their own living and have something to give to the support of their native churches and to the support of those who give their whole time to the work of the Lord.

"Now the question before us is simply this: How can we accomplish the best and most permanent results among this people? If we can attain better results by entirely ignoring industrial training, we are making a grave mistake in undertaking this additional work. But it is not enough for us to help them to be good—to make them Christians. We should try to make them good for something—Christians who not only have some education in books, but who have been taught some useful trade and have become convinced not only of the reality and divine origin of their faith in Christ, but that there is true dignity in labor. Christ himself was taught a trade. He honored labor by working with his own hands, and so did his disciples. 'My Father worketh hitherto, and I work.'

"Our plan is not to boost those who have no idea of self-help, but to help those who are willing to help themselves, but who, through ignorance and poverty, are unable to get on. For instance, a boy seven or eight years old who has no friends, may by hard work just keep soul and body together. He cannot go to school and he cannot learn a trade, for in learning a trade he must work some months for nothing, and he must each day earn food for the day. He may thus spend his whole life as a common coolie. Our plan is to take him under a legal form of government and give him a good common-school education, or more, if he seems bright and fit for a teacher or a preacher; and let him, in addition to his five hours' study each day, spend several hours in various kinds of work in the shops or fields, and when he has learned a good trade he is to give us two or three years of service as teacher or catechist, or whatever trade he has learned at wages just sufficient to feed and clothe him, and by the time he is eighteen or twenty years old he will be free to do what he wishes, and will have a sense of manliness, because he has in part paid for his education. I do not feel that it is best to teach them free, for they become helpless and dependent under such treatment. The plan is that we advance the education for which they pay in work, so that very little home money would be required in it. Blacksmiths, carpenters, tailors, shoemakers, etc., could learn their trades with a very little outlay of capital for tools. I am glad, Bro. Palmer, you are stirred up on this subject, and I hope you can bring tools with you when you come.

"A man cannot preach all day in this country any more than he could at home, and a few hours, say two or three hours per day, would be enough to give to an industrial school. A missionary would not think of giving his whole time to teaching in such a school, but would need to be responsible for it and spend a little time each day in looking after it. Paul had to take time for tent-making, and we have to do a great deal besides preaching, and I feel that it makes our preaching more effectual when the people see that we have all their interests at heart and that we are not afraid to do any kind of work with our hands. We will pray for good mechanics to come out from home and support themselves and help us in such work, but until such men come, we who are here must do all we can. I feel more deeply than I can express the need of this kind of work, and I wish I could say anything to make some good brother who is a good mechanic, and could spend a little time at home in learning how to do several kinds of work so as to be able to teach several trades. I have known such men. I feel the need of such self-supporting men. The natives have very few tools, and do poor work and do it very slowly. A carpenter at home would do more work than three or four of the carpenters here. They cannot make good shoes or boots, and a man who should bring a good set of tools and make such shoes as are made in America could do well, for leather is cheap; and if he knows also how to tan leather, as they do at home, he can make a fortune, for hides are very cheap; and so every kind of trade needs to be improved, and if the Christians take the lead they will be well-to-do and able to support the Lord's work, and they will be intelligent enough to preach to the masses and give straight testimonies for Jesus too; and the fact that they are not paid for preaching will make their preaching more fruitful. I could hire men to become nominal Christians, and preach or do anything, but I want men who shall be self-supporting and preach for the love of it. O, that God would stir hearts in this matter. Are there not men and women of God, ministers and others, who can do the work without pay? If not, then the outlook for the salvation of the world is bad indeed.

I wonder, as often as I think of it, that Christians at home are so slow to obey the last command of Christ, and I feel that there will be a terrible day of reckoning for it. Many a man who would shrink from breaking the Seventh Commandment, or the Eighth or the Sixth or the Fourth, habitually break the command, "go ye therefore and make disciples of all nations." Who shall dare to say that this is less important than the others!

This letter has clearly set before us the need of the industrial school and the plan upon which it is to be carried out.

The English government has offered us land and a small amount of money for such a school. Are there not manufacturers and dealers in this country who will donate tools and machinery to forward this work in India? There may be mechanics who could give tools for this school, if they cannot go themselves.

Any one desiring to aid in this work can correspond with the secretary of the Board, Rev. L. J. Donaldson, Oberlin, Ohio, or with the writer.

THE LIGHT BEARERS.

BY CYRUS SMITH.

The parable of the "ten virgins" spoken of by the Saviour has reference to the judgment. It also represents the churches in these last days; five of them were wise, an equal number foolish. Those that are wise are so because of the oil in their lamps, giving steady light that all who will may shun the different men-made ways of Satan.

The light which this oil produces is the truth of God through which we are to be sanctified. Christ prayed for all believers to be sanctified through the truth, and the Spirit of God is to lead us into all truth.

There is nothiug instituted or organized of men that does not effect their morals and religion, even the giving "a cup of cold water,' consequently there is nothing in this or any age that the Bible does not speak of approvingly or condemns.

"A glory gilds the sacred page
Majestic like the sun.
It gives a light to every age,
It gives, but borrows none."

If there is nothing that the Bible does not speak of, then it must give us light on secret societies. They are in existence and are either good or bad. If they are right, churches should say so as guardians of the truth in their disciplines, and favor them by exorting the members to join and encourage them by preaching the Gospel concerning them. But this has never been done by churches claiming to be Christian. But it would be a true light providing secret societies were scriptural.

Christianity has no neutral ground on any subject. She is always moving from conquest to conquest. It follows that if secret societies are right there is not a true church of Christ on earth, but all are foolish.

There are churches that exclude secret societies by discipline and otherwise, claiming it to be Christian duty to "have no fellowship with the unfruitful works of darkness." The ministers tell their members, "Christ said of his disciples, 'they are not of the world even as I am not of the world;'" consequently they urge these members not to join any worldly institution like the lodge, and exort them to be more like Jesus who said "in secret have I said nothing."

The churches that give a true light, or the truth on everything that effects the morals and religion of humanity, are the virgins with oil in their lamps. They are equal in number to the foolish who have slept till "the enemy has come in like a flood," with popular sin that has destroyed the oil or driven away that "charity" which "rejoices in the truth." They have their lamps, however, and do very much talking, but the light that is in them is darkness. Let us thank God that his Christ saves some of their individual members for they are virgins. May God help them to replenish their oil according to his Word, for it is the only place to "buy the truth," and let them "sell it not," to the lodge.

Clearfield, Iowa.

The learned Lord Fry, when lately addressing the Birbeck Literary Institution in England, said that whether study was pursued for its own sake or for an ulterior purpose, one passion should chiefly hold sway in the mind of the student—the passion for truth. It is a pity that students, young and old, do not fully realize this. The true student must love truth. He must follow it wherever it leads, even though it destroy some long cherished illusions. He must cultivate self-discipline, patience and a willingness to take pains, and above all he must remember if his study of things seen be pursued unseen, knowledge will be purchased at a ruinous price, for while study is good, and knowledge better, firm and reasonable faith is best of all.—The Critic, Halifax.

If you have secrets to be legitimately kept, keep them yourself. It is folly to pay twenty-five dollars, more or less, with added annual dues, to hire other people to keep them for you, or for the privilege of keeping secrets for other people. There is no possible light in which secret societies can stand the test of good common sense. There is one difficulty in engaging to keep the secrets of others, since they may turn out—as is more than intimated in the obligations of some secret societies—to be "murder and treason" secrets. "When thou sawest a thief, thou consentest with him," is the brand in the forefront of some secret obligations with which we are familiar.—Wesleyan Methodist.

CHRISTIAN WARFARE.

Y, hovah ish milchamah, Ex. 15: 3.

BY QUAKER BOY.

The Israelite wars of the old dispensation,
Relentlessly fought with the gory red hand,
Prefigured the sore but less bloody prohation
Of those who now fight under Christian command.

No war of the Greek under fierce Alexander,
Nor Roman achievement through Cæsar's command,
More brilliant than those when some Jewish commander
Met foes of the typical people and land.

Those people in many a conflict victorious,
Throughout their dominion by Joshua led,
Displaced the false worships as conquerors glorious,
And numbered their foes 'mong the fallen and dead.

And David, the psalmist, with harp so æolian,
A warrior invincible, reddened with gore,
No valiant Achilles or modern Napoleon
More trophies from conflicts illustrious bore.

There was also "the sword of the Lord and of Gideon,"
Three hundred that lapped as a dog, with the tongue,
Let slip on the countless suhalterns of Midian
And caused a great slaughter by poets unsung.

We utterly fail in these verses to mention
A tithe of the hattles the Israelites fought,
Indeed, it was only our humhle intention
To see what good men in past ages have wrought.

Whoever he he who vile war now opposes,
These victorious wars by the sword long ago
Give truth to the famous assertion of Moses,
"Y'hovah ish milchamah, Y'hovah sh'mo."

Has He altered the warfare and also the armor,
According to James and according to Paul?
The ensanguined sword, he it said to his honor,
Receives countermand as a weapon—that's all.

His soldiers must fight, hut no longer should redden
The earth with the hlood of their foes as of yore
Though mighty through God, till they reach Armageddon
Their fiery conflicts will hardly be o'er.

To arms, then! Up Barak! Awake, O D'borah;
Thou, wife of Lapidoth, shalt utter a song
When victory crowns, but now 'tis thy glory
To march against minions of darkness and wrong.

Naphtali and Zebulon in faithful unison
Suhmissive and warlike in body and mind;
The stars in their paths and the old river Kishou
And armies of heaven in sympathy joined.

Was Asher more blest being not a partaker?
And Dan, did he judge the great contest unwise?
Was Reuben somewhat a pre-historic Quaker?
And Meroz a traitor? no help he supplies.

JOSEPH COOK'S LECTURES.

LEADING TOPICS NOTED IN PRELUDES AND INTERLUDES.

MORMONISM.

Mormonism is in something of a flutter, but far from being in fear or flight. One of the worst mischiefs of current discussion on this matter is that we are too hopeful and too frenetical in consequence of our beiug too sanguine. There have been lately iu Utah some fifty commitments to jail for polygamy, but probably in the time during which these commitments have been made five times that number of plural marriages have been contracted. And if Mormon leaders may have thought of escaping to Mexico and taking up their quarters beyond the range of the laws of the United States, yet, once over the liue, they might have acted with impunity as leaders of Mormons north of the line. The root of the cancer might have been in Mexican soil, but the long arms of it would have reached toward the north, beyond the line between the republic and its neighbor. Even if the leaders were to go to the Sandwich Islands, and the mass of the Mormon people still live in the Salt Lake Valley, it would not be certain that we should uot yet have to conteud with their influence; that is, with the political power of the priesthood, just so soon as Utah should be admitted as a State. Let the Utah Mormon leaders leave Utah, let things improve there, let Utah be admitted as a State, let the leaders come back, and we should then have Mormonism under the shield of State rights, and be in a worse condition than at present.

ANTI-CHINESE RIOTS.

"Who is responsible for the anti-Chinese riots?' Liquor-sellers, loafers, cowardly citizens, lax executors of the law. One of the journals of Boston not loug ago gave the public news that a Chinese cook who was brought to this port by the brigantine, "Moses B. Tower," from Canton, China, and was prevented from landing on aecount of the anti-Chinese law, aud who had remained on the vessel for several days, was caught by United States Marshall Galloupe in front of the postoffice building and arraigned as a criminal. This occurred on Boston soil. Why? Because the sentiment of the East is far too much influenced by the clamor of the roughs, tramps, sneaks, thugs of the Pacific coast and by the ancient and not honorable family of wax-noses among politieians and editors whom these riotous elements on the frontier are leading.

But sound opinion, West as well as East—and by sound opinion I mean that of the holders of property, that of the editors and preachers, and conscientious citizens generally—insists on two things: First we must keep our treaties with China, for they are a part of the fundamental law of the land; and, next, we must protect all who are on our soil, and do so according to our own fundamental laws.

One reason why the Chinaman is persecuted is that he never patronizes the whisky dens. Another reason is that he is extremely economical, and can dive deeper and come up cleaner than any other poor man; aud so he is a very dangerous rival iu business.

The case is much like that of the Know-Nothing anti-foreign crusade, occurring here in the East some years ago. There was, or was expected, a deluge of poor labor from Ireland and elsewhere, and the cry rose here that only native-born Americans should be patronized. There may have been some reason behind the cry, but we know what became of the party that tried to float into power on the sentiment behind that watch-word.

SECRET LABOR LODGES.

"What are the merits and demerits of the organization known as the Knights of Labor?"

The first demerit is that the organization is secret. The American people will never allow its political or industrial destiny to be controlled by any secret society, however powerful. [Applause.]

The second objection is that the organization had adopted several semi-socialistic principles, and has too many avowed socialists among its accepted allies. For one, I do not believe in putting all the railways and telegraphs into the hands of the Government. Neither do I do believe in such a nationalization of the land as I fear would indirectly result from granting the demands of the Knights of Labor. One of their chief official representatives, now in his seventh term as general master workman, maintains that no person should be allowed to own more land than he can cultivate, and not more than one huudred acres in any case.

It is said that there are two millions of working men in this organization. If I were a politician I should not like to criticise it. But, as I hope I have given some evidence of being a friend of the workingman, I must stand here, and now, on the same platform I stood on years ago. I am for Christian socialism and against atheistic socialism. I am for the institutions of Lasalle, and against those of Karl Marx.

As to the merits of the Knights of Labor, they are great and numerous. In the first place, they are asking for boards of arbitration between capital and labor. Every one who has studied the history of conciliatory legislation on this subject will know that the time of Mr. Mundella's reforms in England as to arbitration—in fact, from the time of the organization of the arbitration boards under Napoleon I., in France—we have had in the world most important evidences that capital and labor need not settle their difficulties in the rough way, by strikes, and lockouts, and cut-throat competition. They may do it by persuasion; they may so employ arbitration as to establish a sliding scale of prices adapted to the market. This has been done in several places in the iron and coal trade. Why cannot it be done in the cotton faetories here in New England? Another merit of the organization I am discussing is that it intends to protect the young, to secure instruction for children, to keep them out of factories until they are fifteen or sixteen years of age, and to protect also the labor of womeu. The association asks for the organization of a Bureau of Labor Statistics iu every commonwealth.

Wherever workingmen, in their organizations, stand up for palpable rights of their own, I mean to stand by such organizations. [Applause.] But wherever workingmen's organizations make themselves tyrannical, either over society at large or over workingmen, I am against these organizations. [Applause.]

MOTHER HAVILAND'S EXPERIENCES PRESENT AND PAST.

I returned a few days ago from a five months' visit to my former home State, Michigan, where I spent a little time with two of my children, as well as friends, and prisons, having the privilege of addressing 1,730 unfortunate men and women, three-fourths of whom were in trouble through the drink traffic. When I said this to one of the prison officers, he replied, "You may add a fourth of the last fourth."

But this awful maelstrom of the liquor traffic is not the only crying sin of our day. There is another mark of the BEAST, whose name is Legion, the lodge system. In our great National Emporium, there are no less than one hundred and eighty secret orders. Other cities follow in the train. Christians are yoked together with unbelievers. How can the ministers of Christ, the world's Redeemer, the Lord of glory, who fearlessly declared when brought before his wicked accusors, "I spake openly to the world. I ever taught in the synagogue, and in the temple, whither the Jews always resort; and in secret have I said nothing." "how can such a minister answer for his lodge fellowship? Here was uttered a cardinal truth, that he had clearly taught in the object lesson of the candle that was not to be placed under a bushel, but on a candle stick, that all might see the light.

How can ministers of the Gospel take those unchristian oaths to keep those secrets, diametrically opposed to the definite teaching of our Lord Jesus Christ? How divergent are the paths chosen by thousands of his professed followers of this nineteenth century! Very many of these no doubt have received the seal of worship, who have been induced by various motives to accept the mark of the Beast. But it seems to me that either the seal or the mark must fade from the standpoint of divine truth. Does not the brilliant seal fade with adherents to the worship of this legion Beast? How can they take the life-taking oath to become "Worshipful Grand Master," etc., when John, the revelator, was forbidden to worship the angel who had shown him marvelous scenes. "See thou do it not: I am thy fellow-servant: and of thy brethren that have the testimony of Jesus: worship God: for the testimony of Jesus is the spirit of prophecy." We leave the self-examiner to decide which is fading, the seal, or mark.

In 1865–6, in Washington, D. C., were fifteen thousand ex-slaves, just emerging from chattlehood to citizenship: and the all-important question of that hour was how the reconstruction of the South was going to be accomplished? Placed before us was the canvas, and who was wise enough to use the brush? It was discovered that a few strokes of the reconstruction brush was called for on the North side as well as South, and with both colored and white races. In this chaotic state a few of the more intelligent colored people knocked at the Good Templar's door for admittance, but it refused to open. And a few charter members organized a Good Templar's lodge for them, and all sympathizers with this class of our citizens. The result was, that many white Good Templars came into these lodges. Although I had always been opposed to secret societies, yet in view of the probable result of the drifting into intemperate habits, as the masses of this class were too ignorant to read the ceremonies and pledges, I thought, might be an important help to them: and so I stepped into the Good Templar's lodge, and found General C. H. Howard there for the same reason, and soon we had with us General O. O. Howard for the same reason. But I doubt the permanent good for that people we anticipated. I have never bowed in entering the house of Rimmon since I left Washington in 1866, and how many of that race of people were saved from the drink ruin, out of the few hundreds of that fifteen thousand, eternity alone can reveal. May God fully arm and equip his servants everywhere, to go forth with the light and love of the Great Head of the church militant, that will dispel the darkness, and melt away the battlements of secretism and the liquor traffic.

FROM THE ILLINOIS AGENT.

A Good Work in Oswego.—Helpers for the Truth.—A Store full of poor customers.—The Pastors.—A graduate of "old Mother Kilwinning" in a Congregational pulpit.—The W. C. T. U.—Good Witnesses.

When I was leaving Oswego a few weeks ago fearing a seige of fever, a prominent Congregational church official informed me that he was confident that I could obtain that church in which to speak; as far as his voice and influence could go he would assist me. I felt too unwell to act on his suggestion then, but on returning to that city a few days since, I found that others were not so liberal. I learned that I could obtain Shephard's Hall. A good Presbyterian brother agreed to donate coal for a meeting, and an M. E. brother agreed to haul it. A Presbyterian lady was willing to loan us a nice new organ for use in the meeting, and Miss Lillie Van Driesin, one of the best musicians in the city was willing to give her services.

On Wednesday evening the 17th ult., I had an animated discussion with the members of the Oswego lodge, in Bro. Haight's store. Prof. McFarland, principal of the public school, asked me what objections I had to Freemasonry. It is needless for me to pursue the line of argument here; suffice it to say that the crowd increased and also the interest, until the standing room was about all occupied. While he did not dare to deny the truth of the revelations respecting the institution, he endeavored to cast discredit on them by the old method of reflecting on his opponent. He assumed that he was sure I was not a Christian because I opposed so good an order. In so doing he was accompanied by another who played on the "perjury" harp. After giving them all I thought them capable of digesting, I passed through the crowd to return to my lodging, inviting them to attend the meeting in the hall. But they loudly cried "More! More!" while some followed me with threats, abuse, and profanity.

I called on Rev. H. Minard, whom I have mentioned before. When the subject was brought up he exclaimed. "Oh! I love my Freemasonry!" Rev. S. Weir, the young pastor, was about to unite with the Masonic order when I first met him, but after stating my own experience in it and supplying him with Weed pamphlets, tracts and my Champaign circular, he assured me that he never would join them. On Sabbath he read my notice from his pulpit and urged the members of his congregation to attend. Rev. Gault, who also has never been cabletowed, read the notice and did likewise.

I attended the Congregational church on Sabbath morning and handed the notice to the sexton, who placed it with others on the pulpit. I took a seat within ten feet of the pulpit, and when the pastor, T. M. Smith, entered it, saw him take the notice and within three minutes heard him tear it to atoms. When he read the announcements, he alluded to it, and stated that "a similar meeting had been announced to be held in the rink in this city some time ago, and it proved to be nothing but a tirade against Masonry." When he closed his service I went forward and requested him to return the notice. He stepped back into the pulpit, gathered up the fragments and reluctantly handed them to me.

I then asked him, "Where were you made?"

He replied, "I was not made in this country."

"Then you were made in Scotland," I added, and he replied affirmatively.

"Give me the name and number of your lodge, if you please."

"I belong to the oldest lodge in the world," he said, evasively.

"Then you belong to the Kilwinning Lodge."

"Yes, I do," responded he, looking at me as though he thought me bewitched for being able to name his lodge so far from its location.

That evening I preached in the hall to quite an audience. The next morning, agreeably to his request, I called on the Congregational pastor and loaned him Mackay's Ritualist and Freemasonry Illustrated. He asked me for the name and number of the lodge which holds my membership, which I gave him and which he carefully wrote in a memorandum.

I tried to show him how inconsistent he was in preferring to address a heathen lodge to ascertain my standing, rather than address the president of the conference to which I belong.

On the following Tuesday afternoon, while visiting from house to house, I called at the place where the W. C. T. U. were in session. The ladies urged the president, Mrs. Minard, to call on me to address the meeting, which she reluctantly did. I extended the greetings of the Illinois Christian Association, and stated that it was in sympathy with every reform, especially that against lodgery as the prop and bulwark of the rum traffic. At this several ladies turned agonizingly toward the windows, but they were interested again when the proof was forthcoming to sustain the assertion.

The meetings in the hall continued each evening in the face of bitter opposition from the craft, who would extinguish the light in the entry, and who stationed some of the "baser sort" at the foot of the stairway to inform the people that "there is no meeting up there to night. That man has gone away; he left the city to-day." In this way they succeeded in dispersing the people to such a degree that those who did come up regardless of their falsehoods, reported what they were engaged in when accountiug for the light attendauce. The large chart did good service as it hung before each audience. On Friday evening two gentlemen testified that from personal experience they knew its delineations to be correct; that my representations of Freemasonry correspouded with their experience in the lodge, and that they renounced it for the same reasons which governed me in doing so. G. T. DISSETTE.

OHIO NOTES.

Made Welcome in Cincinnati.—A Sincere Convert.—The Lane Seminary meeting a Seed-time.

CINCINNATI, March 3, 1886.

DEAR CYNOSURE:—I came to this city one week ago at the request of Pres. J. Blanchard, to assist him in some meetings. He needed no introduction to the older inhabitants. As he was a graduate of the Lane Presbyterian Seminary, and for several years pastor of a very unpopular anti-slavery church, he is now honored by some of the oldest and most respected citizens in the city. Martin R. Coney, in whose beautiful home I now write, had anticipated our coming and has done all in his power to make our stay pleasant. Messrs. Seth C. Foster, Henry Martin and others, well known to the business men here, have encouraged us much.

Our first calls were on the psalm-singing people. We found them as we expected, true to the principles of reform. The Reformed Presbyterian pastors are at present away from the city. Rev. W. H. French, pastor of the U. P. church, invited the President to occupy his pulpit Sabbath morning. As arrangements had been previously made for him to speak in the Presbyterian church at Clifton at this time, he was compelled to decline.

On Sabbath evening I spoke in a very neat colored M. E. church on Walnut Hills. I found the colored people here exceptionally intelligent. Rev. Charles Bundy, the pastor, in introducing me to the congregation stated that he was a secret society man, but believed in free speech. I do not suppose there were ten men in the house that were not connected with some secret order. They gave me their undivided attention, and were evidently very much surprised to learn that any white person should be opposed to secret societies. At the conclusion Rev. B. said, "I am only part of a Mason; I have only taken one degree. If it be true that Christ is rejected from the lodge you may just scratch my name off of your book and count me forever opposed to it." After listening to the President's telling address delivered in the Lane Seminary Chapel the following evening, he told me he should have nothing more to do with secret orders, sent in his name for the Cynosure, and agreed to distribute tracts among his people.

On Monday evening, as already intimated, the President spoke in the Lane Seminary Chapel. The young men studying here are soon to be pastors of Presbyterian churches in different parts of the country. God only knows the good this address may accomplish. To-night arrangements are made for us to speak in a large colored church called Union Chapel; a good meeting is expected. The President goes to Dayton in the morning to attend meetings arranged by Rev. Wm. Dillon. I shall stop at Hamilton. Hope to reach Dayton in time to help on Sabbath. W. B. Stoddard.

PROPHESYING IN CALIFORNIA.

MOBBED IN STOCKTON.

I have just returned from a visit to the Pacific coast, and I find that Masonry is firmly intrenched in California. In every town that I visited, and especially in San Francisco and Stockton, I found it so.

As I went out through Texas, I distributed tracts on Masonry, and came very near being mobbed at El Paso for giving away a few copies of the Cynosure and a few tracts. I tell you that Satan has his seat in California, and there is no Sabbath in that country, and apparently but few real Christians.

I lectured three times in Stockton, and I had to get away for fear of being killed by a mob. But I broke the ice, and the work is begun near the Golden Gate. I pray that those Masonic temples may be shaken until Satan and his hosts be made to tremble. It is a wonder to me that the good Lord does not sink the city of San Francisco into the sea, for it is the wickedest city in these States. But thanks be to God, there are more than ten righteous people in that city. J. K. Glassford.

MOBBED IN SAN FRANCISCO.

216½ O'Farrell St., San Francisco, Feb. 23, 1886.

Dear Cynosure:—I have held Anti-masonic meetings on Sacramento and Montgomery streets for the last five months. I have had Bro. J. B. Wheeler, of Oakland, and Bro. March of this city to help me in the good work. Last Sunday [the 21st] I addressed a large audience on Freemasonry and Free Government, out of the tract of President J. Blanchard. I spoke of its clearness to many educated and uneducated people. At the same time a mob was organized in a saloon near by to break up the meeting. While I was speaking the mob came out two and three abreast. The leader was a son of one of the judges of this city, a young man about twenty-five years old; he was drunk. He came to me and tried to put his hand into my mouth, at the same time his left-hand man caught me by the neck, tearing my collar off, others striking and kicking me, and broke our stand to pieces. The police, knowing what the mob was going to do, all went out of sight. I had before told my hearers in such a case not to use any violence. This is what they wanted us to do; then the police would have been back in one minute and would have arrested us, but we gave them no chance. My friends told me I ought to have the mob arrested. I told them it would do no good, for the prosecuting attorney, judges, and the list of jurors and lawyers are all Freemasons. They would bring in their banditti and would swear them all clear.

Masonry has nearly suppressed free speech on this coast. I have unveiled the fountain of idolatry from which Freemasonry flows, and its connection with every organization on this coast. It has joined all to control all. I have spoken of its despotic and idolatrous character, its antagonism to our free republican government and to Christianity; and it is going, in the near future, to try to overthrow and ruin all.

I have fought the work of darkness right in its own mouth in this city for five years, and paid my own expenses. Masons look on us as a very hateful set. I have made the prophecies of the Bible a study for thirty years, and speak every Sunday. I show the people that God has shown in his Word that Masonry is the work of darkness, and the enemy of all good men and women.

I used to think that all men would be saved, but I have changed my opinion, for Jesus says in Matt. 10: 33, "But whosoever shall deny me before men, him will I also deny before my Father which is in Heaven." On this text I cannot see how Masons, Odd-fellows, etc., can ever get into the kingdom of God, who deny Jesus before men and the world.

THE REFORM BALL ROLLING ON IN CANADA.

Watford, Ont.

I am spreading the Cynosure as well as I can, and other literature. Few in this country, if any, are more thoroughly committed to the work of reform. Both in and out of the pulpit I denounce the many-headed anti-Christ, in the interests of a pure Gospel and a holy church. The Iconoclast, a noble paper, edited by Rev. T. L. Wilkinson, has expired, and your paper is now needed all the more. I have felt very sorry that Bro. Wilkinson has had to labor so long and suffer and sacrifice so much to arouse a church that has been opiated largely by the men who ought to have castigated her; but sorrier still for the church, which by her clandestine and spiritually adulterous connections with the world has so many bastard institutions and schemes to support that her legitimate children, such as the Iconoclast, mission enterprises, etc., etc., must be starved or stabbed to death.

Quite a storm of opposition has been beating against the rock of truth on which I stand, and I have been made to feel in many ways the power of the Secret Empire. But by the grace of God I have been enabled to preach from: "Whosoever will be a friend of the world is the enemy of God," "Come out from among them," etc., with every incubus of fear for salary, fame, or life, thrust aside; and, brain and heart inflamed with light and love, have dared to stand as an ambassador of the government of heaven to represent Christ and his ultimatum to a rebel world and revolted church.

I am persuaded that we ought to take the boldest kind of a stand that truth and love will allow for the emancipation of every Christian from every kind of worldly and devilish domination and fellowship. If we depend on God alone for support he can, as of old, make worldly wolves protect and feed the lambs instead of eating them. In this money-loving age it strikes our congregations with an awe that is half the battle to see a man preaching dollars out of his pocket, and with Holy Ghost fire cremating their Golden Calf to make ash-and-water physic to purge them from all forms of idolatry.

If we are allowed to suffer, we may rejoice that we are counted worthy to suffer shame for his name, and count it as part of a precious legacy, as Paul did when he said, "Unto you it is GIVEN on the behalf of Christ not only to believe on him but also to suffer for his sake."

Some of the society men have acknowledged themselves defeated in discussion with me. No. 1 said, "I can say amen now to every word you say;" and that "there is only a paper wall between Orangeism and Masonry."

No. 2 says if he leaves one he will have to "leave both, as they are morally the same." "Whatever good there is in secretism it is for this world and not for the world to come." He is glad that I take the stand I do; has learned much, and asks many questions, among others, "What should I do?"

No. 3, a leading granger, came to the parsonage to give me a free lecture. I levelled your Grange exposure at him, and he soon acknowledged that I had it all but the annual password. He said he had never noticed how Christ was dishonored, and he will endeavor through the Provincial and Dominion Granges to get Christ introduced to the lodge. He ordered, through me, your rituals.

No. 4 tells me he has quit tobacco, and will leave his lodge; and presented me with a coat as a thank offering.

No. 5 has left his lodge of Odd-fellows, and denounces them as a fraud. We exchanged grips, etc., and found them the same. He purchased your fifty-cent exposure of Odd-fellowship, admitted its truth, and said it contained all the Odd-fellowship he ever got and twice as much beside, though it had cost him up to date $35.

We have fought hard and with much local success against the desecration of churches and church memberships by tobacco, tea-meetings, sociables, etc., calling tea-meetings for church or lodge purposes a beggarly business, unworthy the support of Christian or business men. Yours to suffer now and reign forever, S. V. Irvine.

CORRESPONDENCE.

"SALVATION HALL."

Maryville, Mo., March 1, 1886.

Editor Cynosure:—It has been a long time since I penned a line for your paper. I am just from a trip through Iowa, looking after the interests of the American party. Owing to stormy weather we pulled into this place, to spend Sabbath with our faithful co-worker, Elder R. Smith, who has been a friend to us in need, and whose home is a cheering temporary abode for tired reformers. Bro. Smith has a "Salvation Hall" in this town of which we had read. Just now the city is stirred as perhaps never before. E. M. Forrest, a noted gambler, lately reformed, is causing men to tremble and grow pale as he delineates the miserable career of the drunkard and the gambler, speaking of actual experience in iniquity and sin. Desperate men are breaking down nightly, and no doubt God has chosen Bro. Forrest as a mighty champion for the Gospel in saving fallen humanity. We have heard not a few noted Gospel temperance workers, and in the hands of God this talented and devoted man may lead thousands from darkness and sin to a saving knowledge of our Lord and Saviour Jesus Christ. He is humble, nervy and aggressive. May God keep and lead him. Experience will make him a workman that needeth not be ashamed.

What God wants is men of mettle, and he is raising up that kind here and there. "Old men for counsel but young men for war." Elder Smith is not only one of God's counsellors to point young reformers to the old paths, but he is as full of energy and holy fire as the youngest. "Salvation Hall" is located on the public square in the heart of the city, and no man can molest or dictate there. God directs by the Holy Spirit. There should be such a hall in every town. But more anon.

MONEY WELL SPENT.

Boston, Feb. 18, 1886.

Editor Cynosure:—In your valuable paper of this date I find the following paragraph: "Mr. Ford, of the Youth's Companion, Boston, is said to spend $35,000 a year on three Baptist churches in that city. His liberality is to be commended if not his judgment. This sum would help 300 city or foreign mission churches with probably 300 times the result."

Allow me to say, simply as an observer, that if the Cynosure knew in what part of Boston the three churches supported by the generous proprietor of the Youth's Companion are located, and the invaluable work they are doing, it would commend his judgment as well as liberality. All three of the churches are in the midst of the poor, and working classes, who flock in crowds to nearly every service. The missionary work done among the unconverted and distressed is almost incalculable. Take one church for an example, which is situated in the worst part of the city—the South Cove. The pastor, whom the present one succeeds, was noted, it is rumored, for his Masonic tendencies, which readily accounts for the dying condition of that church, until Mr. Ford began to take an active interest in it.

The change is almost miraculous. Dr. J. H. Gunning, the present pastor, is a flaming Gospel sword, true as Damascus steel, and is justly considered one of the most powerful and fearless preachers in Boston. What other preachers seem fearful of doing, he strikes unmerciful blows at the "schools of moral philosophy," which infest this place, poisoning the whole religious atmosphere. The presence and example of this man alone, is worth the whole $35,000 expended upon all three churches, which are doing synonymous work. The existence of these Gospel work shops are simply indispensable, and the work done attests Mr. Ford's good judgment as well as liberality. D. P. Mathews.

MASONIC OUTRAGES.

New Market, N. H.

Several writers have suggested in the Cynosure that a pamphlet be published narrating Masonic outrages. It seems to me the occasion requires not a pamphlet, hastily written for a temporary purpose, but a book, prepared with careful research and historic accuracy. It should contain the numerous atrocious murders of Freemasons for violating their Masonic oath; the assaulting, maiming and murdering of those who have publicly discountenanced Masonry; the threatening, mobbing and boycotting of most devoted Christian men; the outrageous thwarting of justice in the trial of Masonic criminals; the bank robberies by Masonic employes, and the defalcations of Masonic officials of corporations, towns and States, where the law was successfully defied by Masonic craft; and last, but not least, the scandalous perversion of all law and justice in ecclesiastical courts, managed by Masonic intrigue, either to acquit the guilty Masonic pastor or condemn and disgrace the man of God, abnoxious because he had opposed Freemasonry.

I ask the publication of such a book not for revenge or to glorify modern martyrs of truth, but that the will of the Lord may be done in causing great criminals to "become a sign" to warn others, and that Satan, by the history of his mischief, may pay tribute to God and his saints who have patiently suffered for well-doing. Let such a book be published and no library could justly be deemed complete without it. As to the author, Miss Flagg has been named. She is no doubt the most talented living writer the Anti-masonic agitation has developed, and would do the work well. There are reasons, however, why some other person might be preferred. The historic value of the book is to be its main strength. The Freemasons will seek to break its force by denying its historic truth, as the Roman Catholics sought, in vain, to discredit the crushing record of Fox's Book of Martyrs. Would it not be better for such a book to be compiled by President Charles A. Blanchard, or President George, or Rev. Henry T. Cheever, who has both leisure and wealth as well as a favorable reputation as a conservative historical writer. Such a book offers to the writer immortality as an author, and immediate financial reward. Some capable person should be selected in each State to compile and verify local Masonic outrages, and thus assist in making the record as complete as possible. Three or four Masonic murders have been committed in New Hampshire, and yet no suitable historic record has been made of any of them. My deep interest in the proposed book is my excuse for this lengthy communication.

S. C. KIMBALL.

THAT PROPOSED TRACT.

Allow me to say, dear editor and friends of reform, that the proposal of brother Hinman, that Miss Flagg compile said tract or book, as may be best, struck my mind as a wise suggestion. I am glad that she will consent to undertake the task. No one who is familiar with her pen, can doubt her ability to put up such a tract or book. It should be a book of facts, condensed and well selected—"Survival of the fittest."

How is the author to get them? Allow a suggestion. Many of the chief actors in the facts to be embraced, are living, and fully competent to speak or write them.

Let them at once forward them to E. E. Flagg. Let D. P. Rathbun, C. A. Blanchard (I use no titles) S. E. Starry, J. H. Austin, J. F. Browne, G. T. Dissette, R. N. Countee, and all other who have been subjected to Masonic outrages of any note worthy degree in the past twenty or more years, write out facts, such as can be proven to be facts, and send them on with the least possible delay. These facts imprinted on the memory of the sufferer of such outrages, can be given, living and breathing, as it were, in a life-like form, to interest any reader. They should not breathe the least vindictiveness in language or in style or spirit. Jesus, in the agonies of death, could pray for his persecutors. "Father forgive them," etc.

Our object in proposing this work, was to enlighten the people. They need it. Satan has so closed up the sources of information to the people, that very few know that bitter and bloody persecutions are enacted in our very midst, by the combined forces of Masonry. Our Baptists know nothing of the bloody assaults on R. N. Countee, a devout and worthy Baptist minister of good abilities. Not a Baptist paper, to my knowledge, this side of Memphis, has noticed it. Why? Because the lodge has done it. These papers never tire of talking of the persecutions of Baptists in New England two centuries ago, and of Roger Williams, but if a dozen Baptist ministers were to fall victims to lodgery today, I question if they would dare to publish the facts unvarnished. Lord pity them!

Of course much skill is necessary to compile and to condense the facts of the past twenty years, to say nothing of Morgan, Stearns, Green, Miller and a host of others gone to rest, from this lodge-cursed world. There are facts enough, were they all embraced since 1826, to make a book equal in compass to Foxe's book of Martyrs, or Dowling's History of Romanism. We trust that God will guide the pen of sister Flagg in giving us such a tract, pamphlet, or book as will tell on the millions of our people, and keep us from being crushed to death by the viper symbolized by the lodge serpent, coiled around our world, as in most lodge rituals. Are they not prophetic?

Let the N. C. A. officers assist this work. We know the editors of the Cynosure will lend all the aid in their power in documents, good words and all else required. Our prayers for the work and its author.

NATHAN CALLENDER.

TWIN DESTROYERS.

SILOAM SPRINGS, Ark.

DEAR CYNOSURE:—I like the paper very much indeed. I have read it very carefully whenever my health would permit, and the more I read the better I like it. If I was a young man I would be glad to take hold with you and help put down these twin destroyers of human happiness and prosperity, and the two greatest enemies to the success of the Gospel—intemperance and secrecy. I have spent the strength of my life in fighting slavery and intemperance, together with the legalized system of murder in our government. I have made these great moral reform questions a part of my faith in the religion of Christ, and have preached them with all the ability that God has given me. But now I am old and in feeble health, not able to do much more. My feelings and sympathies have never been so much enlisted against secrecies before as they have been since reading the Cynosure. The fact is, I think, that my time and thought has been so much taken up with these other things that I have never stopped to investigate what seems to me now to be a gigantic evil, and my prayers will ever be with and for you in your efforts of reform. As ever yours in the love of the truth as it is in Jesus,

D. W. ATKINSON.

BIBLE LESSONS.

STUDIES IN JEWISH HISTORY.

LESSON XII, March 21, 1886.—Messiah's Messenger.—Mal. 3: 1-6; 4: 1-6.

GOLDEN TEXT.—Behold, I will send my messenger, and he shall prepare the way before me.—Mal. 3: 1.

[Open the Bible and read the lesson.]

COMMENTS ON THE LESSON BY E. E. FLAGG.

1. The prophecy of Christ's coming. vs. 1–3. David saw a king, Isaiah, a suffering Saviour; Malachi sees the Judge. He is to appear at the darkest period of the world's history, when even his chosen nation looks not for him. He came to a profaned temple whose priests were hirelings. The religious teachers of the nation were "a generation of vipers," poisoning souls with their false doctrines; "whitened sepulchres," hiding the most crying sins under a cloak of sanctity. Yet in that dust heap of formalism and hypocrisy the Refiner finds the silver. There is a sense in which this prophecy is still fulfilled. When any great moral or religious reform comes to the front, and divides and sifts men, laying bare their hidden motives, confounding the fearful and unbelieving time-server, and revealing the Gideons and Daniels of their age, Christ still sits in judgment, and in the light of his refining fires, "the nations will learn righteousness."

2. It will be in judgment against both national and individual sins. vs. 4–6, ch. 5: 1. The category of Judah's sins are not really unlike our own. We have the sorceries of the Masonic lodge, bewitching the people with their pretense of mystery; its extra judicial oaths with their horrible profanity. The Seventh Commandment has almost been set aside by our lax divorce laws; the stranger has been turned away from his right in the persons of the unoffending Chinese. But God is still the unchanging One. Still he hates robbery for burnt offerings; still he is a swift witness against all such violations of his pure and holy law. The imagery of ch. 6, vs. 1, is very similar to that used in the Epistles to describe Christ's coming at the final judgment. But the fires of that day will only burn up the chaff; that which is no good to the universe, of which God himself can make no use. The solemn question is, are we dead, inanimate chaff, or living wheat?

3. The final triumph of righteousness. vs. 2–6. Christ's coming, though so terrible to his enemies, will be warmth and light and healing to those who love him. It will endow them with such mental and spiritual vigor that the promise, "Ye shall tread down the wicked," will be gloriously fulfilled in fresh champions for the truth coming forward to battle with iniquity. John the Baptist preached a personal religion, "to turn the hearts of the fathers to the children." This might properly include such care of the rising generation as would seek, by well-enforced laws, to shield them from the saloon and its kindred allurements to vice. "And to turn the hearts of the children to their fathers," i. e., by a return to the old integrity of their ancestors, thus adding new sacredness and tenderness to the family relation, for the stability of a government rests on its homes, and such a state of things as is described in ch. 3: 14–16, will soon bring a self-entailed curse on any nation.

LIGHT FROM THE WORD.

Where is the refining elsewhere process alluded to? Is. 1: 25; Zech. 13: 8, 9. Is sorcery a characteristic of anti-Christ? Matt. 24. 24; 2 Thess., 2: 9; Rev. 13: 13, 14; 16: 13, 14; 9: 21; 18: 23.

From Peloubet's Notes.

A half century passes away after the story of Esther and the deliverance of the Jews in the Persian Empire, and we now turn again to Jerusalem, and to the times of Nehemiah, which we studied in lessons 9 and 10. After Nehemiah had carried on his reforms for 12 years, he returned to Persia. But no sooner had he left than it was seen that a reformation enforced by the civil power, rather than the fruit of individual conviction, had no permanent vitality. The tithes due to the temple, the Levites, and the priests, were not delivered, and the greatest distress was thus caused to all who depended on them for maintenance. Public worship was thus interrupted, and the temple, forsaken by its ministers, was neglected by the people. The Sabbath was profaned, both in the town and country; wine-presses were busy in its sacred hours, and the roads and fields dotted with the workers taking sheaves to the barn on their heavily-laden asses. Jerusalem itself was disturbed by a Sabbath fair, to which loads of wine, grapes, figs and much else were carried in during the sacred hours. Phenician fishermen exposed for sale their catch off the coasts, and traders from Tyre displayed their countless wares. After all the professed zeal to put an end to mixed marriages, things were rapidly drifting to almost a worse condition than of old. Not a few husbands had deserted their Jewish wives for Philistine, Ammonite, or Moabite women. The very priests had rapidly lost their high tone. Everything that Ezra and Nehemiah had effected was well-nigh undone. (See Neh. 13, and Mal. 1 and 2.) To this sad state of things we owe the appearance of Malachi, the last of the prophets.—Geikie.

"The need of a Saviour." As we read over the last chapter of Nehemian and the first three chapters of Malachi, or the summary given in the introduction above, we realize the deep and pervasive moral need of a redeemer from sin for the Jews. We, in our day, need just such a Saviour, a teacher and ruler, and for the same reasons as they.

"Behold, I (i. e., God) will send my messenger." The most ample proof is found in the New Testament that "my messenger" is John Baptist. Our Lord bore witness to John (Luke 7: 27). See also Matt. 11: 10; Mark 1: 2, 3; Luke 1: 76. John prepared the way for Christ in this wilderness by preaching repentance, awakening the conscience, manifesting the danger and the evil of sin, showing the need of a Saviour. John the Baptist still, in each experience, goes before the coming of the Saviour. And we all should prepare the way of the Lord. (1) Fill up the valleys, the sins of omission—defects of prayer, of faith, of love, of work. (2) Bring down the mountains of pride, sin, selfishness, unbelief, worldliness. (3) Straighten out all the crooked places, crooked dealings with others, crooked ways of sin; settle difficulties; confess sins. (4) Smooth the rough places—the harshness of temper and manner, the want of courtesy, which mar the beauty of holiness.

"Even the messenger (or angel) of the covenant." Christ is so called because (1) he was the messenger who fulfilled the covenant or promise of God to the patriarchs (Gen. 22: 15–18; 28: 13, 14) and prophets of old (Isa. 52: 13–15, and chaps. 53, 60, 63). (2) He was especially "the mediator of the new covenant" (Heb. 9: 15), and of "the better covenant, established upon better promises" (Heb. 8: 6–13; 10–16.)

How is Christ like a refiner's fire? (1) The material to be refined is the people, both as a people and as individuals. As in silver ore there are two kinds of dross—that which is mixed with the silver crystals as quartz or other rock, and that which prevades its whole substance, as chlorine and sulphur—so in the people there is a mingling of bad people with good, who are to be separated; and there are all-pervasive, sinful habits, tendencies, thoughts and ideas which are to be eliminated. The same two kind of evils are to be purified from the individual, both wicked acts which can be discarded, and a wrong, pervasive nature. (2) Christ refines his people by his perfect example, by his teachings, by the Holy Spirit, by the necessity of choosing good or evil. The very fact of his coming is a test which separates men. They are compelled to decide either for or against him, and to array themselves on the one side or the other.

Christ as a sun of righteousness. Christ is to the moral world what the sun is to the natural world. (1) He is the source of light. (2) He is the source of power, as nearly all the power in the world comes directly or indirectly from the sun. (3) He is the source of life. (4) He is the source of comfort and cheer. (5) He is the source of the beauty of holiness; all the glories of color come from the sun.—P.

"Before the coming of the great and dreadful day of the Lord." In the original, this is taken verbatim from Joel 2: 31. It must refer to "the day that shall burn as an oven" (4: 1 below, which see). The day of the Lord is the time when he appears on earth. To warn in mercy before he smites in judgment is evermore the order of God's throne. Hence the second Elijah should come before the Jewish people, and polity should be smitten down by the terrible Roman arms. They were fearfully corrupt already. It was foreseen that they would become yet more so before and during the Messiah's incarnation. Hence the last warnings sent them through John Baptist, in the form of a call to repent, and to welcome their Great Deliverer, soon to appear, came in the hour of their greatest moral extremity.—Cowles.

The family is the foundation of religion. Religion has there its greatest power of propagation and growth. In the beginning of a revival of religion there is almost universally a revival of deep, all absorbing love for others, especially within the circle of the domestic relations. How often do we see the hearts of parents borne down with almost crushing solicitude in the tenderness of their love for the souls of their children. No, it is idolatry that first debases and then crucifies parental affection. Avarice and lust are doing the same thing in tens of thousands of families in Christian lands to day. So always and everywhere sin quickens selfishness—while religion binds together in love.—Cowles.

"Lest I come and smite the earth with a curse." Unless there should be a new development of religion, and the people begin to turn to the Lord, the world would soon be ruined by its own wickedness—there must be a turn in the disease, or death would soon come. It is deeply suggestive that the last utterance from heaven for four hundred years before Messiah was the awful word "curse." Messiah's first word on the mount was "blessed." Matthew 5: 3.

The law speakes wrath; the Gospel, blessing.—F. & B.

AMERICAN PLATFORM.

ADOPTED AT CHICAGO, JUNE 20, 1884

Viewing with deep concern the corrupt and unsettled condition of American politics, and witnessing with alarm the fearful prevalence of caste and clannishness by which our citizens are being arrayed in hostile bands, working secretly to compass political ends, a method directly and powerfully tending to increase corruption, to destroy mutual confidence, and hasten disruption and bloodshed; and having no hope of adequate remedy for these evils from existing parties, and believing the foundation of a party based upon the fundamental principles of the Declaration of American Independence, both inevitable and indispensable:

We, therefore, a portion of the American people, believing with our fathers that we have our rights and liberties, not from men or parties, but from God; believing in the Christian marriage, and not in Mormonism; believing in the religious democracy of the New Testament, and not in the despotism of the lodge; believing, also, with our Scotch and English ancestors, that civil government, though ordained in God, is "founded in nature, not in grace," and, therefore, that all have equal civil rights; while we abhor the idea of enforcing religion or controlling conscience by human laws and penalties as calculated to make hypocrites, not Christians, and savoring of the days of priestism, the fagot and the stake, we at the same time as firmly believe that atheism and priestcraft are twins and both alike foes to human liberty and welfare. We further most firmly believe that a government without God has none but lynch power, and is destitute of all legitimate authority to maintain civil order, to swear a witness, to try a criminal, to hang a murderer, to imprison a thief; and while we consider government without God as a mere usurpation, we regard all religions and worships invented by men, and so having no higher than human origin, as mere swindling impositions and cheats. We believe in peace and in national arbitration as a means of perpetuating it; yet we as profoundly believe that the bravery and blood of our soldiers have bought us the peace which we enjoy, and we honor the memories of the dead and will be just to the claims of the living; and we take up and prolong the strain raised by the women of this country: "For God, and home, and native land," and trust that this beautiful and patriotic motto will soon be not only echoed by their voices, but sustained by their votes.

We, therefore, solemnly adopt and present the following as containing a brief synopsis of the principles of our government, by which we intend to be governed in casting our votes. We hold:

1. That ours is a Christian and not a heathen nation, and that the God of the Christian Scriptures is the author of civil government.
2. That the Bible should be associated with books of science and literature in all our educational institutions.
3. That God requires, and man needs a Sabbath.
4. We demand the prohibition of the importation, manufacture, and sale of intoxicating drinks.
5. We hold that the charters of all secret lodges granted by our Federal and State Legislatures should be withdrawn, and their oaths prohibited by law.
6. We are opposed to putting prison labor or depreciated contract labor from foreign countries in competition with free labor to benefit manufacturers, corporations or speculators.
7. We are in favor of a revision and enforcement of the laws concerning patents and inventions; for the prevention and punishment of frauds either upon inventors or the general public.
8. We hold to and will vote for woman suffrage.
9. That the civil equality secured to all American citizens by Articles 13, 14 and 15 of our amended National Constitution should be preserved inviolate, and the same equality should be extended to Indians and Chinamen.
10. That international differences should be settled by arbitration.
11. That land and other monopolies should be discouraged.
12. That the general government should furnish the people with an ample and sound currency
13. That it should be the settled policy of the government to reduce tariffs and taxes as rapidly as the necessities of revenue and vested business interests will allow.
14. That polygamy should be immediately suppressed by law, and that the Republican party is censurable for the long neglect of its duty in respect to this evil.
15. And, finally, we demand for the American people the abolition of electoral colleges, and a direct vote for President and Vice President of the United States.

J. BLANCHARD. HENRY L. KELLOGG.

CHICAGO, THURSDAY, MARCH 11, 1886.

"The Son of man shall send forth his angels, and they shall gather out of his kingdom all things that offend." This includes the lodges and their false worships. Christ is "stronger than the strong man armed," and the angels "excel in strength." We should pray for angel ministries. That Christ is "sending them forth," there is no doubt. But this should encourage us to pray, as Daniel betook himself to prayer, and the angel "being caused to fly swiftly," came to his assistance.

MANGLING SCRIPTURE.—After the editor's speech Feb. 23d, in Washington, D. C., before the Literary and Historical Society, a boastful colored Mason who was put forward to answer it said, "We Masons do not reply when we are assailed. We remember that our Saviour said, 'Blessed are ye when men shall revile you, and say all manner of evil against you,'" and then quoted Christ's appointment of secret prayer, as a justification of prayer in secret lodges, and sat down. A colored pastor (Rev. Mr. Brooks) rose and said, "The honorable gentleman mangled and misquoted his Scripture. Christ said; 'Blessed are ye when men shall revile you 'FALSELY' and 'FOR MY SAKE.' These words he left out because the lodge excludes Christ, and so cannot be reviled for his sake." He uttered these words with a loud voice, and was followed with a roar of applause. The idea of likening closet prayer to lodge prayer where the candidate is surrounded by church professors, rowdies and saloon keepers; blindfold, halterd, stripped and kneeling in such a plight, is shocking.

EDITORIAL CORRESPONDENCE.

LEAVING CINCINNATI.

MARCH 4TH, 1886.—Our readers will have learned about Washington. There, as everywhere, truth and falsehood, courage and cowardice, Christ's kingdom and Satan's, grapple and struggle.

"Like light and shade upon a waving field,
Contending each other when the flying clouds
Now hide, and now reveal, the sun."

I think the bravest men I have found are the faculty of Lane Seminary, who, though not posted or committed to our cause, yet stood nobly by free discussion like men and Americans. I offered the manuscript of my lecture to the Herald and Presbyter. The editors, after full consultation, declined to print it. The lecture will be published in the Cynosure and sent to the Lane students who are as brave young men as I have seen.

The representative of the National Republican, Washington, proposed, of his own accord, to print my Washington speech in full, and give me 500 extras for $20. I paid him $5 in advance, and the extras should have been here three full days ago, but are not come. The Washington Post (Democrat) took $20 to print my manuscript speech in Lincoln Hall two years ago, and went back on its word and written obligation.

"Can such things be,
And overcome us like a summer cloud,
Without our special wonder?"

The Seminary Faculty were well pleased with our meeting in the chapel. Prof. Evans presided, and closed the meeting with prayer. Dr. Montfort opened with prayer.

THE LODGE WANTS BLOOD.

The volume on Masonic Outrages, often of late suggested in these columns, must have an additional chapter to describe the bloody end of election day in Birmingham, Iowa, March 1st.; and Bro. Graham would be justified in adding another chapter to "In the Coils," to relate the further experiences of Dr. J. N. Norris and his son. By God's blessing on the efforts of these loyal and devoted men, their town was for years redeemed from lodgery in its local elections. Three years ago, we understand, the Anti-masonic candidate for mayor was defeated by a majority of fifteen. This year the vote was a very close one, but was carried by the lodge through fraud and intimidation, and the five illegal votes cast by them. The election officers were all from the lodge crowd, and after the vote was counted in the evening, the Anti-masons were justly indignant at the trickery and fraud of their opponents. High words were used, and a lodge man drew his knife and struck at an opponent, who, though wounded, knocked the other down. The lodgeite got to his feet, and began an indiscriminate slashing, when Dr. W. Pitt Norris seized his arm to prevent the madman from committing murder. He in his turn was seized by two lodge men, and the savage turned upon him, gashing him near the eye, in the neck, and in the hand—this while he was held by two men. The row was soon over; but the trials are not. Only Anti-masons were arrested, Dr. Norris among them, and one whose only offense was to shout "Mah-hah-bone" and "Boaz." The cases against most of them were dismissed.

These particulars are gleaned from the last number of the Birmingham Free Press, and it is evident that this is not the end of the matter. We are confident that the Norrises, Warrington, and the other true men of Birmingham are wise enough to make this affray cut deeply into the life of the lodge.

CAPITAL AND LABOR.

The war of European socialists and oath-bound labor agitators upon the rights of the honest working men of the McCormick Reaper Works was over at the first brush. When the works opened last week Monday they were brave men who ventured back to work. They knew they were marked by the lodge leaders, and if the police assistance was not prompt, they might be assailed, beaten or even killed, as many others have been before them. The outside lodge men were, however, completely cowed by the prompt arrests of the first day, and hung around the saloons of the neighborhood, venturing nothing but threats. The work has gone on, and 800 or 900 aee now employed in the works. One of the lodge leaders says, however, that nine-tenths of the locked-out men were Knights, and if something was not done soon the Knights of Labor organization would take the matter in hand, and then things would be lively. Tuesday night an assault was made on Peter Kealker, an old man, and for thirty years a trusted employe of the factory. While on his way home he was assaulted and beaten by three men with bricks and stones. The leader was arrested. The superintendent of the works says that their old men are "generally good, industrious workmen, but the trouble is they are led by a class of agitators who are never satisfied without stirring up honest laboring men somewhere."

Last Thursday a formidable riot resulted from a strike among the street car men in New York on the line crossing the city from the East to the North river on Grand street. The hoodlum mob, ready for every disturbance, filled the streets by tens of thousands and overcame by sheer numbers the hundreds of policemen sent to clear the streets. Friday morning the State Railroad Commissioner, O'Donnell, acted as arbitrator and settled the quarrel in an hour, the men returning to work at $2.00 per day instead of $2.25, which they wanted, the company also making concessions.

Wednesday the Champion Reaper works, Springfield, Ohio, closed a part of its establishment and and discharged its men, for the very reason that they were lodge-bound men. Mr. Whiteley, president of the company, says he wants only free men in his shops, and will have no slaves to such an organization as the Knights of Labor. "We were compelled to take this course in the cause of human liberty. So far as we have observed the operation of this organization in other cities it has been one of terror, intimidation, and violence, and it seems to be a question whether a factory shall have all or none of its employes members of an organization. We prefer to have all our men independent of all organizations, and believe such a course will be for the good of the community. Several hundred men were discharged by this declaration of war, but all are quiet and there is yet no movement to show that they do not regard the decision of the company as just.

On Friday a more widely extended and threatening strike began on the lines of the Gould railroads in Texas, Missouri, and other parts of the South. The men in shops, engineers, switchmen and brakemen under control of the Knights of Labor went out because a member of the order had been discharged. This order makes its boast that it is organized to prevent strikes by arbitration. The fact is, however, that it rarely, indeed, attempts such a settlement, but rushes into strikes, riots, boycotts and assassinations. If it held to its original platform its vocation as a secret lodge would soon be gone, for it cannot control angry men but by forcing them into a needless and wasteful war with employers.

—The Freemason of Detroit, Mich., prints the portrait of our friend George W. Clark, with a good biographical notice, giving him full credit as an opposer of the lodge.

If the Prince of Wales should suddenly visit Chicago the Freemasons would be in a sorry plight. When the King of the Sandwich Islands passed through here years ago, the lodges arranged banquets and special performances of the death of Hiram. But Albert Edward, as Grand Master of English Masons has proclaimed against the Illinois Grand Lodge and ordered its fraternal relations with English Masons to be severed. This beautiful exemplification of Masonic harmony and brotherhood comes about thus: In Canada the lodges originally took their charters from England. Finally some of them wished a Grand Lodge of their own. They failed to secure unanimity among the lodges, however; yet a portion went on and formed their own Grand Lodge of Quebec, the rest retaining relations with the Grand Lodge of England. The quarrel has gone on for years. One of the same kind split the Eastern lodges a few years since; and one is yet raging in Australia. The Illinois Masons recognized the Grand Lodge of Quebec last year on a motion by D. C. Cregier and disfellowshipped the others. The action of the Prince of Wales, Grand Master, last week is in retaliation.

—Bro. R. Loggan, in his report for February, says he never knew the east and west roads of Kansas so badly blocked with snow and for so long a time. He was able to give but two lectures during the month, but improved every opportunity to preach, much of the time in the Lutheran church at Posey Creek and the Lone Star school-house, Brown county. He lectured two evenings in the Bruce school-house.

—Secretary Stoddard expects to speak in Crete near this city next Sabbath, and the week following visits Ray, Indiana, where he will speak on invitation of Rev. R. C. Wylie.

—Bro. C. F. Hawley, whose six months successful work in Iowa make him a veteran, has decided not to take that vacation, proposed last week, but to go on with the lecture work. He left Chicago Monday afternoon for Indiana where he hopes to do two or three week's work.

—Rev. W. F. Lawrence, the eloquent and esteemed pastor of the Second Baptist church on Monroe street near the Cynosure office, spoke out clearly against secret societies in a recent Sabbath discourse. We rejoice that the noble company of Baptist preachers, which includes such names as Colver, Stearns, Bernard, Brown, Smith, Henson, Anderson, Post, Knapp, Gordon, Gifford, Barlow, Woodsmall, Freeman, and a host of others, may have another honored name added to it.

—Bro. Countee of Memphis is cheered by the moral support of one of the most influential of the white pastors of the city—Rev. S. A. Steel of the first Methodist Episcopal church. In a sermon in Avery Chapel of the African M. E. church he endorsed the principles for which Bro. Countee has suffered so nobly. Speaking of the obstructions to the church he spoke of the lodges in these words: "Being so completely wrapped up in SOCIETIES and other wicked institutions, till there is no constraining power. I do not know whether your pastor belongs to any of these institutions or not, but the church must throw off these ungodly alliances with the world; get rid of these vain formalities in dress; take off those badges of the world and put on the armor of God. If the five hundred members in my charge were like what they ought to be, and what God would have them to be, my church could shake this city from centre to circumference. I will not have charge over a church that will give balls, festivals, and raffles. A sister that attends balls I don't want her, I have no use for her."

—A letter from Miss Flagg, received since the letters from Elders Kimball and Callender, on another page, were in type, gives us her final conclusions on the subject mentioned. She believes the labor of compiling such a work, which would ultimately grow into a volume, would be more than her engagements would allow, and she believes it clearly not to be her duty to undertake it. In her former letter she wished only to express the willingness of her spirit to undertake whatever God might call upon her to do. She is anxious that the work be begun, and believes that Pres. J. Blanchard is the one to do it. Miss Flagg is now writing a series of articles for the American; she regularly contributes to the Christian Witness and the Cynosure, and her notes on the Sabbath-school lessons in our columns are unsurpassed by any we see for practical helpfulness. She expects also to write occasionally for the Union Signal of this city, whose editors highly appreciate her "Between Two Opinions."

—Last week Bro. F. G. Houck, who has been connected with the N. C. A. office much of the time for several years, had the heavy and sorrowful duty of laying in the grave his only son, a bright, beautiful and attractive child of eight years. Though so young he had already cheered the hearts of his parents and Sabbath-school teacher with the evidence of a Christian spirit, and they parted with their treasure, assured in the midst of grief of a happier reunion in the presence of the King.

—Last Wednesday Mrs. Polly C. Bliss, an elder sister of Mr. Carpenter, died at the advanced age of 83 years. Mrs. Bliss, until a few years ago, was almost as well known to the poor people of Chicago as her honored brother has been among the churches and business men. She came West fifty years ago and lived in Warrenville, Du Page county, Ill., some thirty years—until the death of husband—when she came to this city and devoted her life to works of philanthropy, visiting hospitals, prisons and the homes of the poor, spending nearly all of a considerable fortune in this practical Christianity. She was also an earnest temperance worker and sympathized warmly with the reform represented by the N. C. A. Some three years ago she was compelled by age to give up her active life and went to live with a daughter, at Dallas City, from whence she went to her glorious reward.

—We must with deep sorrow note the passing of another glorious soul to God. The dispatches of Saturday noted the sudden death of Prof. J. R. W. Sloane, of Allegheny City. The particulars cannot now be given. Prof. Sloane was better known in our reform ranks ten years ago, before he was by prolonged ill-health prevented from many labors outside his work in the Reformed Presbyterian Theological Seminary. He continued to contribute to the Cynosure, though unable to attend our conventions and thrill with his eloquent and powerful addresses. In this providence the Covenanter church has received another heavy blow, as in the death of his brother-in-law, Dr. Milligan, last year.

A CHAPTER IN THE HISTORY OF THE CHAMPAIGN CONGREGATIONAL CHURCH.

An incident related to me at Champaign is worthy of record. It ought to encourage the faithful, reprove the fearful and time-serving, and be an inspiration to all who love the truth.

When the now venerable Pres. J. Blanchard was a young pastor in Cincinnati, he was less admired than now for his courage, and if, possible, more severely criticised for his methods, being known as the uncompromising opponent of slavery in all that region. Not far from Cincinnati there was a Presbyterian church which, by consent of a majority of its elders, had agreed to open the house for an abolition address. Mr. Blanchard, with a few friends, was promptly on hand, but found the house guarded by an armed mob. A brief conference was held and the mob refusing to make terms, the young pastor said, "We are on the public highway and we can pray." Kneeling at the roadside with a little company of hated abolitionists about him, he plead the cause of the oppressed and urged the promises of God with such fervency that the whole company were deeply moved. The pastor of a neighboring church came forward and tendered his church for the meeting, which was accepted.

A. O. Howell, a young member of the church, while listening to that prayer was converted by the Holy Spirit from a pro-slavery whisky Democrat to a radical Abolitionist. Bro. Howell had received "light" and did not "put it under a bushel." Very soon he became an object of aversion to his pro-slavery associates and decided to emigrate. Locating at Champaign, Ill., he became an active co-worker with Rev. W. W. Blanchard and some ten others in laying the foundations of a church of Christ in that new and sparsely-settled region. The covenant of this body of believers bore a strong testimony against slavery, secret societies and whisky, as sins not to be tolerated by those "professing godliness."

This covenant remained and was enforced until the breaking out of the rebellion. Bro. Howell, with others who had declared and defended their principles at home, responded to a call for volunteers and stood by the colors at the front until conflict ended in victory. Most of the "old guard" were left on the field, but Bro. Howell was mercifully spared to return after more than three years at the "front," to find, as he says, the banner of reform trailed in the dust, and the church for whose principles he had fought, in the hands of politic, temporizing and fearful apologists for the very sins against which the early Christians had borne distinctive testimony. When Bro. Howell attempted to speak against Freemasonry or pray for its abolition he was put under ban and given to understand that things had changed, and that during his absence the church had advanced beyond such narrow, impracticable rules.

As the now aged and infirm soldier related his trials, tears coursed down his cheeks, and with tremulous voice he said, "I went with Major Whittle out into a hollow back of Vicksburg, where we prayed with suppressed voices for fear of attracting the notice of the rebels, and then I followed him in a terrible charge upon the enemy's works. I saw the Major's sword fall from his right hand which was disabled by a rebel bullet. He caught it in his left hand and led the charge, always in front."

"I have," said the old man, "waded in blood and climbed over the dead bodies of my fellow comrades in the fight, and all without shedding a tear; but when I returned to find that the church I loved had abandoned their testimony, and that I was not allowed to speak or pray for the triumph of righteousness for which I had fought, I could not restrain my tears, but went and wept alone with God in the bitterness of my soul. For fifteen years I have been praying that God would not utterly extinguish the light in Champaign, or allow the testimony of the old church to be wholly lost, but sometimes I feel almost discouraged."

Bro. Howell gave me many incidents of his experience with the lodge and conservative elements in the church, showing how by easy stages the Bride of Christ has gone into spiritual bondage to the Secret Empire through the conservative policy of most, and the active efforts of a few who are enrolled on the record and have only "a name to live."

Bro. Howell stands firm and by the grace of God will "continue faithful unto death," and when the coronation day comes, among the many stars in the crown of that young and fearless pastor's rejoicing will be the glorified spirit of Bro. Howell, who when he saw the light "walked in it," and when he knew his Master's "will did it."

Let us pray that those who are now making the records of the church in Champaign for the judgment, may take heed how they treat the testimony of those who laid the foundations of Zion in the broad prairie, lest in their zeal for growth and "outward adornings" they "offend one of the least of Christ's brethren." J. P. STODDARD.

WASHINGTON LETTER.

The Congressional Temperance Society.—The Colquitt Temperance Bill.—The Color Line in the District Schools.—President Cleveland's reply to the Senate and State Secrecy.—The Chinese problem.

DEAR CYNOSURE:—The little leaven that is to leaven the whole lump has taken hold on the members of Congress. The persistent agitation of the W. C. T. U. led to holding the fifty-second anniversary of the Congressional Temperance Society, yesterday, in the Lutheran Memorial church. Ex-Representative Vance is president, and Rev. Dr. J. W. Chickering, secretary. Messrs. Johnson, of New York, James, of Brooklyn, and Henderson, of Illinois, made addresses. Mr. Johnson thought members of Congress had been slandered. He thought the 400 members of Congress would compare favorably in integrity, ability and morality with other citizens. "At least forty of them were ready to go even so far as a pledge of total abstinence." This is surely a bad showing. National representatives ought to be above the average in integrity and morality. If but one in ten is a total abstainer, they are not up to the average in temperance morality. A prominent divine, whose name was suggested as a candidate for Congress, said that when he went he should go as missionary to the heathen under the A. B. C. F. M. If the said divine does not himself need converting, I think he had better come and commence his work.

The bill of Senator Colquitt to secure local option is evidently a well-meaning measure, but not very strongly drawn. At a meeting of the Prohibition Union, several amendments were suggested, which have been published with the bill, and it is hoped will be incorporated into it.

There is much agitation in reference to public schools in this District. Prof. Gregory, a well-known colored teacher, has been added to the advisory board. He has heretofore favored "mixed schools," and the people who are fearful of the contamination of caste have taken alarm, and especially as it is proposed to do away with one of the two superintendents, and thereby secure uniformity in the standard of instruction. All over the South, and in many parts of the North, a double system of schools is established by law. Where there is financial ability to support them, it works no positive evil, but in the South, generally, it bears very hard on the colored schools, which, though supported by public funds, have to be taught in such school houses as the colored people can build, which are generally very poor. The Star and the Post are very severe in their denunciations of the Board of Commissioners for appointing Prof. Gregory, and of him, for his views. It is not known that any change is proposed in the school system of the District, other than having one superintendent, but it is deplorable that there should be such intense opposition to the children of equal citizens receiving education in the same schools.

The message of the President, in response to the demand for the papers on the subject of removals from office, will be read with varying conclusions. Doubtless he is earnest and sincere. In some respects he makes out a pretty strong argument, but I think that in the final result he will have failed. There is a growing jealousy of arbitrary power. Prerogative goes for little when it conflicts with the interests of many. While it seems unfortunate that such a conflict should have arisen between two departments of government, it will at least tend to show the absurdity of concealments in governmental affairs. If the Senate has a right to have its secrets, so has the President an equal right; but there is surely no just occasion in either case for concealments. If we engaged in war, it might be right (assuming that war is ever right) to have secret sessions of the Senate in considering treaties, but under all other circumstances the people have a right to know what their servants are doing. If the whole system of organized secretism shall be thoroughly discussed, this little episode may prove of great value to the nation.

The President's message, calling attention to the wrongs inflicted on the Chinese and recommending an indemnity, does more credit both to his head and heart. In the original Burlingame treaty we "cordially recognize the inalienable and inherent right of man to change his home and allegiance, and also the mutual advantage of free migration and emigration of their citizens and subjects respectively from one country to the other, for the purposes of curiosity, of trade, or as permanent residents," and that protection should be given "such as is accorded to citizens of the most favored nation." This treaty could not, on its own terms, be set aside. It recognizes the right of emigration and immigration as "inherent and inalienable." It is plain that our subsequent treaty, excluding laborers for ten years, was not intended to set aside the principles before enunciated, and surely the clause holding us to give protection to residents remains still binding upon us. This treaty has been most shamefully violated. A great wrong has been done, not to China and her people only, but to Christianity and civilization. Our plighted faith has been broken, and our influence among the nations, especially among the most populous nation, has been greatly diminished.

It was, perhaps, too much to expect that a President, elected on the Democratic platform of 1884, should rise to the dignity and moral grandeur of the Declaration of Independence and the Burlingame treaty and demand such legislation as shall secure the "inalienable right to life, liberty and the pursuit of happiness" to all who may visit our shores. This is what we demand of other nations in our own behalf, and is surely what we ought to accord to them. It is greatly to be regretted that the President should have asked in this as in his former message for increased restrictive legislation. It would be far more appropriate to ask additional legislation to break up the bands of Ku-Klux that drive out unoffending people, and defy all law, both human and divine. Truly "justice is turned away backward, judgment standeth afar off." But the end is not yet. H. H. HINMAN.

LODGE NOTES.

A SPRING SONG.

I hear a robin singing,
Clear, through the falling rain,
Our God is working in the earth,
And spring is come again.

Dead birds and building maples,
And matted grass and grain,
Know that the spring comes on through clouds,
Fierce winds and falling rain!

And shall God's dear children,
Not know that life's best gain
Must be wrought out thro' weary days
Of labor, grief and pain?

Sing on, O happy robin!
Our hearts take up the strain,
For God is working in the earth
And spring has come again.

THE DOCTOR'S STORY.

The crackling log fire was talking jovially of the world, but there was a soft undertone that was chattering cozily of home. The four-foot logs, as they smouldered and fell apart, built no castles in Spain for my dreamy eyes, but pictures of my far-away Eastern home. So dreaming, I turned to inspect my surroundings, still to be discerned by the red glow of sunset and the cheery firelight. There were the low, heavily-beamed ceiling and the roughly-finished walls of my room in the log government house, the hewn-plank door covered with deer-skin rugs, then books, pictures, furs, bunk, blankets, bow and arrows, rifle, snow-shoes, violin, lacrosse sticks, medical case and, last but not least, my great fire. Although not home, I decided that there were few pleasanter bachelor's dens than my quarters at the "Ninmela Agency."

I had hardly come to this decision when the tinkle of dog-team bells was heard drawing nearer and nearer, until the short yelps of the dogs and the gutteral commands of the driver showed they were stopping. I threw on another log, lit my pipe, and, as the wind whistled across the lake and whirled the snow against my window, gave a sigh for the poor fellow out with a dog-team on such a night.

I had scarcely settled myself again, when Captain Peal thrust his head into my room with a short "You're wanted, doctor." Roused from my happy ease, I stepped into the hall. Before the fire stood a tall Indian, the driver of the dog-team, waiting for me. He turned, and, with the pithiness of an Indian, said:

"The storm Spirit has cursed Osseo, the daughter of Kennebeck. Kennebeck say, if white medicine-man come, Kennebeck do anything he say."

"Very well," I replied, "I'll come."

"It's no use,' the captain said; "you know they won't do anything you want."

"And it's freezing," chimed in another, as I went back to my room.

"I can't leave a human being to die, for all that; though of course, it's too late. They never send for until it is," I growled, as they followed me into my den.

"What if it isn't?" Jack Waters continued. "The old medicine man won't leave you alone a minute, and it is ten miles to the village, with the mercury twenty degrees below zero."

"Don't you fret," I said, pulling on my bearskin coat and my good nature at the same time. "If old Kennebeck says that I shall be left alone, they'll do it. He rules his own wigwam, you'll please to remember."

"You'll freeze," Jack threatened.

"Very well; then be careful you don't get sick until I am thawed out," I said, and went forth into the biting air with the Indian. It did not take him long to pack me into the narrow dog-sledge, and we started. Our course was a full ten mile one across the lake, polished as glass. It was a bitter night, and the stars sparkled with a luster never seen in warmer lands. There was a metallic ring even to the patter of the dogs' feet as we went at full speed, the Indian easily keeping along beside the team.

I settled down in my furs, and began to wonder about my patient, stirring only once in a while to brush off the icicles that formed on my eyelashes. At length an answering howl to the yelp of the team-dogs warned me that we were nearing the camp of Kennebeck. We drove in between the wigwams, and stopped at the spear-shaft of a large tepee.

From within came the sound of women's wailing and the muttered incantations of the medicine men. The sight, on entering, was anything but encouraging to a physician. The tepee was built of poles and skins in a circular form, with a hole in the top for the smoke to escape. In the center of the tent was a great fire of smoldering logs, and in front of this sat a woman with her head hidden on her knees, while several more, with disheveled hair, were scattered around, and every few minutes responded to some part of the medicine-man's performance with a burst of wailing. At one side lay a young girl, hardly in her teens, partly resting on the bed of skins and partly in the arms of a fine-looking man, who held her up to help the labored breathing. At her feet sat two medicine-men, or priests of the tribe, singing and beating on deerskin drums. At every fresh burst of noise she started, and clutched the robes as if in mortal agony, and still it went on.

No attention was paid to my entrance until the Indian holding the child looked up. Then, calling one of the squaws to take his place, he came forward, and saluted me kindly, and offering me his hand, and placing mine on his breast, as he said: "Will the medicine-man help the flower of Kennebeck?" I told him that before I did anything, every one but himself must leave the tent. He gave his orders like a man who was used to command, and no one hesitated to obey them, although the medicine-man muttered and scowled.

I found, as I supposed I should, that the girl was in the last stages of consumption, and suffering acutely from fever and excitement. I told Kennebeck that I could not save her life, but I could relieve her pain if he would let me. I gave her a sedative, and we both watched until it began to take effect. Then, when I told him I would take care of her and he had better sleep, he built up the dying fire and lay down beside it; but I do not think he once moved his eyes from the child all that night. When toward morning she roused and cried out for him, he came and raised her in his arms as before. She seemed easier so, and sank once more into a kind of stupor. I saw that the end was coming, and told Kennebeck that she could live only a little while. He received my announcement without a change of countenance, saying only: "It is well. Kennebeck is an old pine; only the young pines grow around him. The flowers at his feet the frost has taken. Osseo is the last."

Leaving him with his child, I went and opened the tent-flap, to look out, and also to cool the interior, which was heated as only a tent can be. The clustering tepees stood out black against the snow; not a noise broke the stillness which lay on lake and wood save the vibrating ring of an ice-crack or the moaning of the pines which tossed their black and wind-distorted arms against the western sky, whence the faint glow of the setting moon had not yet departed. The stars flashed in regal splendor from the illimitable depths above. Fair Venus, bending to the east, heralded the coming day; but in the flashing mystery of darkness above, or the snow-wrapt earth beneath, there was no ray of tenderness to cheer that fatal hour of dawn. I could not have believed that the great universe, radiant in its beauty, held such a heart of sadness as the shadowy tent that I re-entered.

When I came in, Osseo had roused to full consciousness, and asked her father if she was going to live. When he said, "No," she broke out in a childish moan that there was no one whom she knew in the happy hunting grounds to take care of her, and she would not be let in. I saw that the father was distressed, and kneeling down on the other side of the sick girl, asked him if I might talk to her.

I tried to tell simply the story of Infinite Love, and sadly wished that I had told it oftener. Soon I found that I had her attention and that of her father. I repeated to her the story of forgiveness and mercy and of the happy home hereafter.

When I had finished she looked satisfied, saying, "Osseo is not afraid. The great Chief will take care of her."

Then, after a moment, she asked: "Osseo has lived many summers, and she never heard of him. When did the white man hear; who told him?"

I answered her that it was the story of my people; that my father had told me. She looked puzzled; then, lifting her eyes to me, she said, in a voice already beginning to waver: "And you never told it before." "My mother and my sister died, and both were afraid. You have known it all this time and never told us!" My lips were sealed, and I felt bowed down before that Indian girl.

When Kennebeck laid down his little lifeless burden and drew the robe over the stilled face, I went out from that poor Indian tent as from a holy place.

All the way home, above the crackling of the snow and the bark of the dogs, those words, "You have known it all this time, and never told us," have sounded in my ears. And to night I see in my fire the picture of the smoky tent, the kneeling Indian, with the quiet of pagan hopelessnes on his face, holding in his arms the dying child, while over and over her words ring in my ears.—Christian Union.

WINNING SOULS.

A careful study of the lives of the most successful ministers leads us to the conclusion that much of their success was achieved in "dealing personally and individually with souls." The life of Doctor Cæsar Malan, of Geneva, by his friend Ostertag, recently published, confirms this opinion. One illustration of his methods may be useful. A company were returning to Geneva on a steamboat. It was "full of strangers of every kind." While Ostertag was enjoying conversation with friends, he perceived "that Malan had just seated himself by the side of a foreign lady, and had, in the most courteous manner, exchanged a few words with her. The conversation became increasingly animated. In her features there appeared by turns the expression of surprise or the smile of contempt. Then she set herself to listen attentively, silently, with her eyes bent down. By degrees these intervals of silence became more frequent. At length she gave up speaking entirely. Malan, on the other hand, appeared to grow increasingly serious and in earnest, and more and more confident of success. Tears were seen coursing down the lady's cheeks, while she applied her handkerchief to her eyes."

"For a long time," Ostertag continues, "I watched this scene from a distance, with the liveliest interest; for it was plain that Malan was seeking to bring that soul to Christ. Had I not already heard him spoken of as one not only filled with the most ardent zeal to gain hearts over to the Kingdom of God, but as one possessing, moreover, an extraordinary aptitude for winning souls?"

Ostertag adds: "About half an hour afterward Malan passed close to me and whispered in my ear, 'Another soul gained over to the Lord.' A quarter of an hour afterward, while I was in the same place, and just as a young theologian from the north of Germany joined us, he passed again, touched me again on the shoulder, and said in a low voice, 'Preach the Gospel, sound the trumpet.' Through the whole of my journey after that—indeed, through all my after life—that sentence has resounded in my ears, and never did I repent of obeying it.—Christian Herald.

LIVES OF CELEBRATED MEN.

BEDE THE VENERABLE.—A. D. 673–735.

The first centuries of the Middle Ages were to West Europe a dark and unproductive period.—The entire Middle Ages may not thus be characterized; their beginnings may be so styled with perfect correctness. The Roman Empire of the West had been destroyed during the migration of nations by the Gothic races. The last remnants in the provinces were gone. The new Germanic States of Middle and West Europe were only beginning to develop. They did not indeed lack in the strength of young life, certainly not in its rudeness. The light of classic learning and art was extinguished, with but a glimmer here and there visible. A new life and activity in science and art had scarce begun in the nations possessed for the first time of Christianity.

When, in the midst of such an age, a man appears who not only faithfully guards the acquisitions of the past, but with sincere piety and warm zeal for God's cause makes his light shine among his fellows, he gleams with a double radiance against the dark background of his period. This was the case with the Venerable Bede.

He was of Anglo-Saxon race. What was the situation of his people and country? Divided in the several provinces of England, after the tribal divisions of the German conquerors, into Saxons and Angles, Jutes and Danes, the so-called Heptarchy still existed; of all the seven kingdoms (Kent, Sussex, Wessex, East Saxony, East Anglia, Mercia, and Northumbria), the most extensive by far was Northumbria, Bede's native country. At the time when, in the middle of the fifth century, the German tribes possessed themselves of the land, and drove the Britons, already adherents of the Christian church, to the western borders, they were themselves devoted to the Tentonic paganism. A century and a half later came Austin and his monks, sent by Gregory the Great, as missionaries. Three generations pass and Christianity is triumphant, though not without first having met many a severe discomfiture.

Bede was born at this epoch. The year of his birth can be told very nearly from his own statements. They are altogether the safest to go by, for the Middle-Age accounts of him are of little importance, and his own words tell us too little in reference to his circumstances. In a chronological table, which Bede has appended to his "Church History of the Anglo-Saxons," he says: "This is the present condition of Britain, about 285 years after the arrival of the Saxons, and 731 years after the birth of our Lord." The author mentions, in this same appendix, that he has attained his fifty-ninth year. He seems to mean the beginning rather than the end of his fifty-ninth year. This makes 673 A. D., the year of his birth. This is also Mabillon's reckoning. It was the third year, then, of the reign of Egfrid, the first king of Northumberland, after the provinces of Deiri and Bernicia were united in one kingdom. The dominion of this Saxon king was from the river Humber, its boundary on the south, as far north as the Frith of Fourth, on which Edinburgh now stands. In other words it included the south of Scotland and the north of England. One of the chief men of the kingdom was Biscop, who became a monk with the name of Benedict, and builded two monasteries on land given him by the king. The one, dedicated to St. Peter, was upon the north shore of the river Wear, near its mouth, therefore called Wearmouth. The other, called St. Paul's, a few years later in its origin, was at Yarrow, on the south shore of the Tyne, four or five miles northwest of the former. Both were under the rule of one abbot, and one set of laws. Because of the good understanding existing between them, they were, as Bede says, "like one monastery, builded in two places." Wearmouth is now known as Monk-Wearmouth, a town of twelve thousand inhabitants, opposite the busy seaport of Sunderland, in the County of Durham. Near its old church may be seen the remnants of the former monastery. The present village of Yarrow, in the coal district of Newcastle, possesses some old pillars and tombs near its church, upon which the convent monastery abutted. Somewhere in the neighborhood of these two monasteries, Bede must have come into the world, probably in the village of Yarrow.

Of his parents nothing is known. From Bede's short account of his life, we gather that when a boy of seven he was sent by them to the monastery of Wearmouth, to the care of the abbot Benedict. Yarrow did not then exist. When established (this was not till 662), Bede went thither, and remained in that convent the whole of his life.

No place could have been better suited to his untiring industry and thirst after knowledge. The founder and abbot of the twin cloisters, bishop Benedict, was indefatigable in his efforts to promote everything that concerned art, science, and letters. He had returned from frequent journeys to Rome, not only with stone-cutters and glaziers for the furtherance of his building, but with a taste for the liturgy and singing in the Roman churches, as well as with valuable books, relics, and treasures of art. His collections were well guarded by succeeding abbots, and greatly enlarged. Thus a richer collection of books was at the command of the young student than was known this side of Bobbio, Italy. Nor were good masters and teachers wanting. Singing, as it was practiced in Rome, he learned of John, the chorister of St. Peter's, Rome, who, with pope Agathon's permission, had (in 678) accompanied bishop Benedict to Britain. This man made such a sensation with his singing, that a great multitude from the country around poured into the cloister-church of Wearmouth to hear him. The monk Trumbehrt, who in his turn had been indebted to Ceadda, bishop of Litchfield, for what he knew, was Bede's instructor in the Holy Scriptures and in theology. Latin and Greek Bede had learned thoroughly. The knowledge of the latter language, in England, was due to the learned archbishop of Canterbury, Theodore, who came from the East, from the native town of the Apostle Paul. That Bede was well versed in Greek, we conclude from rhymes of his in that language that have come down to us, and also because he corrected the existing imperfect translation from the Greek of the Life of Anastasius, and republished it. He even seems to have had some knowledge of the Hebrew. But Bede achieved most through his own diligence and personal effort, and that in spite of the little leisure afforded him by his duties as a monk and member of a cloister. He says of himself, "I have passed my whole life in the same convent, have studied Holy Writ with all diligence, and, along with my strict attendance on monastic rule and the daily singing, have ever deemed it a sweet occupation to teach, to learn, or to write."

This record indicates how monotonous was his external life. Its eras were his successive ordinations as he rose in official dignity. The deacon's office, he tells us, was given him in his nineteenth year; the priest's office when he was thirty, both at the hand of bishop John, at the request of abbot Ceolfrid. This John was bishop of Hagustald, now Hexham, in Northumberland. He is known under the name of John of Beverley, as the learned pupil of the archbishop Theodore, before mentioned. Bede's early promotion was a marked exception to the rule, which prescribed that no one should be made deacon under twenty-four or twenty-five years of age. The youth of nineteen is shown thereby to have excelled in knowledge and behavior by the judgment of both abbot and bishop, the latter a man of learning.

He had, however, arrived at the prescribed age of thirty when he was made priest. He was a priest in full orders. He could read mass, hear confession, bestow absolution, baptize, administer extreme unction and preach. Higher than this Bede did not rise. He refused the abbot's office, it is said, fearing lest this distinction with its many cares might distract his mind from his studies. For as he himself avers, learning, teaching, and writing were his best and most loved employments. He wrote a series of sermons on the Gospels, also numerous expositions of Scriptures, among them sixteen commentaries and treatises on the Old Testament, and eight on the new. In his explanations he had to rely, as did all who lived in that age, on the works of the Greek and Latin fathers. These he interspersed with remarks, the results of his own close studies. Thus, after he had explained Luke's Gospel, when he had compared it some years later with a Greek manuscript of the New Testament, he wrote a supplement, calling it retractatio.

Still he did not confine his attention to the Bible or to Bible lore, but extended his research to every department of knowledge, so that for the age in which he lived, he was a scholar in the very widest sense of the word. He studied and wrote upon philology and poetry, physical science and history. Of his poetical works he names two, in the catalogue of his writings, at the close of his "Anglo-Saxon Church History," a book of hymns and sacred songs in different metres, and a book of epigrams. Both are lost to us. The hymns inserted in his works are not his. Except the Life of the holy Cuthbert in hexameters, the specimens of his poetical powers left us are insignificant. His treatise on the art of poetry remains, but contains little save selections from ancient authors. Several essays of his on philology may be named: as that "On Orthography," quite a little dictionary; one "On Tropes and Metaphors," confined to those in the Bible. His treatise on physical science, entitled "Upon Nature," embracing astronomy, physics, geography and the like, or as much as was then known of them, may be named as a part of his works.—Lutheran Witness.

TEMPERANCE.

LETTER FROM HON. FREDERICK DOUGLASS ON TEMPERANCE.

T. A. Sykes, Esq.

Dear Sir:—You have my hearty God-speed in any and every well-directed and earnest effort you may be able to make to banish the damning curse of intemperance from the hearths and homes of the colored people of Tennessee, and from those of all other people there and elsewhere. For a long time I refused to commit myself to the doctrine of absolute prohibition of intoxicating drinks, because I thought it interfered with the personal liberty of the citizen. But the sober contemplation of the evils of intemperance, not only upon the dram-drinkers, but upon his family, his friends, and upon society generally, has compelled me to go the whole length of prohibition.

Society has the same right to protect itself against drunkenness as against yellow fever, cholera, or any other evil. If the drunkard were alone the sufferer we might hesitate to go this length. But the weight in the other scale is overwhelming. Wife, children, and society are more than the miserable appetite of the drunkard. Five and forty years of my life have been given to the freedom and elevation of my colored brothers and sisters. I have but little more of the brief span of life before me, but I am determined that what remains of it shall be on the side of the cause of temperance. I neither smoke, chew, take snuff, nor drink whisky. Yours truly,

Frederick Douglass.

Washington, D. C., Feb. 8, 1886.

THE DRINK RECORD.

Papers were filed in the Probate Court at Milwaukee Thursday, asking that a guardian be appointed for Joel H. Kneeland, a wealthy young man, the claim being made that because of his intemperate and dissolute habits he is unable to properly manage his estate.

A band of fifteen men attempted to regain possession of a lot of liquor that had been confiscated under warrants taken out by the Temperance League at What Cheer, Iowa. The liquor was stored in the basement of the postoffice. Postmaster Brainard fired at the party, killing John Dey, and, it is thought, a second man, whose body was taken away by his friends.

Fred McAlpine and his wife Josephine were both found cut, bruised, and bleeding upon the railroad track under the Van Buren street viaduct about 9 o'clock last evening. The couple lived at No. 24 West Van Buren street, over a restaurant, where the woman has been employed as a cook, while the husband worked as an engineer in the Pacific Elevator. They were taken to the County Hospital, where it was found that neither was badly injured, unless the woman had sustained internal injuries. Both the man and his wife were so badly intoxicated that they could give no account of themselves. The supposition is that in some drunken freak they fell over the viaduct.

THE KANSAS OUTLOOK.

The following is an extract from the annual message of Governor Martin of Kansas:

"The general working of the amended prohibitory law of last winter has been favorable. Organized opposition is fast disappearing, and the general and popular feeling is positively and decidedly in favor of obedience to the Constitution as amended. Not only the Supreme Court, but all the judges of the district courts of the State and the judge of the United States Court for this circuit, are in favor of allowing Kansas to regulate its own domestic affairs in its own way. Thus all agencies have worked together during the year in behalf of law, order and practical temperance, and Kansas has made a greater moral progress than in any other twelve months of her eventful and noble history. On the first of January, 1885, saloons were open in twenty or thirty towns and cities of the State. A year later the open saloon had been banished from every town and city of Kansas, with possibly two exceptions, and in these active and determined legal efforts for its suppression have been instituted."

You know St. John "put back the cause of temperance twenty years." That was the exact time, twenty years, not 19 nor 21, it was all figured out to a dot; it was a plain XX, and no multiplication, addition, or subtraction could make it more or less than the identical, indivisible, unsubtractible "twenty" and "there's an end on t." Now the Leavenworth (Kan.) Standard says of St. John: "He can look about him here in Kansas and enjoy the sight of every one of his old enemies in the Republican party on the mourner's bench getting ready for baptism and full admission to the Prohibition church. Though they cursed him once they are now the devoted followers of that idea for which he preaches and fights. St. John and his idea have conquered the Republican party of Kansas." If you have tears to shed this seems to be a very opportune time to shed them.—The Issue.

The other day we sat in a B. & M. depot over in Nebraska awaiting the arrival of a train. As it was a small station, only one waiting room, in it was hung very conspicuously the sign, "As this room is used in common by ladies and gentlemen, smoking is strictly prohibited, &c." At the particular time referred to ladies and gentlemen were seated about the room. In a remote corner sat an individual with a cheap cigar just lighted, and there he sat smoking until the cigar was consumed, and the close room (for the thermometer was below zero) was filled to suffocation. But there the unmannered man sat, utterly regardless of the rights and comfort of others, and there we sat wondering how the use of tobacco could make an otherwise gentlemanly appearing fellow so ill-mannered in this respect. The use of tobacco is a nuisance, under such circumstances,—a vile habit under any circumstances.—Blanchard Record, Iowa.

The Ontario, Canada, government has introduced a bill making it a misdemeanor for any person not a member of the landlord's family to enter a bar-room on Sundays, and increasing the penalties for illegal selling of liquor as follows: First offence, $50 to $100 fine; second, four months' imprisonment, without the option of a fine; third, six months' imprisonment. For making searches the provisions of the gambling act will be applied.

Mrs. Mary T. Lathrop, who is now lecturing through the South in the interest of prohibiton, says, in a recent letter: "There is no sham or discount in the temperance sentiment of the South, and the man who says, 'I am as good a temperance man as you, but—' does not reside down here. That the high water mark of Democracy in this section reaches prohibition there is no doubt, and the conflict is fairly on."

Luther [illegible] defend himself; Leo cited him to answer [illegible] at Rome; while to the young laymen, to the [illegible] Fatherland, Wittenberg became a beacon of [illegible] universal darkness. It was a trying time to [illegible] a smaller man, he would have been swept [illegible] popularity—he would have placed himself at [illegible] democratic movement, and in a few [illegible] have disappeared in the noise and smoke [illegible]

The publisher has done his work well as usual. The [illegible] narrow page though for a time peculiar, is easy [illegible] far to read and will save much weariness to those faithful but often much abused servants—the eyes.

This month's Century has its war article by General Don Carlos Buell, who, in "Shiloh Reviewed," assails General Grant's paper of a year ago, and also takes issue with General Sherman. A part of General Buell's argument in favor of the claims of the Army of the Cumberland, commanded by him, is a fac-simile of a pencil-map of the field handed to him by General Sherman, on the evening of the first day's fighting, and his (General Buell's) extensive revision of the official map and criticism of General Sherman's modifications thereof. The article is evidently written with much attention to exactness of detail and is a contribution to war history of value. A statement of "The Strength and Weakness of Socialism," considered from the standpoint of the social agitators, and also from that of social reformers, is made by Dr. Washington Gladden. He wisely concludes that legislation, [illegible] is needed and demanded, cannot cure all the ills of society, and that the example and teachings of Christ are of the highest importance in all reforms. In the frontispiece is a portrait of "Emilio Castelar, the Orator," who has been a figure in recent political agitation in Spain since the [illegible] of Isabella II., the mother of the late king. The accompanying articles define the brilliant [illegible] which have made Castelar the pride of his countrymen, his limitations as a popular leader. Other interesting articles are "Italy from a Tricycle," "Mountaineering in Persia," and "City Dwellings."

The Living Age issues in February and March [illegible] of especial value. On the remarkable [illegible] by Mr. Gladstone defending the Bible [illegible] there is a reply by Prof. Huxley and "Mr. Gladstone as a Theologian" by S. Laing. On England's home and foreign policy we have "The Colonial Interests of the World," "British Columbia," "Home Rule in Ireland" and "Ireland and the Victorian Century." Edward A. Freeman, the historian, writes with eloquence and fervor on "Bulgaria, Historical and Political," and "The Tyrants of Britain, Gaul and Spain." Articles of great interest on Asiatic [illegible] religions and customs are "Hinduism," by a Hindu, "The Story of the Bab," that wonderful religious movement in Persia, and "Tea-Culture and Tea-Drinking in Japan." We cannot omit notice of "Religion and Theology," by Principal Fairbairn, "The Origin of the Christian," "Insanity and Crime," "Shooting Meteors," by Prof. Proctor. There are a number of articles of value which we cannot mention. The Living Age at $1 50 per year is by far the cheapest reprint of the best foreign magazine literature.

The March number of Demorest's Magazine is an attractive number, finely illustrated. "A Quaint Cuban Custom," "Shamrock," and the "Two Esthers" are the leading articles. Among the prohibition articles worthy of note are "The Responsibility of the Christian Church for the Liquor Traffic," by W. Jennings Demorest, and "Latest Evolutions of the Temperance Reform," by Frances E. Willard. Both of these articles contain the most vigorous and aggressive thought on the political aspects of the prohibition movement. The various other departments of the magazine are well filled, and "The World's Progress" is very readable.

THE CHURCHES.

—Bro. Edward Mathews writes to the Free Methodist from Litchfield, Mich., of a glorious work of salvation in that place extending its influence through the village and to the country round about. Three services are held daily and the Baptist church is offered if it is needed.

—The Rev. Otis Cary, of the mission at Okayama, Japan, that is anxious for a re-inforcement, says: "I hear that there were over 200 applicants for the United States Consulate at Kobe. Our mission offers excellent opportunities to Christian young men. Where are the 200 applicants from whom to choose?"

—The membership being unable to liquidate the debts on their building, the Presbyterian church at Wapella, Ill., was sold at public auction Thursday morning.

—D. W. Potter, of this city, has closed a very successful series of revival meetings at Champaign, Ill. During the three weeks of meetings, between four and five hundred sought and found Christ. Over two hundred have already united with the different churches. Among the converts have been nearly 150 young men. Mr. Potter is now laboring at Mattoon, Ill.

—Rev. Alexander Patterson, evangelist, has closed the union meetings in Clay Centre, Kansas. There were 150 conversions. It is expected the revival will break up progressive euchre. A Sunday afternoon meeting, for men only, was attended by 500 men.

—The United Presbyterian churches of Xenia, Ohio, and Monmouth, Ill., have invited their brethren of the same denomination to meet with them for a season of prayer and conference, the former on the 10th and 11th inst, the latter, March 16th and 17th. The topics will be appropriate to a revival season. At Monmouth, Rev. W. T. Meloy of this city, W. P. McNary, editor of the Midland, John M. Wilson, of St. Louis, and W. C. Williams of Washington, Iowa, are among the speakers.

—A reception to the Rev. David Gregg, of the Third Reformed Presbyterian church, New York city, was given January 25th, 1886, in the church on Twenty-third street. Besides the congregation there were present members of the other congregations, and friends from other churches. The church was crowded. The ministers present were Rev. John Hall, D. D., of the Fifth Avenue Presbyterian church; Rev. Howard Crosby, D. D., of the Fourth Avenue Presbyterian church; Rev. Charles F. Deems, D. D., Of the Strangers, Mercer street; Rev. W. T. Sabine, of the Reformed Episcopal church, Madison avenue; Rev. J. C. K. Milligan, and Rev. R. M. Sommerville.

—The Chicago Mission Worker, published by Rev. A. H. Kirkland, at the Adelphi Mission on Canal street, has a record of some remarkable conversions. Redeemed drunkards, Mormons, tramps, men bent on murder, and others on suicide, are the fruits of this wonderful mission for Christ. The vicinity of this mission is full of saloons and cheap lodging houses, and it is estimated that 1,500 men lodge within the distance of a block. Many of them hang about the saloons eating free lunch and drinking beer. To offset this attraction the mission gives a free soup. Prayer was especially offered that the Tivoli, a large saloon near, might be closed. At times 300 men have been counted going into this saloon in an hour. January 29th this saloon was closed by the sheriff. Bro. Kirkland now proposes securing the Tivoli building for a mission room, lodging and coffee house. He needs $10,000 and has over $3,000 promised.

REVIVAL IN WHEATON.

DEAR EDITOR:—Please allow me to cheer the readers of the Christian Cynosure by stating that a revival meeting, held for six consecutive weeks in the Wheaton (Ill.) Wesleyan church, was marked by demonstrations of the Spirit and of power. Thirty or more were converted, or reclaimed to Christ. Some ten or fifteen more either arose for prayers or separated themselves for prayer, but failed to push on toward salvation. From the first the church aimed against all evil, and determined to set itself spiritually right before God and all good men, so far as enlightened human judgment would allow. Completer consecrations I have seldom witnessed. Good and faithful men and women from the Baptist, Free Methodist, and Episcopal Methodist churches, and a few Congregationalists came in of their own free wills, and were soon possessed of a like feeling. Meanwhile the College church were holding, in the eastern end of the town, some cottage prayer meetings, and the regular meetings of the church.

Souls became anxious early, and with one heart, all began to pray that they who came toward Zion weeping, should keep their faces thitherward. With songs and prayer the theological students visited from house to house for three weeks, every afternoon each week-day. Brief discourses of fifteen or twenty minutes, each evening, were followed with prayers for the weeping unsaved, and testimony meetings. Sometimes in a single meeting fifty would speak, and twenty-five or more who could not do so for want of time would arise in a body as silent witnesses. I have been told that the meetings were the frequent topic of conversation in stores, shops, depot, and streets.

There was a most perfect union of feeling among the members of the various churches present. There needed be no little artificial human enrollment of names to get hearts to unite. There was no mechanical artifice to bring aspiring, heaven-wrapped souls down to an earthly page, or to the minor beliefs in which mortals indulge. That was assumed as a private privilege, and was let alone. There were no talks about, or exhortations to, Christian union. The streams flowed naturally and easily into a common channel. There was no ditching of self here, or damming of others there. The tide of Christian sympathy and love blended by the force of spiritual gravity and divine dynamics. There were from one to two hundred people, during the six weeks of meetings, who confessed their unfaithfulness and resolved upon the possession of a higher type of Christian faith and life.

After six weeks the meetings were removed to the rooms of the Woman's Christian Temperance Union, where the trophies of grace for three weeks past have encouraged the faithful, though these as yet have not reached as many as was hoped, but the Gospel thus calls in many who never attend church services. Meanwhile the deathly sickness of a saloon-keeper, by the most natural of causes, has had a tendency "to terribly shake up" the few scores of people who "do congregate" about the two nostrils of hell which find vent in our otherwise beautiful village. The dying man called his son the other day and charged him to go out of the business, and the other saloon-keeper declares, in writing, his purpose to go out of the business. These facts are driving some of the class named from the storm outside into the haven of our hope-inspiring meetings. Pray for us. L. N. STRATTON.

AFRICAN MISSIONS.

Brethren Harry Agnew, W. W. Kelley and Mrs. Kelley, who went from here a little more than a year since for Africa, write interesting letters of their work at Inhambane on the east coast. To the New York Witness Bro. Kelley writes: "We have been here but six months, so that we can just begin to talk with the natives in their own tongue. They are an intelligent, peaceful people—more so than the average of our colored people in the United States. There are hundreds of miles here without a missionary. Oh! that the church of Christ would awake to the importance of Christianizing this people. It is argued that the missionaries are so liable to die. In reply, I would say that the American Board lost none by death in Natal (500 miles south of this) for fifty years. But suppose now and then a missionary does mount to the skies from his field of labor. Think of the millions who are dead in sins and exposed to death eternal. Traders come here and stay here to make money; others come and spend one or two years hunting. Shall the Lord's people be less bold for him than the men of the world for themselves?"

In a late letter to the Free Methodist Bro. Kelley says: "While we were sending off the last mail, a black man walked into our tent dressed in a neat suit of navy blue, shoes and hat. He presented his church letter from Natal, and proposed to help us in our work, and assist us in learning the language. I engaged him on trial for one month. Thus far I am well pleased with him, and think him a real Christian. The natives listen to him with great attention and respect. His heart appears to be in the work."

These missionaries, about the middle of December last, visited some of the missionaries sent out by the American Board who have stations in neighboring districts. Some fifty natives have already been under their instruction

BUSINESS.

Henry Fry writes: "Please continue sending me the Christian Cynosure. I will send you the money and some new subscribers in a short time."

P. B. Bates sends with his own renewal the names of six as trial subscribers. He advances the money because of the good effect of the Cynosure in families where it is read.

Wm. D. Johnston sends in four subscribers, and writes: "I had hoped to get a few subscribers, but I'll not cease to use my best efforts in behalf of the cause."

A. C. Staples writes: "Enclosed find P.O. order for $12, subscriptions for Cynosure, as per accompanying list. I hope to send some more names soon."

I have always had a great sympathy for your association. I wish you a good success, and may the Holy Spirit lead and aid you in your work. Your brother in Christ, REV. C. J. SCHELEEN.

L. D. Brown orders a second copy for himself so as to give his testimony wider influence. How many have thought of doubling their influence in this way? He writes: "I cannot forbear giving my testimony against lodgery, even though it seems to do little good. God will take care of the results.

The special terms at which the Cynosure is now offered, makes it possible to place it, for a short time at least, in a great many families.

BETWEEN TWO OPINIONS.

BY E. E. FLAGG.

Author of "Holden with Cords," "A Sunny Life," "Little People," etc.

The Best Story of the Reform.

Price, only $1.00.

Published by THE NATIONAL CHRISTIAN ASSOCIATION.

This latest and best of Miss Flagg's works is now ready in handsome print, neatly bound. The story begins in a quiet New England home, and paints its homely joys with a delicacy and truthfulness worthy the hand of Harriet Beecher Stowe. The scene then changes to a thriving, growing, palpitating young Western city, and with great power and startling accuracy the writer leads us behind the scenes that we may see the machinery that works the liquor traffic and labor troubles. The story of the strike, the mob, the attempted assassination, the saloon-keeper's wiles, the curse of his trade, the power of the Christian faith to change him to a messenger of mercy, the criminal and the hidden power that shields him from justice, the land robbers tricks, the dark and secret conspiracies of the lodge—these and all the incidents of the book are portrayed with rare tact and great power of description. It is emphatically a book for the hour. And what is better and yet more striking, the incidents are facts, and every one a powerful and convincing argument against the lodge and the saloon.

Every temperance man and woman should read this book. No temperance story like it was ever planned, much less ably executed. A wonderful light is thrown upon the difficultics in the way of prohibition. Learn how they may be avoided.

Every one who loves to read a good story, chaste and elegant in expression, pure in thought, true in incident, deeply interesting in its narrative, should read this book.

READ THESE NOTICES FROM THE PRESS:

The Free Methodist, Chicago.

"Between Two Opinions" is a story, its incidents vouched for as facts, which presents a powerful argument on these questions and must attract thousands of readers among our thinking and observant people. The plot of the story is neither startling nor novel, but it develops a wonderful strength in following the experiences of people in the common, everyday walks of life.

Free Press, Birmingham, Iowa.

It differs from the popular story, "The Bread-winners" of a year ago. It greatly differs from that book in that it is written from the Christian standpoint, and its beautiful and touching descriptions of home life and home duties and heroic self-denyings will waken a responsive echo in every heart, that has not by dissipation lost the taste for the pure joys of home.

The Religious Telescope, Dayton.

The author, Miss Flagg, is a brilliant writer. The stirring questions in American politics are undoubtedly prohibition and the labor movemeut as championed by the secret unions of working men, which direct the strikes that with more and more frequency occur in our cities. "Between Two Opinions" is a story, its incidents vouched for as facts, which presents a powerful argument on these questions, and must attract thousands of readers among our thinking people.

The Christian Conservator, Dayton.

This is a charming book, written in an attractive manner. It is so full of sunshine and so radiant with light that one is enlightened, warmed, and, before they are conscious of it, set against the lodge. The style gleams, glows and sparkles. It is dignified and simple. It is the right book to place in the hands of your wife or daughter to superinduce co-operation with you in anti-secrecy work. Every minister's wife should read it, and then, if her husband is not an Anti-mason, he should take his turn next and beeome one.

The American, Washington.

We are reading, in spare moments, Miss Flagg's new book, "Between Two Opinions," and the estimate we have thus far put upon it is that it is masterly both in style and argument. One is insensibly made to feel that he is reading facts and not fiction; that the book is not a play upon the imagination but an unraveling of mysterious circumstances which have an important bearing upon current events.

Law and Order, Boston.

The book takes high ground for prohibition of the liquor curse, for woman's ballot for home protection, and for a better and more honest brotherhood than is forced by their obligations upon the members of secret orders. It is, therefore, a valuable book for several large classes of American readers.

Christian Instructor, Philadelphia.

There are important questions pressing upon American politics to-day; two of them are prohibition and the labor question as connected with the secret unions of workingmen. This work is an expose of the twin evils, secret societies and the saloons. The truths are given in the form of a story; not startling, but thrilling experiences of home life that are vouched for as facts. The evidences presented of the impossibility of reaching the saloon keeper so long as he and the officers of the law are sworn brothers in the den of some secret society, are conclusive enough to awaken the most careless and obtuse member of society. It is a valuable book for the masses to read.

Evangelist, Berea, Kentucky.

The object of the volume is to illustrate the practical workings of Secret Societies, and especially to show how the Lodge upholds the saloon, and this very important design is wrought out with much skill, clearness and power. By reading it temperance people may learn much about the difficulties in the way of prohibition.

The Standard, Chicago.

It is written in the interests of reform, more especially temperance and Anti-masonry. The title of the story suggests the special aim of it, which is to protest against all "halting between two opinions;" in other words, is a plea for radicalism. The story is vigorously written, and will interest even readers who do not altogether believe in its doctrine.

The Pacific, San Francisco.

It is a story intended to do service against the saloons, and in favor of Womans' Christian Temperance work, and especially against the secret orders—Freemasons, Odd-fellows, the Knights of Labor, etc. No reflecting man can doubt that any combination of picked classes and individuals is liable to great abuse. It is obvious, also, that secret orders are specially capable of being used in a selfish and unprincipled way.

"THE WHOLE IS BETTER THAN A PART," AND YOU HAVE IT HERE IN A "NUT-SHELL."

HON. THURLOW WEED ON THE MORGAN ABDUCTION.

This is a sixteen page pamphlet comprising a letter written by Mr. Weed, and read at the unveiling of the monument erected to the memory of Capt. William Morgan. The frontispiece is an engraving of the monument. It is a history of the unlawful seizure and confinement of Morgan in the Canandaigua jail, his subsequent conveyance by Freemasons to Fort Niagara, and drowning in Lake Ontario. He not only subscribes his NAME to the letter, but ATTACHES HIS AFFIDAVIT to it.

In closing his letter he writes: I now look back through an interval of fifty-six years with a conscious sense of having been governed through the "Anti-Masonic excitement" by a sincere desire, first, to vindicate the violated laws of my country, and next, to arrest the great power and dangerous influences of "secret societies."

The pamphlet is well worth perusing, and is doubtless the last historical article which this great Journalist and politician wrote. [Chicago, National Christian Association.] Single copy, 5 cents.

FARM NOTES.

PRUNING, WHEN AND HOW.

The jobbing gardeners and others, who go about trimming (they often call it "thrumming") grape vines, and fruit and ornamental trees look so wise, and surround the matter with so much mystery, that many ordinary people fear to undertake it. As to the time of pruning—we refer to the removal of ripened wood—it may be done at any time between the fall of the leaf, and when the swelling of the buds indicate that new leaves are about to be produced. It is not advisable to prune in severe winter weather, as at that time the wood may crack and make a bad wound. Besides, that is a time when it is uncomfortable to do the work. The outfit for one who would undertake to do his own pruning, is: a sharp pruning-knife, a pair of pruning shears, a pruning saw, i. e., a saw with a narrow blade, the teeth of which have a wide set. For branches not over two inches in diameter at the base, may prefer a broad, stout chisel to a saw. This has a socket into which handles of various lengths can be inserted. The chisel is placed at the under side of the branch to be removed, and the end of the handle is struck upwards with a heavy mallet. All large wounds should be covered with some material to protect them from the weather. Shellac varnish is best for this purpose, but at the present price of alcohol, is too expensive. Melted grafting wax is the best substitute, and in the absence of this, any thick paint may be used. To prune understandingly, one must know something of the manner of growth of trees, etc. The most important point is this: the growth next spring will proceed from the buds that were formed last season.—American Agriculturist.

A NEW CEREAL.

A New Jersey farmer can claim the glory of having brought into existence a cereal which may prove of incalculable value to the race. He has succeeded in making a cross between the wheat and rye plants. The propagating organs of the former are so guarded by nature that no other cereal can impregnate it. But this Jerseyman, by removing the male organs from the wheat and exposing the seed, has succeeded in fertilizing it with pollen from the rye plant. These experiments have continued for several years, and this spring there will be planted probably a hundred of these hybridized seed, which ought to produce over five thousand seed in the fall. Of course, all agriculturists are aware of the immense importance of a new cereal that would combine the qualities of the wheat and rye plants. But it may be necessary to explain to those who are not farmers what some of these are. Rye can grow in poorer soil and mature quicker than wheat. Good crops of it are raised on soils which have been impoverished by wheat growing. This is true of three-fourths of the arable soil of the United States. This new hybrid, if extensively grown, would give us an immense advantage over the rest of the world; for it could be raised almost anywhere in the United States, and so cheaply that we could undersell the world. Of course, this is assuming that the seed would make almost as good flour as wheat, and that it would be as easy to raise as rye. It is surprising that more attempts have not been made to improve the products of the soil. Is it not possible that more weeds (for wheat and rye were once weeds) could be utilized by the inventions and labors of man? What wonders have been accomplished in the way of improvements in fruits! Experiments are now making with Ramie grass which may yet give us a cloth almost as cheap as cotton, while as durable and beautiful as damask or fine velvet.—Demorest's Monthly

TRAINING GRAPEVINES.

Of all the various systems which have been introduced, advocated and practiced during the last twenty-five years, the most popular and prevalent to-day in the vicinity of New York, is what is known as the Kniffin system, or some modification of it, and its popularity is, no doubt, chiefly due to its simplicity and ease of practice. The trellis consists of two wires on posts set at convenient distances; the lower wire, two and a half to three and a half feet from the ground, and the upper one four and a half to five and a half feet. In our own practice, we adopt the greater distance for convenience in passing under from one row to another, in any part of the vineyard. The vines are grown with two main stems, or trunks, from near the ground. One of these is stopped at either wire, and two arms are trained along each wire. These are pruned to five or six buds each, and the shoots as they grow, are pinched during summer as above stated. This pinching, and the hanging down of the shoots as the fruit developes and increases in size and weight, checks the flow of sap and tends to the formation of good, plump buds at the base of the shoots, which, when ripe, are termed "canes." The annual pruning thereafter consists in cutting off the entire arm, up to the cane nearest the trunk, bringing that cane around on the wire to take the place of the arm removed, and shortening it to five or six buds. Sometimes the bud expected to make this arm may, from some cause, fail to grow, or may turn the wrong way, so that the cane cannot be bent around where needed; in such a case, take the next cane for the arm, and prune the obstinate one to two buds, one of which will very likely come to where it is wanted the next year. No positive rule can be laid down to follow inflexibly, as there are exceptions in all cases, and there is no system that will not at times need a little modification or variation in some of its details to the final accomplishment of its aim.—American Agriculturist.

St. John and Elizabeth Comstock, relieving the destitute and suffering refugees in Kansas, etc.

HOME AND HEALTH.

DIPHTHERIA.

The precautions to be taken in the management of a well-marked case of dyphtheria may be summed up as follows, according to the Sanitary Engineer: Isolate the patient in an airy room having the least possible amount of furniture, especially that which is upholstered, and having no carpet or curtains. Disinfect all excretions and secretions, and especially those from the throat, nose and mouth, and all articles soiled by them, promptly, while they are yet moist, and thoroughly. Use clean, soft rags for receiving the discharges from the nose and mouth, and burn them as fast as soiled. If other articles are soiled, use solutions of chloride of zinc or bi-chloride of mercury, under the instructions of the physician. Be especially careful as regards toys, pencils, or other articles which may be given to the child for its amusement, of the articles used in giving it food or drink, and of the remnants of such food or drink. Everything that has touched the patient's lips, or that has been touched by anything that has touched the patient's lips, is dangerous.

THE FRENCH CURE FOR DIPHTHERIA

We are in receipt of the new French cure for diphtheria from our correspondents in France—the same for which the French Government, through its Board of Medical Directors, awarded the prize of 300,000 francs. It affords us much pleasure to offer this recipe to the public in detail—extracts having appeared in some of the New York papers by cable—which we do for the public good only, as its publication has no bearing on our business whatever, our motive being simply to spread broadcast so important a piece of information; therefore, cut this out and paste it away for future reference.

Take two large teaspoonsful of liquid tar and the same quantity of turpentine, stir them together in an iron pan or some other dish of hard material that will stand fire; then, after having tightly closed all the windows and doors, ignite the mixture, letting the smoke and fumes penetrate all portions of the room, particularly the vicinity in which the patient lies. The smoke should be so dense that one cannot see across the room. If the above quantity is not sufficient for the room, increase the ingredients to meet the necessities of the case. Let the smoke remain in the room from a half to one hour; then let it out through the tops of the windows, repeating this operation every three or four hours. As the smoke blackens everything with which it comes in contact with a thick soot, the better plan is to burn the mixture under a fine seive, and cover the furniture, clothing and carpets with paper. Keep the patient warm, steaming them when practicable, and if troubled with fever, have thirty grains of quinine rubbed in one ounce of vaseline, and rub the patient from head to foot with the mixture.

Above all, have the patient in charge of a skilled physician and a faithful trained nurse; good nursing being of the greatest importance.—Ex.

TREATMENT OF DIPHTHERIA.

The new German remedy for diphtheria, turpentine, appears to find many advocates. Children take one teaspoonful morning and night, adults a tablespoonful; to children tepid milk is given after it, and it might also be mixed with the same. Half an hour after the administration of the drug a bright redness begins to spread from the margin of the diphtheritic exudation, and this redness becomes generally diffused over and taking the place of the false membrane, and the disease is said to disappear within twenty-four hours without leaving the slightest trace. While this remarkable effect is said to be invariably met with when the remedy is made use of at the very commencement of the disease, those who recommend it so highly, assert that it is also successful, only less rapidly, in cases that have progressed for several days.

ALL-NIGHT INHALATION!

"A positive revolution in the treatment of Air-Passage Diseases of the Nose, Throat, and Lungs, and, for the purpose designed, as valuable a discovery as vaccination."

THE PILLOW-INHALER.

A Speedy, Positive and Permanent Cure for Catarrh, Bronchitis, Asthma, and Incipient Consumption.

It is a hair pillow, with reservoirs of evaporating liquid, the fumes or vapor of which is inhaled all night long, whilst sleeping as usual, and without any discomfort. It is used only at night, and is perfectly safe to the most delicate. There is no stomach-dosing, douching or snuffing; but just as a smoky lamp will leave a deposit on a whitened wall so the PILLOW-INHALER, for say eight hours at a time, spreads a powerful healing balm or salve on the inflamed inner coating of the diseased air-surfaces, from the nostrils to the bottom of the lungs, and hence into the blood. Old-fashioned inhalation, through a tube, for a few minutes a day, sometimes cured. Think of eight hours constant action, on the same principle, but intensified a hundred-fold! There are no pipes or tubes. The medicine is breathed in, not swallowed, and goes right to the diseased parts.

CATARRH. BRONCHITIS. CONSUMPTION.

HON. E. L. HEDDEN, Collector of the Port of New York, says: "I take pleasure in stating that the PILLOW-INHALER has been of the greatest relief, and I believe of permanent benefit, to my wife, who has been a great sufferer from Bronchial and Catarrhal Troubles, accompanied with distressing Asthma. I recommend its use to all persons afflicted with such maladies."

E. L. HEDDEN, 38 West 49th St., New York.

MR. H. G. TEELE, 50 Bryan Block, Chicago, Ill., says: "I suffered fifteen years from a severe case of Catarrh; coughed incessantly day and night. I bought a PILLOW-INHALER, and since using it my cough is gone; my lungs are no longer weak and sore, and I am in better health than I have been for years."

During the six years of its existence the PILLOW-INHALER has wrought cures of Catarrh, Bronchitis, Asthma, and Consumption, that have been more like miracles than the usual treatment of disease. It is not expensive, and is within the reach of every one. Send for Explanatory Pamphlet and Testimonials, or call.

NEWS OF THE WEEK.

WASHINGTON.

The President sent to the Senate on the 1st of March a message stating his position in relation to the suspensions of officials and defending his action in refusing to send to the Senate papers on file in departments upon which it is assumed by the Senate that the suspension of certain officials are based. After the message had been read, Senator Edmunds, of Vermont, arose and said that it reminded him of the communications of King Charles I. to the British Parliament.

The Senate passed the Blair Education bill Friday, by a vote of 36 to 11, after adopting several amendments. Among these were amendments requiring the Secretary of the Interior to investigate complaints of unjust discriminations in the application of funds, the evidence to be preserved and reported annually to Congress, including the District of Columbia in the bill, and requiring States receiving money under the bill to file in the Interior Department samples of the school-books used in the public schools.

The President nominated James C. Matthews of New York, to be Recorder of Deeds for the District of Columbia, vice Frederick Douglass, whose resignation, sent to the President on Jan. 5, is made public to-day. Mr. Matthews is a colored lawyer, of Albany, N. Y.

Naval Officer Burt reported to the Treasury Department that the government will be obliged to refund $5,000,000 under the recent decision of the Supreme court, making it unlawful to collect duties on cartoons, fillets, and coverings of inside packages.

A petition from New Jersey citizens asking Congress to provide exemplary penalties for the seduction of girls under the age of 18, with or without consent or promise of marriage, was presented to the Senate yesterday.

COUNTRY.

The Iowa House, Tuesday, passed to third reading the bill making the possession of a government license to sell liquor evidence of keeping liquors contrary to the State law.

The Champion Reaper Works, at Springfield, Ohio, has declared war on the Knights of Labor, and has discharged 300 men, while 400 others have been locked out of the Champion Malleable Works.

It is reported that the strike on the Texas and Pacific Road is likely to become general on all the Gould lines in Texas, and may extend to other railways in the State.

The Mississippi legislature has repealed the agricultural lien law, the objectionable feature of which was that it authorized the mortgaging of unplanted or growing crops. The law was made in 1870, and to it is attributed the present poor financial condition of farmers generally, who have had to mortgage their crops in order to obtain supplies, paying heavy premiums.

In the Iowa House, Thursday, a report was adopted recommending the appointment of a committee to investigate the charges against Judge Walter I. Hayes, who is accused of giving decisions in opposition to the purpose and intent of the prohibitive law.

A body of New York police, commanded by Inspector Murray, acted as convoy Thursday to a Crosstown Line street car, the employes of the company being on a strike. The tracks were blocked at various points by coal piles, wagons and cars which had been upset and other material, which the police were forced to remove amid the hoots and jeers of thousands of people. Twice the officers charged the mob, using their batons freely, with the result that several persons were injured, and many others arrested. The strike was amicably arranged Friday afternoon and travel was resumed. The appearance of the cars on the streets, adorned with brooms, flags, etc., was greeted with the wildest demonstrations of joy by crowds along the routes.

One hundred and twenty-five Chinese laborers were driven from Mount Tabor, Oregon, early Friday morning by a masked mob, who marched them to the ferry, whence they were conveyed to Portland, three miles distant.

The dry-house of the Miami Powder Company, near Xenia, O., blew up, March 1st, killing three men and blowing the building and machinery to atoms. The shock was distinctly felt all over the city. There were 2,400 twenty-five pound cakes in the house when the explosion occurred. It was caused by the explosion of the boiler used in drying the powder.

The roof of the County Almshouse at Nyack, N. Y., was blown off by a gale, Monday night, but the inmates escaped without injury.

At Marcellus, Mich., M. J. Vincent, a school teacher, was attacked and cut with a razor by Thomas Cleland, whose child he had beaten. Vincent is believed to be fatally wounded.

The steamer Saxon, wrecked Feb. 4 in Caice's Passage, is a total wreck. Four of the crew were drowned, the captain died in delirum, and the steward became mad and jumped into the sea. The Saxon was bound from New York to Cape Haytien with an assorted cargo.

In Northern Alabama Mormon elders have made many converts. In some sections the farmers have warned them to leave, but the elders refused to go, saying they are doing legitimate work, and will be protected by the government.

The contract for a $2,000,000 bridge across the river at Cincinnati for the Chesapeake and Ohio Road has been signed.

Enraged at a fractious cow, Gaston McCartney, a farmer of LaGrange, Ga., fired at the animal, missed his aim, and shot dead his nine-year-old son.

Reports last week from various points in Northern New England and Canada show the worst snowstorms known for years. Near Houston, Me., snow has fallen continuously for four days and is now deeper than it has been for a quarter of a century. At Dover, N. H., the thermometer ranged from 10 to 20 degrees below zero, with a high wind blowing. The city of St. John, N. B., is entirely blockaded by the snow, and no trains or mails reached that point for two days. Two trains are at Greenpoint, sixty miles from St. John, surrounded by drifts fifteen feet high. Another is buried out of sight near Vanceboro.

Fire which started in the immense oatmeal mills of Ferdinand Schumacher, at Akron, O., early Saturday morning, destroyed the five-story dry house, which was filled with wheat, the brownstone office of Mr. Schumacher, the elevator, containing 15,000 bushels of wheat, the New York, Pennsylvania & Ohio railroad depot, and three residences. The loss will aggregate $1,000,000, on which there was an insurance of only $129,000.

M. Coleman and Wilson Patten, well-known citizens of Seattle, W. T., were assassinated at Lake Washington, Saturday, by unknown persons. Mr. Coleman was foreman of the grand jury that indicted a number of persons for rioting and murdering Chinamen. The general belief is that the assassination was prompted or committed by anti-Chinese agitators.

FOREIGN.

Mr. Gladstone has so far progressed with the landlords' expropriation scheme as to require the services of Sir Henry Thring, the Parliamentary counsel of the government, to draft the details of the bill. He proposes an ascending scale of rates of purchase, on the ratio of the extent and value of tenants' holdings.

Mr. Morley, Chief Secretary for Ireland, in an address on the Irish question, urged the Liberals to do their utmost to place their party in a state of complete preparation for a general election; "for," said the speaker, "the government is now face to face with the Irish difficulty, and will probably be compelled to make an early appeal to the country."

M. Clemenceau caused a sensation in the Chamber of Deputies by demanding that the French princes be expelled from the country. He denied that their expulsion would be contrary to republican principles. He was enthusiastically applauded. The majority of the groups in the Chamber of Deputies are now in favor of the expulsion of the princes.

The snowstorm in the Province of Quebec continued several days, and several Intercolonial freight trains are buried out of sight. In some of the cuttings the snow is eighteen feet in depth for a distance of half a mile. All passenger trains are reported to be at stations.

Attention is called on the editorial page to some of the excellent things in our present number. While reading it, remember that in the next issue may he expected a fine portrait of Rev. C. C. Foote of Detroit, Michigan, the well-known veterau and leader in Christian reforms. It will be accompanied hy a biography by George W. Clark. In the same number will be a graphic sketch of the Birmingham Outrage, hy a gentleman who is familiar with all the circumstances. The other side of the Chinese question will he given by a professor in a Nebraska institution. The Cynosure will not disappoint its readers.

The name of the Order of the "Star of Heaven" must have been changed with a sort of poetic license from Lucifer (see Is. 14: 13). It has at least proved to be wormwood (Rev. 8: 10, 11) to all who were duped by the sharper who contrived it, into swearing into its membership. This is the name of the pretended secret order noticed in "Lodge Notes," To these indeed, it proved to be a swindle, but was it any more so than is Freemasonry or Odd-fellowship or any one of the hundred orders that are confusing the consciences and ruining the everlasting hope of thousands?

When the distillers were, two years ago, urging that Congress extend the time for immense quantities of their liquor to lie in bond so as to stave off paying tax on it, they tried to terrify the country with the threat of a business panic. "The banks," they said, "are all holding our paper with a whisky mortgage. If we are compelled to pay taxes now, the banks must fail and ruin the country." If the country and its banks floated on whisky, their ruin was not only certain but just. But they did not; and the only case of which we have heard where the prognosticators of the still were correct was an Indianapolis firm, which lost $100,000 in the whisky business and so met a deserved fate, a few weeks since.

At a meeting in behalf of missionary co-operation in New York a few weeks since, Dr. Chamberlain, a missionary from India, made a powerful address on the subject under consideration, showing how the same sectarian follies that hinder the work of the church at home are met abroad—a scandal among the heathen and a stumbling-block over which many fall. Thirteen different branches of the Presbyterian family have missions in India, often in places doubling the necessary number of workers, and sometimes not even working in harmony; Judah vexing Ephraim, and Ephraim, Judah. In Japan, on the contrary the different Presbyterian churches have joined their forces, and dropped their sect name. In Tokio and Yokohama they maintain the United "Church of Christ in Japan" in which four or five denominations are joined harmoniously and effectively. It is a homely, practical and sensible question, Why may not all missions be so conducted? Missionaries should have so renounced the world and devoted themselves to God that one Spirit should fill and direct them. They may, therefore, the more easily inaugurate a reform for church union. Another conclusion equally reasonable—What is good for the kingdom of Christ abroad ought to be at home also. One missionary excusing the division of forces in China said, "We do not unite because you do not at home. The stream does not rise higher than the fountain. But it should; for this great work can be easier begun abroad.

The Southern evangelists will continue their labors in Chicago through this week also, in Farwell Hall, the Casino Rink, on State street, and in adjacent churches. Last week there was a remarkable change in Mr. Jones. He became more deeply in earnest for a victory for Christ against the terrible powers of the pit, and more severe, if possible, against the worldly practices of church members. To the denunciations of the dance, the theater, gambling, card-playing, clubs, the shopping mania, they added others against extravagance in dress, and the women of Chicago may expect this week some faithful remarks on their peculiar failings in the several meetings for women that are announced. No meetings for men alone are proposed—the lodge could hardly be left out of them. Mr. Jones was told by a brother the other day, after a powerful address in the rink, that he ought to put in the lodge with the rest of the evils he so plainly preached against. He replied doubtfully and with a broad smile. He would be less often interrupted with applause and laughter should he take the advice, but he might in the end find that Chicago was the more blessed for it. The meetings are crowded every evening and the pastors meet daily for prayer that the towers of sin may fall before the stalwart blows of the evangelists.

Miss Parmelia Hand, daughter of O. Hand, Esq., whose obitdary lately appeared in these columns, left her place as first assistant of Miss Dryer in the Bible work of Chicago last September because of failing health, to become a teacher in the anti-Mormon schools of Utah. In an unstudied but most engaging address in Wheaton College chapel, last Sabbath, she told the story of her experiences and wonderful successes. The society, known as the New West Education Commission, was organized a few years since to maintain schools among the Mormon and Mexican communities of our territories, with a view to supplant the errors of the Mormon and Romish hierarchies with the truths of the gospel of Jesus Christ and a sound secular education among the children and young people. This society has now 37 schools of all grades, 62 teachers, and 2,700 pupils. Of the latter 812 are Mormons, 500 apostates from that system, and 298 Mexicans. It hopes to raise over $50.000 this year for the work, and wants some $40,000 more for buildings. The work thus begun is most hopeful. In some communities the apostacy from Mormonism is fatal to its control locally. Miss Hand says that the Mormons all believe the Bible, though they do not read it, and the access to Mormon families through the children seldom, if ever, fails. Mormon Bishops rent their buildings for these schools, while they preach against them in their pulpits; on the other hand, the $9.00 a week which she and an assistant paid for board in a Mormon family was promptly sent on to sustain a son of the household who is a Mormon emissary in England. The work of this Education Commission is full of deepest interest and brightest hope, though its work is comparatively little understood.

MASONIC TITLES.

BY REV. JOEL SWARTZ, D. D.

The English language has wonderful powers of expression, but it is absolutely inadequate to set forth the dazzling rank and splendors of the office-bearers in Masonry. A proof of this is seen in the strain which was yesterday upon our rugged Saxon speech to support the overwhelming honors which some very obscure men, hereabouts, have recently attained to, in the still more obscure arts and doings of Masonry. The following clipped from the Philadelphia Press illustrates this:

ALLENTOWN, FEB. 18 [SPECIAL].—The fortieth annual assembly of the Grand Council of Pennsylvania Royal Super-excellent and Select Masters was held in Masonic Temple here yesterday. The following officers were elected and installed for the ensuing year: Most Puissant Grand Master, George W. Kendrick, Jr., Philadelphia; Right Puissant Deputy Grand Master, Charles K. Francis, Philadelphia; Right Puissant Illustrious Grand Master, John L. Young, Philadelphia; Right Puissant Grand Principal Conductor of Work, David A. Stevenson, Pittsburg; Right Puissant Grand Treasurer, James Down Pittsburg; Right Puissant Grand Recorder, Charles E. Meyer, Philadelphia. The Retiring M. P. Ill. G. M. was Lion Little, of Pittsburg.

It may be conjectured that the name of the retiring "M. P. Ill."—not some petty postmaster, understand, of your great State, Mr. Editor,—"G. M." etc., was awkwardly transposed by some "Entered Apprentice" or "Fellow Craft" printer. It doubtless should have been "Little Lion." Little might be allowed in this case so as not to be too utterly awful. But just think of a little Lion, "Most Puissant," and that, too, in a Grand Council, Royal—royal is kingly, and the lion is "king of the forest!" One's knees begin to tremble. The first impulse is to worship, and the next is to run away.

What is extremely puzzling, is to know how an assembly of such characters could be found upon one continent, and that our own. That they were "Masters" of something is quite obvious, and deserved to be so called, one can hardly help admitting, despite the discouraging inhibition of the only, one Lord and Master. Also that they were "select" is evident, for such "most illustrious and puissant" mortals in this ordinary world are rare. But the astonishing feature is that enough of such persons could be got together to form a "council." Judging from the names given, etc., one would infer that many such were there. But the wonder still grows. A "council" was assembled near where I am writing! I must confess I knew nothing of the assembling, and now do not know one of these "most puissant and super-excellent" men. I could not tell whether they are saloon men, miners, merchants, or mechanics. Is it not strange that such awful glory could be so concealed! How modest those "super-excellent" men must have been to have so hidden their light under a bushel that ordinarily observant persons never saw a scintilation of it!

What a cross, also, it must now be to them to have their hitherto unsuspected puissance and excellence so exposed and "blazed abroad!" They are, doubtless, willing to suffer this martyrdom only for the good of others. We have often heard it said that Masonry has glories in it of which the world knows nothing. We now partly believe it. We certainly knew nothing of this super-excellence. It excites the natural inquiry: Where was all this super-excellence displayed? What mighty deeds have these "puissant Masters" performed? O Masonry, thou art a deep secret, indeed! It has been claimed that thy secrets have been laid bare to the sun. But not so; thy glories are hidden still.

Are there any ministers who have gone into these depths—any officers or members of the church of Jesus Christ that have looked with undazzled vision upon the near glory of all this puissance and super-excellence? Gentlemen, "ye are the children of the light and the day; will you not tell us how this "super-excellence," if it is anything more than a mockery, a child's play, and a fraud, has been attained? Have ye attained it? What have ye done? Why, in the name of all reason and religion, will ye not proclaim it on the house-tops to your halting, struggling, and failing fellow-mortals? Have you something better than the plain, open Gospel? Have you "another gospel?" Has it been revealed to you under cover, and oaths, and barbarous penalties?

In the name of God, speak out, or come out and "have no fellowship with the unfruitful works of darkness, but rather reprove them."

Or are your deeds such as will not bear the light, and do your honors and pompous titles take insult from the sun and wither in his blaze? How, then, will they stand when "the heavens shall pass away," and when "the Son of Man shall be revealed in flaming fire to take vengeance on them that know not God and obey not the Gospel of Jesus Christ? Give me the humble title of Christian, and let me hear the Saviour's "Well done," and I care nothing for your "great swelling words of vanity," your mocking titles, lighter than air—alike an insult to reason, an offense to modesty, an abhorrence to religion, and to be spit from the tongue of truth with an infinite loathing and disgust.

St. James Evangelical Lutheran Church, Gettysburg, Pa.

"THE UNITED BRETHREN COMMISSION."

BY PROF. C. J. KEPHART.

I shall hail with delight the day that witnesses the end of organized secrecy, and to all laudable means to bring about that day I shall gladly lend my support. The statement that the Commission is not a United Brethren commission, would carry much more force if it did not appear so manifestly that the statement has its basis in prejudice rather than an argument.

I did not write my first article with a view to discussion, but I now feel called upon to say something further in answer to these questions:

First. Did the constitution of our church, as it is to-day, ever receive from the membership a formal acceptance?

Second. Had the General Conference of 1885 authority to appoint the Church Commission?

Third. In the proposed article relating to secrecy, a declaration against secret societies?

The first question especially, must be answered not by constructing a theory, but by an appeal to facts. Bro. Floyd claims that the constitution was formally accepted by the people, because the General Conference of 1837, in which a constitution was first presented, recognizing that "it had no authority to pass it to its final adoption," issued a circular "notifying the church to elect delegates with a view of the final adoption of a constitution in 1841, to either reject, amend, or adopt the provisionsl constition agreed upon by the General Conference of 1837, so that the General Conference of 1841 was not only a General Conference, but a constitutional convention, fully authorized by the church to act on the final adoption of a constitution, which they did." So says Bro. Floyd.

Now to the record. The circular referred to by Bro. Floyd, as it appeared in the discipline of 1837, appears in full on the first page of the Religious Telescope of March 11, 1885, in an article from the very careful pen of Rev. A. W. Drury, D. D., Prof. of Church History in Union Biblical Seminary. This circular, speaking of the General Conference, says

"We are well aware that we have transcended the bounds given us by our discipline, which [transcending our bounds,] will be found in the constitution, article fourth, section second, declaring that the constitution can neither be altered or amended without a two-thirds majority of a General Conference. * * * The object of this circular is to give notice to our church throughout the union that we intend to present a memorial to the next General Conference praying them to ratify the constitution now adopted, according to [including] article fourth, section second."

Please notice that this circular of which Bro. Floyd speaks, says nothing about "electing delegates," as Bro. Floyd says. It speaks nothing at all of "adopting a constitution," as Bro. Floyd says. It speaks of a memorial to be presented praying for the ratifying of the constitution adopted in 1837. So that, if in consequence of the circular sent out in 1837 the General Conference of 1841 was in any sense a constitutional convention, its authority in that respect extended only to the ratification or rejection of the constitution provided in 1837. But it must be remembered that this circular does not pretend to constitute the next General Conference a constitutoinal convention, but it contemplates having that done by a certain "memorial" of which it speaks. But no such memorial was presented to the General Conference of 1841. So that that body was in no authoritative manner asked by the church to provide a constitution. Hence, it was not a constitutional convention.

Second. The General Conference of 1841 paid no attention whatever to the constitution of 1837. "A motion was offered by E. Vandemark that a constitution be adopted." That motion carried. "A committee of nine was appointed to draft a constitution." This committee reported and their report was considered and adopted. Thus the records disclose of the case without so much as a reference to the constitution of 1837; not so much as to use the definite article "the." Hence, the General Conference took no action whatever in relation to the constitution of 1837, but took up the question of a constitution as an entirely new subject. Beside, the constitution then adopted is an entirely different document from that of 1837, differing from it in more points than it agrees with it.

No provision whatever was made for submitting this new constitution to a vote of the membership. It never was so submitted. No one has ever claimed that it was so submitted. The claim has been entirely that the General Conference acted simply as a convention authorized to ratify the constitution of 1837. It is manifest, however, from the records given that that is an entire mistake. Was I then "mistaken to the facts," when I said, the constitution has only the tacit approval of the church? Will Bro. Floyd deny these records, or will he deny that he was acquainted with them when he wrote his review to my article?

He made some reference to the constitution of the United States. He knows that that document provides the method of its adoption in Article VII, and that in strict accordance with that method it was adopted, so that the comparison which he institutes is very feeble, if not wholly unworthy a man of his intelligence.

The validity of our constitution results from its adoption by the General Conference, but not from the fact of its formal adoption by the church. Hence I gave it as my judgment, and I so think yet, that no legal condition exists to prevent any General Conference from annulling the constitution and presenting another. It is claimed that it has gained authority from usage, but that to say the least, is a question of two sides.

The General Conference of 1885, however, conceded the validity of the constitution, hence, instead of annulling it and providing another, they sought simply a method by which to submit amendments to the people. Admitting the validity of the constitution, had they the authority to appoint the Commission, and confer upon it its present authority? This is a question of law.

The coustitution says: "all ecclesiastical power herein granted, to make or repeal any rule of Discipline, is vested in a General Conference," etc. The last article states, "There shall be no alteration of the foregoing constitution unless by request of two-thirds of the whole society." This last quotation contains all that is said about amendment. It says nothing as to how amendments shall arise, how they shall be submitted, or how the will of the people shall be ascertained. It is simply a negative provision, stating what shall not be done. How shall amendments arise? In view of the silence of the constitution on this subject, who shall answer this question, and what must be said of any answer that may be given? Unquestionably the right to give that answer rests with the General Conference conferred in that first clause which gives authority to "make or repeal any rule of Discipline." In answer to the last clause of the question just above, it must be said that any answer that may be given to the question, "How shall amendments arise?" can be judged by the constitution only on two points: First, Does it recognize the supremacy of the membership? Second, does it recognize the fact that authority to amend must be obtained from two-thirds of our membership? Aside from these points, there are no constitutional provisions to be complied with on this subject. Bro. Floyd says, "they" (the law men) "do not deny the right of the General Conference to provide constitutional methods of change." What does he mean by constitutional methods, since the constitution contains not one word respecting methods? Any such provision must be disciplinary, and constitutional only respecting the points above named. Hence, aside from these two points the General Conference is the sole judge as to what provision shall be made to meet this emergency. Bro. Floyd says it would be proper for the General Conference to formulate amendments and send them down to the people for approval or rejection. But he sees no such provision in the constitution. Such method would be legal provided it had the sanction of the General Conference. But that alone could give it legality. This, however, is not the only possible method. Bro. Floyd himself suggests another. The General Conference devised still another, the Commission. By what article, clause, or sentence of the constitution will Bro. Floyd prove it unconstitutional?

The proposed article is a declaration against all secret societies, "which infringe upon the rights of those outside their organizations, and whose principles and practices are injurious to the Christian character of their members." If Bro. Floyd condemns other than such, will he please state his authority for such condemnation? There is no other ground upon which they can be condemned. Then we are told that the fact, that the church states not simply the fact, but the ground of her condemnation of such orders, this "is an apology to secretists for our historic position on this question." The fact that I believe that those characteristic marks belong to all such orders, does not render it necessary that our entire church so think.

The only reply I have to make to the bit of ridicule thrown upon what I said about the two-thirds clause is this: The constitution is not clear as to how that expression of the church is to be had. We have Bro. Floyd's views. It would have more force if it was taken from the constitution. Our church is known as a whole society in the aggregate of its individual members, of its classes or appointments, and of its annual conference districts. Suppose that the General Conference should decide that a vote upon this question should be taken by conference districts, or by appointments, who has authority to reverse that decision? Who?

COLOR-LINE.

BY KATE KINGSBURY.

"A pious young man told me that his folks had taken and raised a young colored boy, who was greatly attached to him, as they were children together. 'Do you shake hands with him when you go home?' I asked. 'No, never!' was his astonished reply."—Cynosure, Jan. 14th.

Shake hands?
No, never! There's a line
Between rights mine and thine—
'Twixt him and me.
Though men may legislate,
They hide not—men of state—
This line from me.
Shake hands with him?
No, never!

Shake hands?
That line, you see it now,
'Tis drawn above his brow
And twisted tight.
His nose is flat and wide,
The lips so thick; beside,
His skin's not light.
Shake hands with him—
No, never!

Shake hands?
When children, we oft played
Together in the shade
Of some large tree;
Or ran, with right good will,
Through valley and o'er hill,
Joyous and free,—
But clasp his hand--
No, never!

Shake hands?
My father raised that boy.
Servant without alloy,
Faithful was he:
When called, so quickly there--
So trusted everywhere,
And kind to me.
But, friend to greet—
No, never!

Shake hands?
Shall I, a man of lore,
With hope for fame in store,
With him now mate
Who walked beside, and bore
My books to school-room door,--
Returned to wait
And hear them home?
No, never!

Shake hands?
In Heaven, do you ask?
He'll finish here his task,
Drop toil and care;
Then, with his spirit white,
Gladly I'll claim the right
Of brother—there;
Clasp soul to soul
Forever!

WORLDLY ASSOCIATIONS.

BY MRS. L. M. HOYT.

"If ye were of the world, the world would love his own; but because ye are not of the world, but I have chosen you out of the world, therefore the world hateth you."—John 15: 9.

The fact that worldly associations are detrimental to every true child of God can not be denied. Yet the present age is one of mingling and commingling with the church and world; they have, to a great extent, joined hands and are traveling in the same way together. The fruit of this union is lifeless children born into the church, instead of those full of life, spirit, and real love for the cause of Christ and the salvation of the yet unsaved.

Names enrolled on the church book are sufficient guarantee of their right and title to heaven, regardless of the change from nature to grace required by God's Word. "Wherein they were once blind, they now see; old things have passed away and all things become new." Yet these have no such experience to relate. They joined the church, it's true; but the ballroom, party and lodge gatherings are far more attractive to them than all religious services combined. "Where the carcass is there will the eagles be gathered together;" "Where the treasure is there will the heart be also." It certainly is not judging unrighteously when we judge the tree by the fruit it bears If men are clamoring for worldly institutions, they certainly can not "have an eye single to the glory of God" and the salvation of those out of Christ; yet some try to make us believe that "lovers of pleasure more than lovers of God" are on their way to heaven. I think the poet would place them under this line: "Mistaken souls that dream of heaven," etc.

God's people are a separate people from the worldling; they always have been, and they always will be. We go to the unconverted and invite him to seek the Saviour, point him to the Lamb of God. If he accepts the invitation and becomes converted, how soon we are led to exclaim, "We are brethren!" But if he still pursues the way to death, turns a deaf ear to our entreaties, we do not, can not love his society as we do those that are really the children of God."

God help us to be Bible Christians, and then we shall have no desire to be yoked with unbelievers, or have fellowship with the unfruitful works of darkness.

THE PRODIGAL SON AS A SINNER.

BY ELDER A. SIMS.

Of all the parables we find recorded in the New Testament that of the prodigal son is the most pathetic and beautiful. It is beautiful because it illustrates so forcibly the immense riches of Gospel grace; and pathetic because it delineates a tender social passion—parental affection of a parent for a child. The incident thus narrated bears a striking analogy to the whole course of the sinner, from the commencement of his career in wickedness to the time of his conversion to God. It is designed to teach every impenitent character what course to pursue, and what treatment he may expect on taking that course.

But a very wrong use has been made of this parable by some, who have tried to make it teach that a sinner can, unaided by the Holy Spirit, arise and turn to God. The parable, if studied in connection with the preceding one, teaches nothing like this. The parable of the lost sheep apparently teaches that the wanderer is irresistibly borne home by Christ; while, in seeming opposition to this, the prodigal son appears spontaneously to repent and turn to God. But these two examples do not represent two distinct experiences, or two modes of conversion, but two sides of the same fact. In the first parable the Saviour's part is revealed; in the second the sinner's. Both these agencies—the divine and the human—harmoniously operate and blend together in every sinner's conversion. The man comes, yet Christ brings him; Christ brings him, yet he comes—man's free agency and God's sovereignty harmonized. The parable we now have under consideration shows the sinner's part, viz: to repent.

Adopting this interpretation, which so beautifully blends the two agencies, we direct your attention to—

1. The prodigal as a sinner.—To some persons of a free and easy disposition the crime of the prodigal son may not appear to be of very great magnitude. But we think he has given sufficient evidence, both in his address to his father and in his subsequent conduct, to show that he was guilty of a most heinous and accursed sin. With an air of impudent boldness and authority he says to an indulgent father, "Give me the portion of goods that falleth to me." Here we have a true expression of the sad state of his heart. It is evident that he had become alienated from home affections, and that he was anxious to leave the parental roof. He could no longer feel contented with the comforts and conveniences of his father's house. He wished to have the entire control of his portion of the patrimony, that he might rush headlong into the indulgence of self-gratification. Just as this young man felt toward his father and his home, so does every sinner feel toward God. Deep down in his heart there exists innate and practical alienation from God—a deplorable destitution of filial and supreme love. Yes, there is not only the absence of love, but the presence of enmity. He positively hates God. Conscious experience and the Bible pronounce "the carnal mind to be enmity against God." What is the result of this alienation—the natural and inevitable result of it? The estranged soul feels no desire to be with God, not even with his people; but, on the contrary, he has a depraved desire to be away from them. The narrow way, the pleasures of religion have no attraction for him; nor does he want the advantages and blessings of God's household.

This request of the prodigal son is indicative of that foul monster, pride. He wanted to be independent of his father, and to set up for himself. He thought he could manage his property and dispose of his own affairs. Blinded by the pride of self-deception; he demands: "Give me the portion of goods that falleth to me, that I may do with it as I please and as my superior wisdom may determine." The same evil principle that led to the expulsion of angels from heaven was here manifested. It is but too strikingly characteristic of man in all ages. In the vanity of your hearts, O ye prodigals from God, you think yourselves self-sufficient, wise, and important. You wish, if possible, to be independent of the Author of your being. You would fain be as gods to yourselves. With daring arrogance, your rebellious will sometimes asks, "What is the Almighty that we should serve Him?" O, yes, man, proud man, does not want to acknowledge his entire dependence upon the Lord; this is too humbling for his proud, unsanctified heart.

The sin of this prodigal heart was soon manifested in his conduct: "And not many days after, the youngest son gathered all together and took his journey into a far country, and there wasted his substance with riotous living," or, as we read in verse 30, "devoured it with harlots." Thus was he guilty, not only of extravagant expenditure, but of associating with the most debased and foul characters. O, how truthfully has he been termed "the prodigal son." In a far higher sense is every sinner against God a spendthrift of the deepest dye, though endowed with physical, mental and moral capability, of infinitely greater value than mere goods. I fear that many young in life, and others on the threshold of eternity, are willfully neglecting and shamefully abusing these precious gifts from God. Far, far away from God in heart and life, you are employing your noble powers in the nefarious work of satisfying your fleshly appetites, and squandering your golden moments and opportunities. Instead of living in fellowship with the people of God, you are associating with the servants of the devil. Were a young man of the present age to act as this prodigal son after he received from his father what amount of property might fall to his lot, people would be ready to call him an excessively wild and profligate fellow. But alas! there are multitudes, not only of young men, but of both sexes, young and old, who are playing a far worse part than he did; thus ruining themselves, body and soul, by delighting and revelling in sin.

Does the reader see his own moral photograph portrayed in the picture of this prodigal son? Remember that he is the representative of all those who in heart and practice wander from God. This you have done, whether you believe it it or not. You have not only purposed to wrong, but, like this young man, you have done it. In heart you have constantly strayed from God. Your thoughts, desires, motives and affections are all impure and all wrong. While God has been asking and expecting your love, you have not only failed to give it, but you have hated him and his moral laws. What has been your actual conduct? Have you not been lending your life, your body, often your tongue, your hands, your precious time, your influence, and your presence to the prostituting service of sin and Satan? Precious talents these—gifts that are bestowed on you for a noble and dignified purpose. You have been employed in a service infinitely more beastly in the sight of God than that of eating swine food. You are found a prodigal at this moment. Conscience says you are a prodigal; the holy law says that you are a prodigal; and you can not deny it. You stand guilty and condemned.

MASONRY HAS NO STANDARD RITUAL.

[Our lecturers and others who make use of the Masonic rituals by Doesburg, Ronayne and Morgan will be interested in reading the following evidence that the different Grand Lodges differ more or less from each other in their secret work. The article is from the Freemason of Detroit.]

A brother of one of the Detroit lodges recently visited lodge No. 3 in the Masonic temple of Philadelphia, and Citizens lodge of New York city, which is held in its $1,500,000 temple, and thus reports his experience.

It is an illustration of differences of work from that of our own, and emphasizes the manifest need of a single authority and standard instead of, as now, having each Grand Lodge independent of all others, and often different from all others in its work. He says:

"I went to the temple in Philadelphia at 7:45 P. M., but found that all the lodges commenced at 7 P. M., and I was therefore too late to see the opening. From one of the three tylers seated at their respective doors I learned that his lodge, No. 3, was going to work in the second degree, and I therefore sent in my name for examination. In one hour by the watch I was invited to meet the committee, who administered the oath, disregarding wholly my traveling card, which, it being my first visit to any other lodge but my own, I had erroneously supposed was sufficient to secure admission. The committee then said: 'You are not to interpret our examination as implying doubt; we are here simply to give you an opportunity to prove yourself a Master Mason. Use the time as you see fit. We have no questions to ask or comments to make; we are here simply to listen.' I then said, 'You probably want to know how I was made a Mason?' They replied, 'We have nothing to say or suggest; if you have anything to say we will listen.'

"I then gave in detail the substance of the three degrees with the obligations, as far as I could recall, until one of the three said, 'I am satisfied,' to which the others assented. Over half an hour was taken by this examination.

"The committee told me that there were three others for examination, and I could stay and see the others examined, as they would report upon us four at once. Two of the three were not 'recognized' for what seemed good reasons, and finally, about 10 o'clock, I was admitted to the lodge in time for 'refreshments' just before the 'crafting' of a candidate.

"On being called to labor, the master announced that they 'would open their work in the second degree by the "short way,"' which was a material abridgment in time, as was also the conferring of the second degree by the 'short way,' which immediately followed and occupied but a very few minutes.

"As the ceremonies, for manifest reasons, can not be given in this article, it must suffice to say that the more noticeable differences from our work were the placing of the lights, the wearing of the aprons, the seating of several of the officers, and the preparation of the candidate. Minor differences occurred, not only in the obligation and its penalty, but in almost every sentence that was expressed.

"As soon as the candidate had retired the master called the lodge to order in the fourth degree, which compelled my retirement, as I had not yet been advanced beyond the third degree.

"This is one of the oldest and best equipped lodges in Philadelphia, and they are confident that they preserve the original methods that have suffered innovations in other cities.

"A few days later, but with my Philadelphia experience fresh in mind, I went to the Masonic temple in New York city not far from 7 P. M. I was told that the New York lodges all met at 8 p. m. I therefore stepped into the elegant library and waited till 7:45, when I went to the Citizens' lodge room and was promptly met by a brother, who said he would secure my examination before the lodge opened. Five minutes later I was introduced to the secretary of the lodge, who had formerly been its master, and, retiring with two other brothers to the examination room, he administered the oath, and then rapidly questioned me concerning the work of the three degrees by selecting at random here and there such topics as would best test my memory and knowledge.

"About five minutes sufficed and he said, 'I am satisfied,' to which the others assented, and we immediatcly entered the lodge room.

"The work was the second degree and was not abridged. A very exact and pleasant discipline was maintained; but I noticed that while their work differed somewhat from that in Philadelphia, the changes were slight, while it differed radically in several respects from that of Detroit.

"I sat during the evening with a visiting brother, who was the master of one of the other New York city lodges, and speaking of these matters, he said: 'In Philadelphia they think they are right; here in New York we think we are right, but I suppose you out West work very differently from the lodges in the East.'

"I asked him why this was so, and he replied, 'Oh, there is no universal standard; each State is separate and independent, and it is impossible to tell absolutely which is right.'"

A NOBLE ENDORSEMENT OF BRO. COUNTEE.

Prof. A. A. Hopkins of Rochester, N. Y., was until its last number the leading editorial writer on the American Reformer, a weekly conducted with great ability in New York city to urge forward all social and political reforms. It was for a time one of the best temperance papers in the country, but failed to reach a paying basis after two years' publication. Prof. Hopkins immediately engaged in the prohibition lecture work as one of the ablest speakers and has made a tour of the South. He held meetings at Memphis, and in a letter to the New York Witness writes thus of our brother of the Tabernacle Baptist church:

"If some had been present with me on Monday night, in the Colored Tabernacle church, they would have gotten a new faith in Southern possibilities.

"The pastor of that church is a very black man, once resident in Lockport, N. Y.—Rev. R. N. Countee. He publishes The Living Way, chief colored Baptist paper in the State. He has great executive gifts and wields a wide influence. His congregation, though not the largest of his people in Memphis yet large, is regarded the most intelligent and refined. They gave me patient, thoughtful hearing. And when, after showing the curse of the saloon to all men, I asked: 'How shall we get rid of it?' you should have heard Mr. Countee respond: "Vote it out!"

"Being requested to rise, all who would pledge to vote only for men opposed to the saloon, and to vote for prohibition when it might come up, three-fourths of the whole audience stood.

"'I have been a Republican,' said Mr. Countee to them; 'I have supported the Republican party all these years; but I tell you now that I will never again cast my ballot for men who favor the liquor traffic, or for a party not opposed to it. Our city, our State is governed by the saloon; no matter which party wins it is the saloon that rules. We must separate from all this unholy association, and make a stand for our manhood, for all our best interests. They tell me you mustn't take temperance into politics, but I tell you it is the politics of Heaven, and hereafter that's the politics for me."'

REFORM NEWS.

TO THE FRIENDS OF REFORM IN IOWA.

DEAR BRETHREN:—After spending a few days with my family, I am again in the field of conflict. I would gladly have returned immediately to Iowa, but as I was dependent upon the N. C. A. to furnish the means to do so, they thought best to employ me at other work for a little while, until you shall have time to send in your pledges of monthly payments to support the Iowa State lecture work. Send cash and pledges to Bro. J. A. Laird, Wayne, Henry county, Iowa. He is the treasurer of the Iowa State Christian Association, opposed to secret societies.

I will soon resume work in Iowa if you will furnish the necessary means to do so. I would gladly go forth to battle for Christ at my own charges if I had the means, but I have not. I am dependent upon you to come up to the help of God with me.

"Sam Jones," the Georgia revivalist, says: "It takes grace and grit and greenbacks to run a meeting. Christ," he adds, "will furnish the grace, I will furnish the grit, but you must furnish the greenbacks." Sam Jones believes in a division of labor.

Why should not the reform work in Iowa go forward? Christ will not fail to give grace, according to his promise; and, sustained by his grace, I have grit. Only the greenbacks are lacking. Are there not at least fifty persons in Iowa who will immediately pledge one dollar a month to the treasurer of the Iowa State Christian Association for the support of the State work? And are there not fifty others who will pledge to pay 50 cents a month, and a multitude of others who will give a smaller sum?

Shall Satan be permitted to work through the secret lodges to dethrone Christ, and corrupt and subvert Christianity, and establish a false, blinding and soul-destroying worship in its stead, and no organized effort be made to withstand the enemy that is coming in upon us like a flood?

Let each individual to whom this appeal comes act as a committee to canvass for money and pledges to be forwarded to the State treasurer, and there will be no lack of funds to carry on this work. Remember that while the devil is working through the saloon to debauch the morals and debase the manhood of his victims, and fill the land with crime, the lodge is "Satan's masterpiece" for corrupting the faith of Christ and supplanting the Christian church. And shall we let Satan work through the "modern heathenism" of Freemasonry to corrupt the Protestant churches, as he wrought through ancient heathenism to corrupt the church of Rome?

Brethren of Iowa, "let us not sleep as do others." If you can not yourself go forth to battle with the powers of darkness and resist the incoming flood of infidelity that Satan is pouring out upon us through the secret lodges, do not withhold the means that are needed to sustain those who are willing to stand in the breach and breast the flood, and, in the name of Christ and by the power of the Holy Spirit, lift up a standard against it.

In the stead of Christ, and in behalf of the officers of your State association, I appeal to you to immediately send them the money and pledges needed to carry on the State lecture work.

C. F. HAWLEY.

GOOD CHEER FROM OHIO.

The other side of the Good Man Argument.—Masonry won't do to die by.—Old Wheaton friends.—Battlefields located.

MORNING SUN, Preble Co., O., Mar. 12.

DEAR CYNOSURE:—Our cause moves steadily on in this State. Ground once gained is never lost, though circumstances at times seem adverse. I am more and more convinced that there is a growing dislike of secret societies, especially among professors of religion.

During the past week I have called on pastors in the different denominations and I find that almost to a man they are opposed to secret combinations and would be very glad if they were wiped out. This is their testimony: Rev. Abby, pastor of the Presbyterian church, Hamilton, said, "I am opposed to secret societies from College fraternities down." The Lutheran pastor, Rev. G. H. Trebel: "You are doing a good work; I'll take your paper." The Baptist pastor: "I should be glad to give notice of your meetings and help in any way that I can, but don't think it wise at present to have a lecture in my church." A prominent banker: "I was recently called to the bedside of a wealthy man with whom I had done a great deal of business. He was a Mason; said he, Masonry will do to live by, but it won't do to die by. Put my name down for your paper."

At Millville I spoke twice in the United Brethren church to good audiences. One man said, "I believe all you say about the Masons. I belonged to the Temple of Honor. They had so much foolishness I left." Another: "I have been as high as the Knights Templar degree in Masonry and know what you said to be the truth; I used to think it was all secret, but when I saw it published in Harper's Magazine I concluded that it was not."

I had stated that every Knight Templar was compelled to drink wine from a human skull and invoke double damnation on his soul if he revealed their secrets. Thus God raises up witnesses everywhere against this terrible system of darkness that has settled down on us like the pestilence of Egypt.

I am indebted to many friends for kindness shown and assistance in our work. Bro. Peter Minton at Millville cheered me much on the way. His youngest son, Harvey, was a former schoolmate at Wheaton. The readers of the Cynosure who attended College there seven years ago will remember him and his estimable wife. She will be remembered as Florence Parker. They have a very pleasant home and three bright little girls. I shall always remember my call here with a great deal of pleasure.

At College Corner I was made welcome by friends Miller, Finney and others. Bro. S. Y. Miller and wife are members of the College Church at Wheaton. Friends there will be glad to know that they are usually well and prospering.

My appointments for the future are as follows: Sabbath morning, U. P. Church, College Corner; Sabbath evening, the U. P. church at this place; Monday evening, the U. P. church at Hopewell; Wednesday evening at this point again. For Thursday evening I hope to arrange for a lecture at Fair Haven. I have a good list of subscribers for the Cynosure this week, and things in general look quite encouraging.

I trust the friends in this State will not forget to pray that God will work mightily for us, that ye may gain the victory in his name.

W. B. STODDARD.

—Rev. Wm. Moerdyk, pastor of the Reformed Dutch Church of South Holland, near this city, has accepted a call from the large and influential church of Pella, Iowa. The Pella church and colony came from Holland, under the leadership of Rev. Schouten, many years ago. Like the colony settled in Holland, Mich., and vicinity, led by Rev. Von Raalte in 1847, the Pella church belongs to the reformed body which seceded some fifty years ago from the State church of the Netherlands, on account of the rationalism prevailing in its pulpits. Bro. Moerdyk has been a useful and working member of the N. C. A. Board, and also of the Illinois State Executive Committee. His presence in the meetings of these committees will be greatly missed.

CORRESPONDENCE.

THE DAY OF SMALL THINGS.

DR. COLLINS ON THE FIRST BEGINNINGS AT WASHINGTON.

MARCH 6, 1886.

Unless a member of some secret society, we can not be expected to furnish any news of importance in a letter. The telegraph has already given every item to the country. The fast mail, as a carrier of news, is at a discount. The pencil and the telegraph are the news-tellers in our day. Good and great as the postal system is, the telegraph is an additional blessing, for which, as it is, we ought to be thankful; as it should be—honest, faithful, Sabbath-keeping, and anti-monopolist—it would deserve greater gratitude.

The prompt arrival of the Cynosure after its flying journey of nine hundred miles, outstripping the average wind, calls to thanksgiving for the mail as an invaluable element of modern Christian civilization. Our free Bible, our open Protestant Christianity, beget such a thirst for frequent correspondence and general diffusion of knowledge that nothing short of a system wonderful for its accuracy, cheapness and swiftness will satisfy it. No other religion, no order of secrecy, no system that does not recognize the popular and universal right, as Protestant Christianity alone does, to a thorough knowledge of its nature, laws, objects, and operations, ever did or ever can create or maintain such a grand, beneficent agency as the postal system of the Protestant States of Germany, Great Britain and the United States. It is greater, more beneficent, more wonderful than all the so-called "seven wonders of the world" combined. And even this may be greatly improved. THE PEOPLE will enjoy still greater benefits when the postal, telegraphic and express systems are all so united and intertwined by law and under law as to work in perfect harmony. Here is a field for a statesman that will, at no distant day, place a triple crown of glory on some new Franklin's brow, as the electric telegraph has done on that of Morse.

But I began writing to say that this same Cynosure of the 4th inst., just received and read, is worth more than its weight in gold for the address of President Blanchard to the colored people of Washington, D. C., on secret societies. A few years since, such a thing would have been thought unsafe, fanatical, foolish. One evening, less than four years ago, "a few, that is, eight souls," more or less, saved from the general deluge of secretism in Washington, taking their lives, reputations and positions—business, church and social—in their hands at the invitation of the writer and his wife, met in our parlor, 909 New York avenue, in the same city, and formed an anti-secret association. Of those present, only a part of the names are remembered. Besides the writer and his wife, there were Mrs. McPherson, P. H. Grisham, Esq., Mr. Langhorne, etc. I would be glad to recall the names of the three or four others, but I can not.

We left Washington a few months after that, but the society remained, and its work has been blessed. Its numbers have increased. A very central and suitable property, worth $10,000, has been secured and fitted up as headquarters. An excellent weekly paper, The American, ably edited by Prof. Bailey—fit successor, though probably no relation to G. Bailey, of the anti-slavery pioneer paper, The National Era, of blessed memory!—is sent broadcast among the people far and near, sowing good seed, encouraging every good work, and exposing every evil thing among white and black. Verily, this "labor is not in vain in the Lord."

That one address by Dr. Blanchard, heard by those eager, teachable, but in so many cases deluded colored people, and now, through the Cynosure and other channels, read and heard by thousands and myriads, is a grand harvest from "a handful of seed on that mountain top." May it yet fill the earth with its blessed abundance. Copies of that address ought to be sent to every hamlet and cabin throughout the land. Every anti-secret paper should publish at least the substance of it, and call on its readers for the means of printing it in large, plain type, by the million, for the million.

And so the work goes on, "here a little and there a little," with many a backset in some part, a temporary defeat here and there; but the great cause of God and truth, Jesus and humanity, is marching on with sure and irresistible tread. "The kingdom under the whole heaven shall be given to the people of the Most High God."

"Then blessed be His glorious name
To all eternity;
The whole earth His glory fill—
Amen, so let it be."

"The prayers of David, the son of Jesse, are realized." S. Collins.

GLORIOUS NEWS—THE FIRE SPREADING IN THE SOUTH.

FROM THE GENERAL MISSIONARY OF THE AMERICAN BAPTIST HOME MISSION SOCIETY FOR THE SOUTHWEST.

Memphis, Tenn., March 4, 1886.

Editor Cynosure:—I inclose a letter just received from Rev. A. L. Reese, of Louisiana, which I am sure will give your readers pleasure, and I trust encourage many others to help send the Cynosure to the colored pastors in the South. Bro. Reese is a worthy and promising young minister. I am also personally acquainted with Bro. Hubbs and Bro. Dorsey, the two brethren mentioned in the letter. They are both excellent men and men of influence. Elder Dorsey has been a valuable leader of his people for many years, in temporal, as well as spiritual matters. He has helped many to secure homes. The town where he lives is named in his honor.

I have found no State in the South where the evils of secret societies are more manifest than in Louisiana. Miss J. P. Moore, the veteran missionary of the Woman's Baptist Home Mission Society, Chicago, who has labored many years in Louisiana, and who has probably done more for the colored people of that State than any missionary, man or woman, who has worked in the South, recently wrote me, urging me to write a tract on the evils of secret societies, to be sent to the pastors. She says: "We have a class of men in this State going around organizing these societies and putting the fees in their pockets—ministers, most of them. They are doing great harm. There are not many in North Louisiana yet, and I want them warned against the evil. Oh, I do feel so troubled about this matter." The Cynosure will do more than all the tracts that I could write, and I hope that it may be soon sent to all the preachers in the South, as well as in Louisiana. I hope that many may help Bro. Reese to build his church. H. Woodsmall.

THE LETTER.

Cannon, La., Feb. 29, 1886.

Dear Brother Woodsmall:—I do want to tell you what a change has taken place since you were here. If you remember the first time you and I met, it was at Thibodeaux, soon to be two years ago. You may call to mind a little incident that took place while you were there. You were requested to say a word to the brethren about secret societies and their injury to the churches of Christ, etc. I was at that time a prominent member of five different secret societies, and of course your argument was very disagreeable to me just at that moment, owing to my prejudice of heart. But still my mind was never at ease; neither did my conscience fail to warn me of the terrible danger that lay before me as a minister of Christ, in pursuing such a dark course. At length I began to be aroused by my conscience. Earnest reflection taught me that all of this secret society business was simply the devil's claptrap. Then came the terrible struggle between me and the lodge. How could I come out from under such a powerful king and live? was the great and momentous question. Well, I will tell you how the answer came. Some true Christian paid my subscription to the Cynosure, and in the very first issue I saw that brother R. N. Countee was doing publicly what I was doing privately. In that memorable moment the door was opened, and the thought pressed itself home to my mind that Prof. Woodsmall's lecture is right after all, and I will no longer dare delay. So I at once left the lodge and declared war upon it. I made the first attack upon it last November, in a lecture delivered to the 4th District Association at the Mt. Zion Baptist church, in the city of Baton Rouge. Since then the fire has been burning all along the line. To my personal knowledge more than twenty-five good ministers of the Gospel, and church members have left the lodge to return no more. And it is a well reported fact that the lodges are dying faster than one may imagine.

Rev. A. Hubbs is battling strong against this evil at Plaquemine, La., and Rev. Bazil Dorsey, at Dorseyville, La., has been doing a noble work throughout the parish of Iberville, and has been very successful in suppressing the lodge enterprise, both in Dorseyville and in other places.

The land on which we worship has such claims against it by lodge supporters and others of similar character, that it was impossible for us to buy it, so we have been successful in getting a fine little tract in a little village near by, but we are extremely in need of money to build. Our people are very poor, and most of them are doing what they can to help themselves. Twelve hundred dollars is the sum needed. Our people have pledged $600. Can you implore help for us? We are sadly in need of a good house of worship. Yours respectfully,

A. L. Reese.

THE TABERNACLE CHURCH, MEMPHIS.

Memphis, Mar. 8, 1886.

Editor Cynosure:—According to promise I write you, that you may be informed as to how the battle for right against wrong is progressing in our city. We are yet in the midst of the fray, and as far as our church work is concerned, we are almost ready to shout Victory! "For we shall overcome them by blood of the Lamb."

Last Friday night was our regular church meeting, (conference meeting.) It was one of the most remarkable events in the history of our church. The resolution of the former meeting had brought, it seemed, all the members out to see what was to be done. Many were in favor of modifying the resolution so as to give those who were still adhering to the lodge another chance of thirty days; but after a few words from one of our leading brethren, who had been a Mason and renounced it since this work began, it was unanimously agreed to carry out the resolution in spirit and letter. I then urged the church to be valiant and not at this hour shrink from her agreed line of duty, and at all hazards to follow the teachings of the Word of God—"Come out from among them and be ye separate." Four came forward and asked to be dismissed with letters in good standing and full fellowship with us. I informed the church that we could do no such thing. To give them letters in good standing with us, when they were leaving us because they could not, or would not accept the preached Word, and leave their ungodly alliances, would be for the church to tell a falsehood; and that we dare not wilfully do.

They claimed they had a right to have letters in good standing. The church voted them letters with a proviso, viz:, "in good standing accept that they belong to ungodly associations in open violation of the Word of God." Some refused to have a letter containing any such statement, but the church stood her ground.

We then sang, "How firm a foundation, ye saints of the Lord." Amid sobs and tears, the roll was called and each member responded as to their standing, some said, "I shall die in my church"; some, "I'm on the Lord's side"; some, "I'm with my church"; some, "I belong to the redeemed army and I'll die in the field." The roll half finished, we sang one of our old Southern melodies, "Die in the field of battle, Die in the field," and resumed the reading. One said, "I am in my society and I expect to die there"; another, "Scratch my name off," with as much emphasis as possible. Then one arose with tears and said, "I want to stay with my church but my husband won't let me." Here we all broke down. How to get out of this dilemma was a question; but we let God settle it. Except a man leave mother, father, wife, children, lands and money, "he cannot be my disciple," and thus, amid sobs and tears, eighty-three were excluded from our fellowship. The church is determined to wipe the lodge out of her midst.

Yesterday was our communion day and it was observed that a number came determined to commune or have a row. We endeavored to advise them to go home or some where and let us alone, and told them emphatically that no member of any secret or worldly society could ever commune with us; we had borne enough at their hands; and as a church we meant just what we had said. Here some members arose and came forward, as all supposed to renounce ther allegiance to the powers of night; but verily, it was to overawe the church, and openly, violently, and repeatedly they dared us to exclude or erase their name. They were members of the church, and they intended to stay there. We asked, "Well, please tell us quietly, have you left the lodge? Do you intend to leave it?" The reply came, "I do not know what I intend to do."

I calmly told them the church did; and again came the challenge, "I dare you to exclude me." At once a brother made a motion to exclude. I put it, and it was unanimously carried. We knelt in prayer and asked God to give strength and courage to dare to do right. We have a few more under cover, and as soon as we are sure that they have any alliance outside of the church we shall let them go.

Those who were excluded are loud to-day with their threats to get out an injunction, and by a process of law try to close us out of the church. One man went home to get a revolver to return to the office and kill me, because he learned his wife was excluded. I waited for him to come, but he failed to appear.

The Odd-fellows had an annual sermon yesterday at one of our popular churches. I was indirectly held up in a part of the service as a poor, ignorant fellow who knew nothing, by one of the preachers on the occasion, who was a pupil under me some years ago. Of course all the Odd-fellows believed what he said.

I am very grateful to many friends for their generous tokens of sympathy. The weather is now opening and we hope to have better financial sailing. We ask the prayers of Christians everywhere. Pray that God may sustain us and give us courage to do right. I am proud to say I succeeded in getting enough money to pay all my notes except $75.00, which I hope to raise soon. May God bless all the dear friends of the Cynosure.

One more thought. We have two members of our church who are old, helpless, and blind. They are members of the society, and are cared for by us; and after much prayer we determined to take them and supply their needs, and let the lodge have nothing to do with them. To this I learn the society objects. We shall leave the matter with the persons to decide, but we know they will take the church. It is now 5 P. M. and the heathen are raging, our people are coming in; some are a little excited and nervous, but Jesus reigns, and all power is in his hands.

Yours, R. N. Countee.

FROM THE LUMBERMEN'S EVANGELIST.

Minneapolis, Minn., Mar. 9, 1886.

Editor Christian Cynosure,

Dear Brother:—John Jasper insists that "The Sun do move." There are rapidly multiplying proofs that certain great moral reforms, which you are championing, do move.

The crusade against the "poisoners," mentioned, Rev. 21: 8; 22: 15, in the words pharmakois, pharmakoi, which our King James's version of the New Testament renders "sorcerers," has now in its front ranks the New York Independent, which informed its readers a little while ago that Spurgeon is prematurely breaking down under his tobacco-smoking habit. It is only a few years since George F. Pentecost, preaching in the London Tabernacle by invitation of its pastor, faithfully witnessed against the tobacco vice, and the guilty pastor rejoined with the narcotic explosion, "I smoke to the glory of God!" Smoke is bad for the eyes, even of preachers.

He must be blind of both eyes who cannot see that the tide of moral indignation against the alcohol-drinking habit, and all that fosters it, rises higher with each new moon. Alcoholic beverages must go. And those who will not give them up must go with them, into everlasting limbo.

In the hotel here last week, at dinner, a boarder sought to bring prohibition into contempt, saying, "The prohibition leaders have no bank account. They spend half the time running around trying to borrow ten dollars of somebody."

"God is the prohibition leader," was answered. "Has he been around trying to borrow anything of you lately?"

"I haven't got to deal with God unless I want to, have I? I was talking about the prohibition leaders," said the first.

"O yes!" was the reply, "You and I have got to deal with God every moment, and in everything, whether we want to or not, and God is the great Leader in prohibition. His invariable rule concerning all sin is eternal, constitutional prohibition."

Yesterday, the Minneapolis ministers, to the number of nearly fifty, almost unanimously voted that the Sunday newspaper must go without their further patronage. I send you herewith a copy of the Evening Journal which contains the report which was adopted after a most interesting discussion.

I find increasing proofs that the lodge iniquity is getting into disfavor with many who have worn its yoke, but declare now that no Christian can be profited by secretism.

The conclaves of capitalists seem now to be in a fair way to be hoist by their own petard. It is an easy problem in simple proportion. A is to B, as C is to D. Let A stand for capitalists combined in the Masonic conspiracy; B Anti-masons; C Knights of Labor, and D opponents of the Knights of Labor. The natural reaction of confederate lawlessness against confederate lawlessness has set in with a force which begins to make tremble the men who, having sown the wind most diligently, are now anxiously looking around for an adequate shelter from the whirlwind. Meanwhile let no Christian fear their fear nor dread their dread. Let us sanctify Jehovah of hosts himself. In the shadow of the Rock he will hide us, till the storm be overpast.

Your correspondent preached in Owratonna four days, and has here preached in the jail, in the open air, and at Sunday missions, and last evening addressed at the rooms of the W. C. T. U. a meeting held in the interest of evangelizing the woodsmen of Minnesota. Hope to go from here to Brainerd, Anoka, and, on the 19th to Crookston and thence to Duluth. Wm. F. Davis.

MASONRY AND BREACH OF PROMISE.

In Chicago last Saturday I learned a fact which illustrates the way our newspapers do not furnish us the news.

Wiehe, defendant in the Moran-Wiehe breach-of-promise case, three months before the action was tried, joined the Masonic lodge. His counsel, Mr. Brandt, brought out this fact on the trial and intimated that Miss Moran, being a Catholic, was offended because her lover had taken a young lady to a Masonic ball.

Mr. Hynes, counsel for Miss Moran, in his speech devoted some fifteen minutes to a discussion of that matter. He said that he was not a member of the order and knew nothing except from others. He said that the enemies of the order affirmed that it was a conspiracy against law and order, and that Masons would violate their civil obligations to defend their brethren. "I do not know," said he, "how this may be. I leave it to you, gentlemen of the jury. You are sworn to administer the law. I suppose that means the law of the land, not the law of the lodge, and you can say by your verdict in this case how you understand the matter."

My informant heard the argument, and I have reproduced his words as well as I can. It seems to me probable that this section of Mr. Hynes speech gained the case, for there were, I am told, a number of Masons on the jury who might have refused to agree but for the fact that they were thus put up on their honor. C. A. BLANCHARD.

WHERE STARRY FELL.

HOW THE GOOD TEMPLARS AND OTHER ORDERS FAIL IN DUNLAP.

DUNLAP, Kansas.

EDITORS CYNOSURE:—No doubt many friends of the reform work are thinking that we of Dunlap have become very much disinterested in regard to these matters of reform, but this work which was begun here some eighteen months ago has steadily increased and we feel with a good degree of success.

The books sent us by our friend Martin of Wisconsin, together with a number from Iowa and other parts, have formed quite an anti-secret library, which has been widely circulated among white and colored, and read seemingly with great profit.

We think we have good evidence of these things from a few facts: First, the colored people among whom we have been so earnestly laboring for the past six years are becoming much more enlightened, and despite the best efforts of our good Baptist minister Stewart, there has been very recently another Baptist organization formed, with their standard opposed to secrecy of every kind. They have a new church building erected in which they worship every Sabbath day.

Another fact. Last May a very eloquent man from Kentucky, professing to be a prohibitionist (and perhaps was), came among the whites and made a very eloquent speech for prohibition, at the close of which he organized a Good Templar Lodge, numbering, we understand, about forty. During the exercise of organizing, all the boys of town stood around the house shouting "Tubal Cain" and "Mahhah-bone," also throwing the Masonic signs, and inquiring for the signs, grips and password of that order. When the time came to administer the oath quite a number withdrew immediately, refusing to take the oath of any secret society. Notwithstanding the lodge continued to meet once in two weeks in the white Methodist church, for perhaps some three months, when some disturbance arose among the members on account of some prosecutions of the W. C. T. U. against the liquor men for violating the prohibitory law (one of their leading men going security for a saloonist). The Good Templar lodge then all went to sticks, and we've never heard from it since.

Another fact. A new druggist (a high Mason) moving into town last fall, tried very hard to organize a Masonic lodge, and utterly failed. Lately the Knights of Labor have made an effort to organize a lodge here, with what success we have not yet ascertained, but are under the impression their membership is not very numerous.

These things all impress us seriously that secretism in Dunlap is rather in the back ground, and we now are making an effort to have Bro. Loggan give us a lecture at as early a day as convenient, to enlighten the people still more. Some are very anxious for it indeed.

All this while Mr. Atchison is instructing and impressing the minds of the youth under his care against the vices of the Secret Empire. Myself and others are also using our best influence against this power, and we pray the good work may continue among us until we conquor. Yours for the truth,

MRS. C. M. SNODGRASS.

"MINOR" ORDERS LEAD DOWNWARD.

TWIN BROOKS, Dak.

In conversation with Mr. A. W. Van Alstine, Deputy G. W. C. T. of Dakota, we remarked that the "council degrees" of Good Templary were taken from Masonic order and that that alone ought to settle Good Templary into the pit with all oath-bound loddery. Mr. Van Alstine replied that he had not taken the "council degrees," concluding with, "I believe that Masonry is wrong, and I will not take the higher degrees in Templary."

Now this Mr. Van Alstine had just read up a "Good Templarism" Expose, and there learned what the "council degrees" were, he knew before something of Masonry, and hence his remarks; but why hold a deputation from G. W. C. T. Kanouse and continue to organize lodges which lead into the evils of Masonry? Even if primary Good Templary were not evil, is it not clearly a great wrong to perpetrate upon credulous humanity to organize traps to ensnare them?

Mr. Van Alstine's position is that occupied by others, or we should not pen these statements. Many persons are using their influence in favor of the "minor" orders while opposed to the "major" ones. But are you not aware, dear reader, that the "minor" orders are stepping-stones down to the "major" lodges, and ultimately to hell itself? For be it known that we believe that any institution rejecting Christ while claiming to be a religious body is the door by which its members go down to eternal ruin, even though these same members may have said a few prayers in Christ's name in church.

As to the stepping-stones, read a part of an address by Hon. J. R. Clymer, 32 degree at Bucyrus, O., June 24, '85 (as found in Masonic Review for Aug. '85.)

"Our ancient and world-extensive order regards with sincere and loving affection all her numerous progeny of children,—'Odd-Fellows', 'Knights of Pythias,' 'Knights of Honor,' 'Royal Arcanum,' and the other benevolent and protective secret associations of the day."

Now do you say that the "minor" orders are harmless while you know that Masonry is of the evil one? Can a corrupt tree yield other than corrupt fruit? Can impurity produce purity? Nay, verily; but we as followers of the Lord Jesus Christ must shun the very appearance of evil, and "come out from among them." C. E. WALKER.

PITH AND POINT.

THE SCANDINAVIANS AND THE KNIGHTS OF HONOR.

I would be very thankful, and many with me, if the Christian Cynosure could, at its earliest opportunity, give us an article on the secret society known as the "Knights of Honor." Some members of this society maintain that the society does not administer an oath, that they have nothing religious in the order. We, on the contrary, believe that this society has an oath; that it has a kind of religious service in the lodge; that it has a ritual and a chaplain to perform the service on certain occasions, e. g., at the funerals. This is our persuasion. But we want to be able to prove that it is so. Can the Cynosure assist us and many others in this respect? The Knights of Honor strive to the utmost to get members among the Scandinavians, and we that understand the danger are anxious to be able to meet the enemy. We want to know, if possible, if this society is not started by some older society, if it is not in connection with some older society in order to be able to pay $2,000 to the family of every deceased member. I am sure the Cynosure will help us in this matter to the utmost of its ability.—O. JUUL, Pastor of Our Saviour's Church, Chicago.

The request of Pastor Juul shall receive our especial attention, and from the facts in our possession and what we shall be able to gather, we shall give our readers the best information possible respecting this order.

HOMES IN KANSAS.

We are glad there is a paper published that will expose sin. We bid you God-speed in your work. We wish to say through the Cynosure, to good Prohibitionists and anti-secret men who want cheap homes, or a good location for business, in a new town on a new railroad in south central Kansas, address me.—M. R. BECKTELL, Macksville, Kansas.

REPROACHED FOR CHRIST'S SAKE.

I want something to do while I live to put down these dens of infamy and iniquity. I feel that God is in this work as much as I did in the anti-slavery or in the temperance cause, and I want to fight in this battle while I live. For this reason my name is a by-word and a reproach in this section of country.—ISAAC J. GILBERT, Derby, Conn.

OUR BOOKS IN SOUTH AFRICA.

Many thanks for donation of books sent. I have loaned them out. They surprise people who thought no one knew any thing of Freemasonry only Masons. I expect good to be done as truth must prevail. There is but little danger at present of native lodges being started as the feeling of caste is so strong, and the natives too ignorant of the benefits of Masonry. As no drink is allowed to be sold to natives it is evident that some change in the law must take place before a native Freemason can enjoy the benefits of the Masonic refreshments as usually indulged in after labor in the lodge. I expect eternity will reveal many dark things, and feel desirous that the rising generation should know what Masonry demands of its adherents.—ROBERT SHEMELD, Estcourt, Natal, South Africa.

BIBLE LESSONS.

STUDIES IN JEWISH HISTORY.

LESSON XIII, March 28, 1886.—Review.—Psalm 107: 1-21.

GOLDEN TEXT.—Then they cried unto the Lord in their trouble, and he delivered them out of their distresses.

Oh that men would praise the Lord for his goodness, and for his wonderful works to the children of men!—Psa. 107: 6, 8.

This (108th) Psalm belongs to the period we have been studying, and sets forth clearly the lessons which the whole history of this period is intended to impress on the mind.

THE MOST IMPORTANT EVENTS.—1. The great revival under Josiah, and the finding of the Book of the Law, B. C. 628–632. 2. The increasing wickedness and idolatry of Israel, in spite of all efforts for their religious life. 3. The first captivity, B. C. 604–5. 4. The second captivity, B. C. 598. 5. The third captivity, and the destruction of Jerusalem, B. C. 586. 6. The return of the exiles after 70 years' captivity, B. C. 536, 5. 7. The second temple rebuilt, 534–515. 8. The rescue of the Jews through Esther, 474. 9. Reforms under Ezra and Nehemiah, 457–433. 10. The rebuilding of the walls of Jerusalem, B. C. 444.

I. THE SAD CONDITION OF THE JEWS. (Lessons 1, 2, 3, 4). Here we note, as given in these lessons (which see), the great degeneracy of Judah. Israel had been carried away captive for the same sins, and yet Judah went on in the same course of evil. They yielded to idolatry, and this root-sin yielded fruit in many sins and crimes. In spite of warnings, in spite of prophets, in spite of a revival of religion and the new-found Word of God, the people grew worse and worse. The tree of Paradise was becoming almost a upas tree, which must be cut down before new sprouts from the old roots would bear better fruit.

II. THE REFINING AS SILVER IS REFINED (Lessons 4–7, 10, 11).

Under the sad circumstances noted above, it was necessary that God should put his people into the flames of the refining furnace, or soon there would be no people of God, and no true religion on earth.

Note the various ways in which God carried on this refining process —

1. By a great revival of religion under a devoted and religious king.
2. By a new development of religious study.
3. By warnings in the career of others, as the captivity of Israel.
4. By entreaties and persuasions of the prophets.
5. By the example of good men, as Josiah, the Rechabites, Daniel and his companions, Esther, Ezra, Nehemiah.
6. By sieges and devastating armies.
7. By utter destruction of city and temple.
8. By a long and hard captivity in a foreign land.
9. By a threatened destruction even there.

The W. C. T. U., of Evanston, Ill., held a memorial service in memory of John B. Gough. Miss Willard gave an eloquent address upon the life and character of Mr. Gough, who was her warm personal friend, and an ardent admirer of the Woman's Christian Temperance Union. In closing she remarked: "He was the perfect fruit of this century of temperance reform."

OBITUARY.

Intelligence of the deccase of Moses W. Bicknell, of Westmoreland, N. Y., has just reached me. He passed quicly to his rest on the 12th of February last. in the 89th year of his age. He was a deacon in the Baptist church at Westmoreland, where he lived for fifty years and where his remains await the resurrection of the just. He was a personal friend and active co-worker with Elder David Bernard, Elder John G. Stearns, and that noble band of Christian workers who dragged the lodge from its seclusion and made Masonry odious, after the murder of Captain Wm. Morgan in 1826. From the first he has been a constant reader of the Christian Cynosure and fearlessly advocated the principlcs of the anti lodge movement. His interest was manifested by a liberal support of the cause, and when I called on him at the time of my last labors in his neighborhood, he proposed to pay over to the National Association a portion of the money with which he had been intrusted and rcceive an annuity from the Association during his life. I accepted his proposal and the N. C. A. Board of Directors confirmed my action, receiving the money and paying Bro. Bicknell the stipulated annuity semi annually until his death. He explained to me that he wished to do this to prevent any delay or expense that might occur in settling his estate by which the N. C. A. would be delayed or suffer loss in its work.

The cause of the National Christian Association had no truer friend than Moses W. Bicknell, who was universally respected and honored by those who knew him. His hospitality was always extended to the lecturers who passed that way, and there are some of us who, should we visit that historic field again, will miss his kindly greetings and the inspiration of his quiet face. Will Bro. Curtis, or some one living near, give us more of the incidents of his last days.

J. P. STODDARD.

REV. JACKSON DUFF died at his home, near Center Ridge, Kansas, on February 9th, 1886, of pneumonia. He preached his last sermon January 31st, the day before he was taken sick. He was an earnest and efficient minister of the United Presbyterian church, in the forty-third year of his ministry and seventy-sccond year of his age. He always proved himself ready to work for the good of man, often with much self-sacrifice. He was a Kentuckian, and early the friend of the bondman; was anti-tobacco, anti-whisky, and was opposed to secret societies, not silently, but zealonsly and effectually. He was father-in-law to the sainted Barnett, so long United Presbyterian missionary to Damascus and Egypt.

AMERICAN PLATFORM.

ADOPTED AT CHICAGO, JUNE 20, 1884

Viewing with deep concern the corrupt and unsettled condition of American politics, and witnessing with alarm the fearful prevalence of caste and clannishness by which our citizens are being arrayed in hostile bands, working secretly to compass political euds, a method directly and powerfully tending to increase corruption, to destroy mutual confidence, and hasten disruption and bloodshed; and having no hope of adequate remedy for these evils from existing parties, and believing the foundation of a party based upon the fundamental principles of the Declaration of American Independence, both inevitable and indispensable:

We, therefore, a portion of the American people, believing with our fathers that we have our rights and liberties, not from men or parties, but from God; believing in the Christian marriage, and not in Mormonism; believing in the religious democracy of the New Testament, and not in the despotism of the lodge; believing, also, with our Scotch and English ancestors, that civil government, though ordained in God, is "founded in nature, not in grace," and, therefore, that all have equal civil rights; while we abhor the idea of enforcing religion or controlling conscience by human laws and penalties as calculated to make hypocrites, not Christians, and savoring of the days of priestism, the fagot and the stake, we at the same time as firmly believe that atheism and priestcraft are twins and both alike foes to human liberty and welfare. We further most firmly believe that a government without God has none but lynch power, and is destitute of all legitimate authority to maintain civil order, to swear a witness, to try a criminal, to hang a murderer, to imprison a thief; and while we consider government without God as a mere usurpation, we regard all religions and worships invented by men, and so having no higher than human origin, as mere swindling impositions and cheats. We believe in peace and in national arbitration as a means of perpetuating it; yet we as profoundly believe that the bravery and blood of our soldiers have bought us the peace which we enjoy, and we honor the memories of the dead and will be just to the claims of the living; and we take up and prolong the strain raised by the women of this country: "For God, and home, and native land," and trust that this beautiful and patriotic motto will soon be not only echoed by their voices, but sustained by their votes.

We, therefore, solemnly adopt and present the following, as containing a brief synopsis of the principles of our government, by which we intend to be governed in casting our votes. We hold:

1. That ours is a Christian and not a heathen nation, and that the God of the Christian Scriptures is the author of civil government.
2. That the Bible should be associated with books of science and literature in all our educational institutions.
3. That God requires, and man needs a Sabbath.
4. We demand the prohibition of the importation, manufacture, and sale of intoxicating drinks.
5. We hold that the charters of all secret lodges granted by our Federal and State Legislatures should be withdrawn, and their oaths prohibited by law.
6. We are opposed to putting prison labor or depreciated contract labor from foreign countries in competition with free labor to benefit manufacturers, corporations or speculators.
7. We are in favor of a revision and enforcement of the laws concerning patents and inventions; for the prevention and punishment of frauds either upon inventors or the general public.
8. We hold to and will vote for woman suffrage.
9. That the civil equality secured to all American citizens by Articles 13, 14 and 15 of our amended National Constitution should be preserved inviolate, and the same equality should be extended to Indians and Chinamen.
10. That international differences should be settled by arbitration.
11. That land and other monopolies should be discouraged.
12. That the general government should furnish the people with an ample and sound currency
13. That it should be the settled policy of the government to reduce tariffs and taxes as rapidly as the necessities of revenue and vested business interests will allow.
14. That polygamy should be immediately suppressed by law, and that the Republican party is censurable for the long neglect of its duty in respect to this evil.
15. And, finally, we demand for the American people the abolition of electoral colleges, and a direct vote for President and Vice President of the United States.

The Christian Cynosure.

EDITORS.

J. BLANCHARD. HENRY L. KELLOGG.

CHICAGO, THURSDAY, MARCH 18, 1886.

There is a pardonable pride in sending out to the readers of the Cynosure such a number as the present. Our excellent list of contributors has an addition. We have the pleasure of introducing to our readers Miss Kingsbury of Wellesley Hills, Mass., whose poem we commend to their reading. Please notice this enumeration of some of the writers in the present number. One of the best known and esteemed of the Lutheran pastors of the East; the late president of Avalon College; the leading professor in the Swedish Baptist Theological Seminary; the General Missionary of the Am. Baptist Home Missionary Society for the Southwest; the pastor of the Tabernacle Baptist church, Memphis, the evangelist for the Lumbermen of the U. S.; the president of Wheaton College, the president of the Norwegian Lutheran Synod; the president of the N. C. A. National Convention—this is enough but it does not complete the list. The [illegible] aim to be a Pole Star in Christian reform.

AT HOME.

RESUME OF THE SOUTHERN JOURNEY.—STATE AND PROSPECTS OF OUR CAUSE.

The sun is now rising in the South. A colored pastor of 600 or 700 Baptists in Richmond, Kentucky, said, "I knowed that the societies was hurtin' our churches, and I stood out till all my people was rushin' into them, and I was left out alone, and I saw I must choose one, and so I chose the Oddfellows." This is a strong-minded, well-balanced, apparently pious man, who has kept his pastorate over several hundred people above twenty years; and best of all, he seems an honest man.

At Berea, Pres. E. H. Fairchild said, "I will go into a national inter-denominational church congress, to consider the nature of the secret lodge-system, and the attitude Christians ought to hold toward it. I will sign the call, attend and speak if desired; and I will write a letter to the Interior in favor of such a congress." (What has become of that letter, Bro. Gray?)

At Berea I had a familiar lecture with the Faculty, preaching on Sabbath morning, and lecture Monday evening to a large chapel full. Brethren Fee and Brown, known to the Cynosure readers, report through their own Berea Evangelist, which does good service.

Knoxville College in Knoxville, Tenn., is under Pres. McCullough, and the United Presbyterian church. There is a good faculty of faithful men and women, and three hundred colored students. My labors here were preaching and a lecture against the lodge.

Fisk University at Nashville, a fine institution of 500 bright and intelligent students, is doing wonders. I spoke to them of the fearful havoc the lodges were making of their hopes and churches. President Cravath and lady teach New Testament culture, manners, and civilization. If, as is said, he has joined the sham Grand Army of the Republic, it must be in the hope of doing good. Prof. Steele of Memphis, has joined the same "Grand Army," enlisted after the fighting was done, but he will doubtless soon leave it, if he has not already left it. A Union regiment which should have put on and worn patches of secesh uniform would have been drummed out of camp; and a Grand Army with secrecy initiation, signs and tokens of recognition with et ceteras, is military sham in with patches of lodge livery, run by John Logan, who could not attend Hendrick's funeral because he was engaged to take Masonic degrees. These excellent brethren will do as did old Dr. Lyman Beecher, who was wheedled into a secret temperance lodge; and, when called to account for it in presbytery, arose and said, "Well, brethren, there is a back door through which I can step out of that thing.

Dr. Witherspoon of the First church (Presbyterian) of Nashville, Tenn., was the first clergyman of the "Church South" whom I met, but not the last. He gave a note of introduction to Drs. Boggs and Daniel in Memphis, and is an old style orthodox, fine-looking, courteous brother. G. W. Armstead has a prohibition paper at Nashville. The Issue is now non-partisan, supported by Democrats and Republicans. It is an able paper, growing rapidly. Of course it must shed its feathers when it comes to the serious work of fining and imprisoning the Masons and Odd-fellows who run distilleries, breweries and saloons. The dark-lantern gentry are now filling Tennessee with secret temperance lodges. These, when it comes to the rub, will obey the secret signs and grips as they are sworn or pledged to do. Half of the Good Templars in New York State, and all of them in Washington, D. C., went against St. John.

Countee and Brinkley are Baptists, of whom there are EIGHT HUNDRED THOUSAND in the South. They have been through the degrees of half a dozen or more lodges, and are now among the first to leap out of the secret enclosures. The power of their counter-movement is attested by thirty-one bullets through Countee's house, another through his chin, and another between the skin and skull on the back of his head. Some cautious men blamed Countee as rash and indiscreet; and he does need the prayers and counsel of such men as Profs. Steele and Woodsmall. But the policy of Obadiah never would have called fire from heaven as Elijah did, or turned the Israelites from their whoredoms and false altars, or raised up the "altar of the Lord which was broken down." (1. Kings chap. 18.) It is to be hoped that Countee will not despise counsel; but at the same time that he will OBEY God. Prof. Steele communes with Masons in Bro. Imes' church; and Prof. Woodsmall is the theological teacher of pastors whose churches are crawling with lodgites. We hope that these cautious brethren will do as Dr. Bishop of Miami University exhorted Drs. Stowe, Beecher, and Allen to do, when they complained that the Abolitionists lacked wisdom. The old President Bishop rose in presbytery, and in his broad, honest Scotch said, "If we caunt have grace to braest the storrm with our Abolition braethren, let us at least have grace to stand at their backs."

When Countee's house was riddled with bullets he had not revealed one of the lodge secrets! but only argued against the lodge as hurtful to society and the church. This does not look like rashness or indiscretion. The best judgment of the Cynosure is that Countee is right and must be sustained.

All over the South the colored pastors followed their flocks into the secret orders in ignorance of their nature. Now they know their nature, and their flocks will follow their pastors out.

THE SOUTHERN PEOPLE.

One is amazed at them. Perhaps they have the faults of a governing class; but Dr. Stratton of Natchez, Dr. H. M. Smith of the Southwestern Presbyterian, New Orleans, and other old-style Presbyterians of the Church South, are men who dare to think and to say what they think.

I could not learn of one pastor of the Church South who is sneak enough to belong to a secret lodge, and take secret advantages of his neighbors. I traveled with three of the Guerrilla "Morgan thieves" as they were called, and dined with the sister of a pirate who went with Semmes on the "Alabama," and her husband a Confederate soldier. They were all gentlemen in comparison with such clergymen as Bishop Weaver and Dr. Warner of the United Brethren church. They were misled, thought they were right, and fought for it. Now when I asked a man who was with Morgan when he was shot at Greenville, Tennessee: "What do you think now of that whole matter?" he said, "I think it was a consummate folly, which I should never have been in had I understood the facts." J. B.

STATE OF THE U. B. CHURCH.

This is bad, and is likely to be worse. As when Christ set his face to go to Jerusalem, and put the whole question upon issue whether he or Satan should have the worship of our globe, his true-hearted followers got into the devil's sieve and were "sifted as wheat" till nothing but chaff and bran seemed left, so is it now with the Brethren church. Dr. Lewis Davis comes nearest obeying Christ, by being "wise as a serpent and harmless as a dove," of any man living, perhaps; but he only stands by faith, while Shuey, Hott, the once faithful Drurys, and a host of others are where the Apostles were on the terrible night of the betrayal, when the odds against Christ were so fearful that "they all forsook him and fled"—Apostles though they were.

But let us open and state the case of that once beautiful and beloved church:

Its founder, Otterbein, said in his vestry, a hundred years ago—nearly half a century before the Anti-masonic excitement—when one asked him about Masonry: "A Freemason cannot be a Christian." In 1833 its conference resolved: "Freemasonry, in every sense of the word, shall be totally discountenanced, and no way tolerated in our society." This was law. In 1841 the constitution of the church was adopted, after near half a century's experience to fix their belief in the teachings of God's Word lower than all local legislation. This constitution says: "There shall be no connection with secret combinations." And for twenty years, till 1861, when our war had "suspended all the rules of moral obligation" and temporarily "repealed all the virtues," that constitution was enforced and obeyed. A few men like Dr. Warner had secretly joined secret lodges; and when questioned, answered as Warner did to Bishop Edwards, pretending to have withdrawn.

But at the close of the war, when thousands of our boys had been drawn into lodges by wretches who followed our armies to form lodges as buzzards hover around battlefields—not to share in the action, but to secure prey; when the hopes of favors from rebels had debauched our "boys in blue" and wrung consent from weeping mothers, so that our troops became Masons and carried Masonry back North; and when the lodge had spawned a thousand and one secret "orders," and made secrecy popular, then it began to lift up its head in the church of Otterbein, Bœhm, Newcomer and Geeting, who loathed lodgery as they loathed its Grand Master, the devil.

At its first skirmish in Lebanon, Pa., some quarter century ago, the indignant General Conference voted it DOWN THREE TO ONE; while the small minority all claimed to be opposed to secret societies!

"On what authority and show of truth
Can cunning sin cover itself withal!"

Disappointed, crushed at Lebanon, the snake crawled elsewhere. A few shameless, debauched consciences got up conventions in weak localities, till they ventured to start a paper, The Tribune, in Harrisburg, where a bold nullification meeting was held. The General Conference was defied and its laws spit upon. A faithful editor of The Telescope was denounced because he censured open, blatant nullification; and, like rebels with guns in battery to fight for slavery, they complained, like injured innocence, that they were not treated fairly! There is but one Scripture which applies to such men. It was spoken by a prophet against the men who were destroying and did destroy the Hebrew commonwealth by introducing false altars, so that courts did not know what to swear witnesses by, and religion and government both went down. The indignant, weeping prophet of God exclaimed, "Thou hast a whore's forehead!" These nullifiers, who defied law and in one instance trampled the Telescope on the floor, complained that the church organ was unfair and partial, started a rebel paper in Harrisburg, and Bishop Weaver patronized it!

The lodge spread like cholera, and in 1878 a cunning, capable, well contrived convention was got together at Dayton. Shuey and his friends stood aghast! They saw God's battalions giving way. They saw Masonry in the Presbyterian, Episcopal, Methodist, Baptist, and Congregational churches, undisturbed and unquestioned, and, with a folly born of cowardice and cunning, they thought the Brethren church should oppose Masonry and embrace its whelps—that the true policy would be to frame a law against secret organizations which would at once please Masons and satisfy Anti-masons. The "god of this world," by visions of gain and popularity, "blinded the minds" of good men as the same devil sought to blind the mind of Christ by a vision of "the kingdoms of the world and the glory of them." Still they stood aloof from the convention of '78. Bro. Shuey did not, as agent even, print the minutes of that convention, which was engineered by Warner and his company, with Weaver and his company smiling and smirking behind them!

McKee was put forward as the monkeys did the cat. He seems to have been honest and able, but ignorant. As good churches crippled and quailed and sunk before the rising and spreading power of slavery forty years ago in the back parts of the Carolinas, Tennessee and Kentucky, so McKee saw the U. B. churches stove in by the dragon of the lodge. Still McKee did not go with the trimmers, who thought the point of wisdom would be for the church to hold good principles in such a way as not to offend bad men. But in his long and able speech he came out flat-footed for a repeal of the secrecy law; and that convention of 1878 meeting in Dayton printed and endorsed McKee's speech.

McKee probably was not a Mason, as Warner was. He seems not to have known that Masonry was a Christless religion. His speech compares it to a political party. There seems to be an air of honesty and ability throughout his speech. Had he known that Masonic books all claim the old mysteries which Paul forbids to fellowship (Eph. 5: 11) to be "eminently Masonic institutions;" that the same books claim that Masonry regenerates the soul and fits man for heaven, he never could have made that honest, earnest speech which then even Shuey would not print. They got a private printer to do the job. But now Agent Shuey is doing much worse than to have printed that bold, bad pamphlet.

Soon after the rebel Tribune started at Harrisburg, the writer went to the office and asked the father of the publisher "what the Tribune was for?" He answered that it was not in favor of secret societies, but only to secure the interests of the Eastern conference, which were neglected by the men at Dayton. But now, in 1878, McKee and the convention went for a repeal of the law against secrecy; and the convention and the Tribune men in it voted, and printed the vote, to recommend moving the paper to Dayton. Thus, in the words of Robert J. Breckenridge on another matter, the Tribune was founded in "simple lying!" It was not to defend the Eastern lodges by an Eastern location, and it was to bring in the lodge.

WHAT NOW TO DO.

1. Do not secede. Secession means to cast out the Shuey men from your communion. But, though God commands us to disfellowship false worshipers (Eph. 5: 11), he does not command to disfellowship those who, through blindness, do not disfellowship them, which is merely neglecting discipline.

2. Do not hate sinners. Mr. Shuey seems not to know that Warner is a Mason. He even pretends not to know that there are Odd-fellows in the Summit Street U. B. church, Dayton; and when urged to go with the writer and see the pastor of that church, and find out about it and relieve grieved brethren there, he cried, "No, I don't belong to that church." A moment before he had ridiculed Congregational churches as "local option" churches; he now took local option ground himself and refused to visit that church, which is in trouble, because he did not "belong to it;" whereas he does belong to it by the New Testament and the rule of the Brethren church. And he (Bro. Shuey) censured the Cynosure sharply, and its editor, because we assailed the U. B. church for admitting lodgery; but said Dr. Warner was a gentleman and Christian, though Warner admitted to Bishop Edwards and others that he had joined the lodge which is condemned by the constitution and the laws of his church.

Still we do not hate Bro. Shuey. Few men have handled money as long and as much as he has without losing or suffering in their standing for financial integrity. We are sorry for his treatment of Christ, using the funds of his church to encourage the worship of his dark rival; but we must not hate the Apostle Peter for his treatment of Christ that night, or his cringing and dodging about eating with Gentile Christians even, after Christ restored him to favor.

3. Do not be discouraged or faint in your minds. The whole land will soon reel and rock with the surgings of the lodge, as it did with those of slavery. Garfield had only a little more than 3,000 votes over Hancock, and Cleveland only some 70,000 over Blaine. The colored people have more than a million voters, and the Brethren church stood their friend in their great agony and need. Two theological seminaries have opened their halls to this question, and others will. In Washington, D. C., but few days since, a great meeting of colored people gave a vote of thanks for an address on this subject to them, though most of them were members of secret lodges.

Let the students of the Union Biblical Seminary of Dayton ask their Faculty leave to form a monthly prayer meeting for prayer, concerted action, and inquiry on this national, world-moving question. Let ten or twelve of those students canvass Dayton for The Conservator. There are a thousand colored men and women in Dayton who would take that paper if they knew about it. The monthly concerts of prayer broke down slavery. Prayer, effectual and fervent, will break down the lodge, and restore the atonement of Christ, which the lodges have crowded out of men's minds. None pretend that the lodges are of God's planting, and a Christ's words can not pass away; these lodges shall be rooted up. (Matt. 15: 13.)

THE WAR AGAINST LABOR.

The reports of strikes, lockouts, boycotts, etc., have not been growing less during the week past. A Philadelphia tool factory has joined the Springfield, Ohio, iron works and the Toronto street railway in discharging all men sworn to labor lodges. On the other hand from Decatur, Ill., comes word that the Knights of Labor are forming a political party. A boycott it is understood has been ordered against the Maxwell Bros., box-makers, and the McCormick Reaper works of this city, and it has been raised from the boot and shoe companies on an agreement that they will make no more prison contracts. This seems to be cheaply made by the companies, as these contracts were made only in self defense, and have not always proved so profitable as is supposed.

The real friends of labor must regret the means taken by the leaders of these strikers to secure their ends. Public sympathy is naturally against the injustice of employers. But when the plug-hat labor agitators bind the workingman and his wife and children by false but fearful oaths, they may and do compel them to acts of greatest wrong. They demand the discharge of men outside their lodge ring, who are so for sake of conscience or the instructions of their church. They stop the trains and the movement of produce, and it is the laboring class all along the line that suffers. They make a coal famine. The poor have to pay for it. The strike and the boycott are, in the end, one class of workingmen seeking to force an advantage for which another class must suffer. A monopoly of a Knights of Labor lodge or a trade union is as bad as a monopoly of capitalists.

Why should not the rights of labor be removed by open and lawful agitation, like that which is carrying the temperance cause on to victory. Is it not easier to arouse the conscience of the churches, and to influence the voters, than to continue this blind fury, which like Samson attempts to shatter the pillars of society and tumble its fabric into fatal ruin. The fact that this is not so is proof that the working man is fighting under false leaders.

—Bro. C. F. Hawley writes of the opening of his work in Indiana hopefully. His letter we have been reluctantly compelled to lay aside for a week. He has evidently been favorably impressed with Iowa and will be happy to return to that State. We hope the brethren there will reciprocate the sentiment heartily by way of their treasurer.

—The lodge managed with a high hand at Birmingham, Iowa, after the affray noticed in our last. The evidence was clear that Sutton the lodgite struck the first blow, but the man whom he struck and afterward assaulted with a knife was the only one fined—$50 and cost. The other Anti-masons were released. But so pronounced was the public indignation that the lodge got up another case and arrested the stabber, along with Dr. W. P. Norris, who was so fearfully cut, and two other Anti-masons. The justice fined the first $10; released one of the others and fined Dr. Norris and his other comrade $15 each. It is time Iowa was something more than a prohibition State.

—Prof. Kephart's defense of the United Brethren may have little to interest our readers, but it concerns the whole lodge question in the denomination, though avoiding the main issue to discuss technicalities. Bishop Wright has an able article in a late Telescope reviewing the same ground on which a legal basis is sought for the Commission. But space forbids the reprinting of his candid, dignified statement of the case. We believe Prof. Kephart's convictions are true on the question of secret societies in the church, but none the less we believe him to be mistaken if he thinks the present movement will separate their pernicious influence from it.

—The Lutheran pastors of Minneapolis, like the Norwegian pastors of this city, are taking up the secret society question in their weekly meeting. They ask for information respecting the Knights of Labor. A Rockford, Ill., mechanic intimates in a letter that the oaths of this order are blasphemous, and believes it would be a blessing to community if they were exposed.

—The United Presbyterian of Pittsburg says of the death of Prof. J. R. W. Sloane: "He was among the foremost men of all the churches in Christian character, in ripened scholarship, in mental discipline and force, in ministerial and professorial power. He was a man, too, who had the courage of his convictions, and made himself felt in opposing prevailing evils and supporting all the great reform movements of the times. He has left a vacancy in his church and in the religious community here which it will be difficult to fill."

WASHINGTON LETTER.

Passage of the Educational Bill.—Fred Douglass's Successor.—Blaine's American League Revived.—A Step toward Universal Peace.—The Baltimore M. E. Conference.—Sabbath Desecration.—Albert Pike's Synagogue.—The W. C. T. U. Work.—The Labor Lodges and the struggle back of them.

Dear Cynosure:—The passage by the Senate of the Blair Education Bill by the decided vote of thirty to eleven, was better than was expected. Several recent amendments have materially strengthened it, and it is hoped that it will pass the House, but the prospect is not reassuring. There is a strenuous opposition from some Southern members and by the papers of this District, mainly, because it is thought to be undemocratic and unconstitutional. It would be difficult to say why it is more so than the vast appropriations for river and harbor improvement that have been made from time to time. In addition to the $77,000,000 to be used in eight years by the States in proportion to the number of illiterate persons, it appropriates $2,000,000 for school houses. All who have traveled through the South have observed the infrequent and miserable school houses, especially among the colored people, and in the rural districts. No help could be more timely or welcome to the colored people.

The appointment of Mr. Mathews, a colored Democrat and personal friend of Mr. Cleveland, as Recorder of Deeds, vice Frederick Douglass, resigned, is not generally liked in this city. Of course colorphobia has something to do with this dissatisfaction, and besides there is the desire that all District offices shall be given to citizens of the District. Mr. Douglass is pleased with the appointment. So are the colored people generally, and surely, if Mr. Cleveland makes no greater mistake he will have the approval of the great mass of the people.

The proposal of Senator Frye to have a Constitutional Congress which shall represent all the States of North and South America is a revival of the proposition of Mr. Blaine when Secretary of State. Though not a profound admirer of that gentleman, I most heartily approve of this proposition as tending to international peace and the promotion of American commerce. It should not be forgotten that the main object of commerce is the interchange of the commodities of different climes, and that its natural paths are across the parallels of latitude. Our trade with the South American States is far less than theirs with the countries of Europe. They produce such commodities as we cannot, and they greatly need our productions in exchange. What could be more reasonable than that such interchange should be free? It would be a vast step towards a peace congress for the world, if the Western Continent could be united in a grand pacific alliance.

The Baltimore Conference of the M. E. church, now in session in this city is one of the largest and oldest in that denomination. I listened with great pleasure to an able sermon by Bishop Nide, the presiding officer. His text was 1 Peter 2: 14: "Unto you which believe he is precious"—the same that Mark Master Masons misquote and pervert. As there were a good many Masons present, I was glad to have the true instead of the perverted meaning brought out. I was glad, too, that one minister from Norfolk, Va., came and asked for Anti-masonic tracts, inquiring especially for "Masonic Chastity." He was well supplied, and I think we shall hear from him again.

Last Sabbath the colored Odd-fellows imitated their white brethren by using the Lord's day to celebrate the anniversary of their order, and make a display of their regalia. They found several ministers who took part in the desecration, among them a Congregational pastor.

On the 15th inst. the Scottish Rite Masons are to dedicate their new temple on G street between 10th and 11th—the fourth Masonic temple in this city. Still it is cheering to know that even here the Masonic institution is losing its hold on the popular mind, and the discussion of its character is becoming more and more general.

At no previous session of Congress has the subject of temperance been so forced upon their attention. This has been mainly the work of the W. C. T. U. Among the other distinguished speakers who are to address the House committee is the veteran Neal Dow. Closely allied to this reform and equally the work of the W. C. T. U. is the effort that is being made for the promotion of Social Purity. Numerous petitions have been presented and bills have been introduced into both the Senate and House increasing the penalties for the crime of rape and raising the "age of consent" to eighteen years. The enforcement of such a law in this District would be greatly promotive of public morals. Multitudes of young girls are lured into dens of iniquity and ruined. The discussion of this matter in England, with all its drawbacks, did much to purify the moral atmosphere of London. A similar investigation would doubtless show that American Congressmen are not better than members of Parliament.

The tyranny of the Knights of Labor is beginning not only to be felt, but made the subject of earnest protest by the firms they have boycotted. They are just opening their eyes to the fact that Congress does not make all the laws for this District, but that there is another government that presumes to control all persons who are either employers or employes. It was not until the first shots were fired at Sumter that the people were fairly awakened to the arrogance and wickedness of the slave power. It will be when the secret lodge system shall seek the overthrow of a government by the people, and for the people, and substitute a secret hierarchy, that they will in like manner rise in their might and decree the suppression of all secret orders. There are indications all over the country that this conflict is impending and will soon be upon us. May God prepare us to meet it.

A PILGRIM SONG.

Our God is faithful! Time moves on, to find us
Still singing of the mercies left behind us—
Still taking, as we sing, of some fresh store,
And looking trustfully for those before.

How can we doubt, with memories to cheer us!
How can we sorrow, with His love so near us!
How can we faint, while He has strength to give,
And we, by faith, his proffered grace receive!

Like as a father, praying, he leads us,
And daily with some heavenly morsel feeds us;
Sees to our ailings, hushes our alarms,
And bears us, weary, in His loving arms.

He who has led thus far will never leave us,
Until He at His heavenly home receive us.
There we shall see His face, and there adore,
And cast our harps to praise Him evermore.

A few more stages, on our journey going,
And we shall reach where Jordan's stream is flowing;
Our faith for God will cleave its swelling tide,
And land us safely on the other side.

There Ebenezers shall be lost in joy forever,
Where sorrow, sin, and want can never enter;
Where, in a day that knows no coming night,
We'll bless the faithfulness that kept us right.

THE MARVELOUS PSALMS.

Is there in the modern world, in spite of the Christian teaching of near two thousand years, anything to compare in depth, and freshness, and reality of religious feeling with the religious feeling of the Psalms? Well, we are disposed to think that there is not. But we do not think that it is so staggering a thought as it at first appears, and just for this reason that in the education of the human race there have been so many strands of new purpose introduced since the age of the Psalmists, that it is hardly possible to conceive that the pure leaven of religious feeling, as it presents itself where there is no distracting conflict between it and a multitude of other obligations and ties, should have leavened as yet the whole lump of humanity such as in this century we find it. The mere intellectual problems with which the world has been occupied since the religious education of the heart was presented in its completest form, have been distracting enough, for it is difficult to estimate the magnitude of the claims they have made on the attention of men, and the magnitude of the interests they have added to the secular life of men. The development of science and philosophy alone in the last two hundred years will undoubtedly account for a great diversion of energy from the religious life to the life of the intellect: and no one can deny that the development of science and philosophy is a part of the divine purpose for man, not less truly, though in a much more subordinate sense, than the development of his religious life. Again, the development of science is as nothing compared with the development of the passion of pity for man as man, which is a very different thing indeed from the pity for man as a creature of God, and in our own day we see that this last growth has been the cause of a much more temporary but a much more serious diversion of energy from the religious life, than even the rapid growth of intellectual and physical science.

We say that the development of the passion of pity for man as man, has caused a much more temporary, though a much more serious, diversion of energy from the field of the invisible to the field of the visible universe, than the abnormal growth of man's intellectual life, for while the latter at present shows no signs of leading us directly back to God, the former—the immense growth of the passion of pity for man as man—does, we think, show very definite signs that it will break down all the natural barriers and constitutional limits under the restraints of which alone the nature of man can thrive, unless it brings us back—as it will bring us back—to the much deeper and truer and wiser pity which is felt for man as the object of God's love. The great series of electric storms through which Europe has been passing ever since the occurrence of that wonderful outbreak of feeling for "liberty, fraternity, and equality," which we call the French Revolution, have to our minds proved how easy it is for the passion of pity to overreach itself, and to end in something like the fiercer cruelty of the present Nihilist movement. It is the same with milder outbreaks of the same feeling when they ignore the sobering influence of religion. They all appear to end in excitements which overstrain the heart of man, and result in consequences the very opposite of those intended when the great wave of feeling was first set in motion. But who can wonder that with so much new experience of all kinds—intellectual, moral, sympathetic,—to be assimilated, the religious life of man should not now be as fresh and vivid as it was at the the time when almost the sole object of the divine training was the implanting of that religious life? Meanwhile, the Book of Psalms remains to show us the centre from which our spiritual life was first developed, and the centre to which it must return, after it has conquered all these distracting influences of intellect and emotion, and reduced them to acknowledge its humbling and sobering and spiritualizing sway.—The Spectator, (London.)

THE PRIMARY PLACE OF FAITH.

Without faith, no religious fabric which it is attempted to build can be secure or permanent, whether that fabric be rearing in an individual soul or in a nation. Not beginning in faith, it is not religion; nor will it endure or sustain the pressure of calamity and temptation, any more than an arch will hold without a key-stone.

Religious forms, ritualisms, resolutions, penances, morality, and all natural goodness, too, are to the structure of religion in a man's heart, or in the mind of a people, its mere scaffolding, which taken away, the arch falls, unless it has been buttressed and keystoned with faith.

Or, to change the figure, let me say that the true method of religious discipline, and of the soul's education for eternity, is symbolized in the building of an anthracite fire upon an iron grate. Unless you begin right with kindling matter, like substantial articles of faith at the bottom, and put the hard coal over all, and then apply your fire, you will try in vain to ignite the heap. You may put wood, hay, stubble in any quantity at the top, and then apply the blower, and there will be noise enough and a transient heat; but the coal will not kindle until you remove all those black pieces of unpromising mineral and dispose the combustibles in their right place, and then put in again the stony material which you wish to inflame. Till you do this, it will not develop for you its latent heat or light, but the cold, unsightly stones will be naught but cold stones still.

Just so in religion: if you will have a character from which shall radiate the heat and emanate the blessed light of holiness; if you will have those dark, stony materials of your nature converted into the fuel of holy love; if you will have the clinker and slag of depravity consumed to ashes, the altar-fire in your soul must begin with faith. Faith in the infinite wisdom and goodness of God, our Father; faith in the atoning blood and intercession of the Lord Jesus Christ; faith in the blessed Saviour as your soul's only wisdom, righteousness, sanctification, and redemption; faith in the presence and power of the indwelling Spirit to create you anew in Christ Jesus unto righteousness and true holiness, must begin that funeral pile of your sins from which in due time your soul shall issue forth, regenerated and disenthralled, to burn and shine like a seraph in the kingdom of God forever. Not in the postulate of the Epistle to the Hebrews merely, but in the very nature of things, WITHOUT FAITH IT IS IMPOSSIBLE TO PLEASE GOD.—H. T. Cheever's Correspondencies of Faith.

HOW AN INFIDEL LEARNED TO BELIEVE.

One evening the evangelists (at the Adelphi Theatre, Chicago,) found an infidel among the inquirers, who, when addressed on the subject of personal salvation, said: "I don't believe in your God; I'm an infidel. I have denounced the churches and Christianity for several years; but, sir, I have been here twice, and these testimonies bother me. I never heard anything like it before. I am persuaded that these men are talking about a reality." And then the big tears began to chase each other down his cheeks.

He was asked if he would not like to have what these men were talking about. "Yes," said he; "but I don't believe the Bible—I can't believe it."

"Never mind about the Bible," said the brother; "just kneel down here and ask God to save you."

They knelt down together, and he began to pray—oh, such a prayer! After a few words of counsel the evangelist left him.

On the following evening, among the first to testify was this man. Jumping to his feet, he exclaimed: "Friends! last night I came here an infidel. I was one for twenty years or more. I've been all around the globe and preached against the churches and Christianity. But when I came here I heard men tell of what they were, and how they were saved from lives of sin and wretchedness; and I said as I listened, "Surely these men are speaking about a reality. I was persuaded to pray; and oh! I can't describe the peace and joy that fill my poor heart. I didn't believe the Bible when I came in here last evening; but now I believe every word of it! What a change has been wrought in me! I'm a new man! And now, as I leave the city in a day or two, I request you all to pray for me, that I may let my light shine."—Chicago Mission Worker.

WAITING TO GROW.

Little white snowdrop, just waking up,
Violet, daisy, and sweet buttercup:
Think of the flowers that are under the snow,
Waiting to grow!

And think what hosts of queer little seeds,
Of flowers and mosses, of ferns and of weeds,
Are under the leaves and under the snow,
Waiting to grow!

Think of the roots getting ready to sprout,
Reaching their slender, brown fingers about
Under the ice and the leaves and the snow
Waiting to grow!

Only a month or a few weeks more
Will they have to wait behind that door,
Listen and watch and wait below;
Waiting to grow!

Nothing so small and hidden so well
That God will not find it, and presently tell
His sun where to shine and his rain where to go,
Helping them grow!

A LION FOILED.

"Did you ever see a lion in its native wild state?" I asked a gentleman from South Africa who was traveling in this country. He was a descendant of the early Dutch settlers.

The eagerness with which he asked questions in regard to the management, even to the smallest details, of our educational and reformatory institutions and our large manufactories, was only matched by his willingness to answer questions about his own country.

"Oh, yes," he said, "although the lion flees before the march of civilization, and one must go a long distance from Cape Town before he reaches the wild districts where the king of beasts has his haunts. When I was a lad, a brother of my father founded a settlement on a fertile plateau far up in the country, my father investing a considerable sum in stock to be placed under his care.

"In a short time my uncle sent us word that the lions were troubling the cattle, and there was a fine opportunity for his young relatives to distinguish themselves as huntsmen.

"Two of my cousins and my oldest brother at once determined to go, and after much persuasion my father gave me leave to accompany them.

"'We supposed there were no lions in the vicinity,' said my uncle on our arrival, 'but it seems they infest a wild, unexplored river valley to the northward; and probably they think our flocks and herds were sent to the table-lands for their especial benefit.'

"'The Adam and Eve of all the lions are there, I am sure, young sirs,' said Peter, a curious genius, who had charge of the stock. 'Two or three times I have had glimpses of them, and their roaring at nightfall is enough to loosen your teeth.'

"While we were laughing at this, one of the young herdsmen rushed in, saying:

"'The milk-white heifer has gone astray, and although we beat the bush until dark, we found her not. The rest of the animals are safe in the fold.'

"'She will make a tender supper for some hungry lion,' said my uncle. 'It is a pity, for she was a rare little creature, as white as milk.'

"'Surely,' said Peter, 'the lions can't catch 'Milk-white' without a run for it. She knows the way home, and she is as fleet as a deer. Wait you here until I whistle. Then come you all with your rifles.'

"It was ten minutes, perhaps, before the signal sounded beneath the windows, and going out, we saw Peter with an immense snow-white bag stuffed with straw upon his head.

"'Follow me,' he said, and he walked swiftly away in the bright moonlight, up a narrow foot-path, we following silently in Indian file.

"It might have been twenty minutes before our guide paused at the summit of a high bluff and threw down his burden.

"Stretching himself upon the ground, he looked over the jutting edge of rock, and we followed his example. Far below us we caught glimpses of a thread-like stream among the bushes.

"'The cow-path to the farm-house follows that stream,' explained Peter. 'Below here a few yards it makes an abrupt turn, around the point of this bluff. 'Milkwhite' knew the way well. Hark!'

"We had heard nothing, but Peter said, excitedly:

"'That low of fright was from the heifer. The lion is in pursuit of her, I have no doubt. A lion will sometimes pursue an animal for a long distance, and although the animal may be the more swift-footed, the lion will conquer in the end by his persistency and greater powers of endurance. There! there! did you not hear them?'

"There was no mistaking the distressed loo-o-o, ending almost like a moan of anguish. Soon we heard her rapid, even hoof-falls and a rushing sound as she made her way through the underbrush.

" 'Look sharp! we shall see her now,' said Peter, and just then a stream of white, like a phantom, shot through the moonlight beneath us, and was lost at the turn of the path.

"Quicker than thought, Peter hurled the big white bag over the precipice. It bounded along, and before it ceased rolling a huge lion, intent upon its prey, appeared, crouched, and sprang upon the bag as a cat pounces upon a mouse.

" 'Follow me!' cried Peter. My brothers obeyed. I leaned, spell-bound, over the cliff.

"For an instant the lion clung to the white bag, lashing its sides with its long tail in triumph; then it let go its hold, drew back, and looked at the bag of hay in the most abject, crestfallen manner conceivable; then, turning back slowly, step by step, he retraced the way to the point from which the spring had been made. Then came the simultaneous crack of three rifles.

"The huge beast threw up his head, with an air of complete surprise, and then fell dead, pierced by every one of the leaden messengers.

"My uncle came forward from the shadow of a rock, where he had been standing unobserved, and together we went down the bluff.

"The monster was of a beautiful pale yellow color, and measured full twelve feet from the tip of his nose to the tuft of his tail.

" 'This is Adam,' said Peter; 'his mane is gray in places, and one of his teeth is broken off.'

" 'He is old, no doubt,' said my uncle; 'nevertheless, he would have carried 'Milkwhite' home to Eve as easily as a cat would carry a mouse!'

" 'I knew if I could make him spring upon the bag,' said Peter, 'that he would pursue the heifer no farther. If a lion misses his prey, he is always so filled with chagrin that he gives up the chase.'

" 'If lions believe in fairies,' said I, from my perch astride the neck of the huge beast, 'he must have thought 'Milkwhite's' fairy godmother had risen up out of the bushes and turned her into a bag of fodder.'

"My uncle laughed. 'Everybody must learn their own lessons from Adam's fall,' he said."—Christian Standard.

A QUEER GENOESE FASHION.

We soon pass an immense house which was once a palace, but is now used for other purposes. Looking up, we see that one of the great windows in the second story is open, and a lady is sitting at it. She is dressed in very bright, though somewhat old-fashioned, attire. Flowers and vines cluster inside the window, and there is a hanging cage with a bird. As we stop and look at her, the lady does not move, and in a few minutes we perceive that the window, the lady, the open shutters, the sash, the flowers, and the cage are all painted on the wall in a space where you would naturally expect to find a window. This used to be a favorite way of decorating houses in Italy, and in Genoa we shall frequently see these painted windows—some closed and some partly open, some with one person looking out, some with two, and some with none. The lady at this window has sat and looked out on the street for hundreds of years. Under her window, into the great entrance of the palace, used to pass nobles and princes. Now there are shops in the lower part of the palace, and you can have your shoes mended by a cobbler in the courtyard.—From "Personally Conducted," by Frank R. Stockton.

THE MEN WHO SUCCEED.—Says the Manufacturers' Gazette: "The young men who receive promotion are the men who do not drink on the sly. They are not the men who are always at the front whenever there is any strike, nor are they the men who watch for the clock to strike twelve and leave their picks hanging in the air. They are not the men who growl if they are required to attend to some duty a few minutes after the whistle has sounded. They are the men, usually, who pay the closest attention to the details of their business, who act as though they were trying to work for their employer's interest instead of to beat him at every crook and turn. They are the men who give the closest attention to every practical detail, and who look continually to see whether they can do any better or not. This class of men are never out of a job. They are scarce. They never strike, they never loaf, and they do not ask for their pay two or three weeks before pay-day."

TEMPERANCE.

BEWARE OF THE SERPENT.

A FRIENDLY COUNSEL TO THE TEMPTED.

BY PASTOR J. F. AVERY.

The foolish habit of "standing treat" is responsible for much of the evil wrought by intemperance; and we hope every reader will take this hint as a word in season. It is an evidenced fact that drinking intoxicants produces a species of degeneration of all the organs, a deceptive fleshiness, which, with a diminished circulation and irregularity of both liver and kidneys, renders the drinker liable at any time, by a slight irritating cause, to become a victim and prey for acute disease and death. Don't ruin your own health by drinking at the whim and wish of another. Drink when thirsty, and then what is safe and wholesome. If already a victim and slave to the habitual use of intoxicants, strike for liberty. Remember the morning dram which tones and gives you nerve after yesterday's excess is a delusion and snare—a fiber of the invisible cord of sin which is binding thee for the place of eternal thirst. Watch and pray. Ask God, for he can and will give thee deliverance from the accursed influence and bewitchery of strong drink. Now is the time to escape for thy life. Now, by the grace of God, say:

"I sign the pledge to abstain from all evil habits and the use of intoxicants. Witness my signature, ..."

SAM JONES ON WHISKY.

The liquor traffic ought to be made so odious that nobody but an infernal scoundrel will sell it, and nobody but an infernal fool will drink it. Separate these liquor-dealers from their liquor, and they will be all right. The church that will house a man that sells whisky is a detestable fraud. The church that will house a man who rents a house to sell liquor is a hateful hypocrite. Some of these churches here in Atlanta are doing just that thing. If there is a man or woman in this vast audience who never had a relative or loved one hurt or ruined by whisky, I want him or her to stand up right now. You have all had a brother, or a son, or a father, or a son-in-law ruined by whisky. My goodness! these sons-in-law! I'd rather have a boa-constrictor around my neck than to have a drunken son-in-law. The devil can't do any worse than that. Some of you old hypocrites that are dilly-dallying with the whisky question are going to get caught just that way. The devil is going to slip up on you with a drunken son-in-law, and I'll bet he will make you a Prohibitionist with a vengeance. I look around your city and see the bar-rooms as thick as the stars in the heavens. Each one of the three hundred bars in Atlanta represents, at least, ten confirmed drunkards. Three thousand men in Atlanta, across the line, are gone to ruin! You can stop it if you want to. There are church members enough in this town to turn out any day and vote liquor out of it. You are afraid to do it. You will let some barkeeper with an old, rusty pistol cuss and rare around the polls and scare you home. You don't want to have a fuss. Well, I'll tell you every good man dreads a fuss, but he don't fear anything that walks on the earth. God despises a coward. I had rather die at the mouth of a cannon doing my duty than to run away from it because I was afraid. God intrusts all the noble causes on this earth to men who are game.—Independent.

WHISKY UNDERFOOT.

Many years ago, before the days of western railroads, turnpikes and bridges, a Governor of Ohio was traveling in company with several other gentlemen on horseback. They approached a large stream that appeared formidable, but relying upon the swimming qualities of their horses, after some consultation they ventured in. The water became deeper and the current more rapid as they advanced, but with great difficulty they gained the opposite bank.

Alighting to hold a conference over their perilous adventure and deplorably wet condition, one of the company drew from his dripping saddlebags a small bottle of old Bourbon, remarking that, as a precautionary measure, it might be well to take a small drink.

The bottle was then passed around, but when the Governor's turn came, he poured his portion into the tops of his boots, assigning as a reason that it had been his motto through life to keep that enemy under foot.

The sequel proved that he alone escaped the evil results of the exposure.

WHY HIGH LICENSE IS OBJECTIONABLE.

The Inter Ocean advocates high license. It claims that the Illinois law has reduced the number of saloons in that State from 13,000 to 9,000, while it has increased the revenues of the State from $200,000 to $1,500,000. This it claims is a good record, one that should satisfy the temperance people; but Helen M. Gougar takes a different view of this matter. In a letter to that journal she says:

"By the figures given there is an increased revenue of $1,300,000, which, it is affirmed, 'makes the evil bear a large portion of the expense.' Who pays this extra revenue? The advocate of high license will answer: 'The saloon-keeper.' Where does he get this amount of money? Surely he will not remain in business unless he can make this revenue out of his business. The men who drink at his counter pay this revenue, not the saloon-keeper. Who are these men? Very largely the working classes. Who suffers most from the payment of this 'extra revenue?' The women and children, the homes of the men who hand this revenue, 10 cents at a time, over the counters of the saloons. This extra $1,300,000 revenue represents so many hungry, cold children, so many little bare-legged, barefooted babies in 'High License Illinois.' It is a poor law and a poor government that cannot protect its women and children better than the above statement shows that the High License law is doing after several months' trial. If this 'extra revenue' went back into the homes of those who do the drinking it might appeal to the common sense of those who claim this to be 'blood-money.' "

This is Gospel truth. There is no way to cure the evils of the liquor traffic except by abolishing it altogether. In other words the dog's tail ought to be cut off close behind the ears.—Demorest's Monthly.

Only a short time ago, says the Osceola Sentinel, while we sat at an Osceola store, we saw a man and his wife from the country trading. The woman had the appearance of being a hard-working, industrious, intelligent lady. She was examining a piece of calico or other cheap dress goods. The clerk said, "Shall I cut you off ten yards?" The pale-faced, overworked woman turned to her husband and in a timid, frightened manner asked him if she might buy a dress, as she needed it and the cost would be less than $1. "No," he grunted, "I can't afford it;" and yet he had just paid as much for a great plug of navy and a paper or two of smoking tobacco. The poor, illy-clad, but neat woman subsided as though this was no new experience, while her rough, coarse and animal husband bit off a mouthful of the weed and ordered her to get ready for home.

I have long had the conviction that there is no greater cause of evil, moral and physical, in this country than the use of alcoholic beverages. After more than twenty years of professional life, I have no hesitation in attributing a very large proportion of some of the most painful and dangerous maladies, which have come under my notice, to the ordinary and daily use of fermented drink, taken in the quantity which is constitutionally deemed moderate. . . . There is no single habit in this country which so much tends to deteriorate the qualities of the race, and so much disqualifies it for endurance.—Dr. Thomson, F. R. S., and Surgeon Extraordinary to the King of the Belgians.

The W. C. T. U., of the District of Columbia, has been doing most efficient work among the inmates of the Soldiers' Home, and also at the navy yard among the mariners. A petition is to be presented to Congress asking that a law be passed prohibiting saloons within a mile of the Soldiers' Home. General Sheridan, when asked his opinion on the subject, said: "You propose to banish the saloons one mile. Ladies, make it ten."

If intemperance should break out among horses and cattle, there would be an extra session of Congress called in less than three weeks to stay the evil. But pshaw! its only men that get drunk.—Golden Era.

Alcohol is universally ranked among poisons by physiologists, chemists, physicians and all who have experimented, studied and written upon the subject. —Professor Youmans.

We have a great horror of arsenic, and fifty other things; the fact is, all these things are a mere bagatelle in relation to the most direct, absolute, immediate and certain poisonings which are caused by alcohol.

There are more men killed, so far as I know English statistics—more men poisoned by alcohol, than are poisoned by all other poisons put together.—James Edmunds, M. D., London, Eng.

The Churches.

—One of the most interesting religious papers of Chicago is the Mission Worker, published at the Adelphi Theater Mission by the evangelist Kirkland. It is a record of all the missions in the city, but especially of the Adelphi. At this place a free soup kitchen was opened Feb. 1st, and some 18,000 men it is believed have come in and heard the Gospel proclamation since. Two meetings are held daily and three on the Sabbath.

—The Dayton Christian reports some 200 conversions and many additions to the United Brethren church in its last number.

—The Mail of Buffalo lately printed the following item, which, we hope, may prove to be a mistake. If not, it is a matter which should be closed up immediately, along with the tobacco habits of the Evangelists Jones and Small:

—Mr. Moody, when at Memphis, sent for the Evangelist Sayford at the East, with Mr. and Mrs. Towner to assist in singing. They have carried on the good work with great success since Mr. Moody went on to New Orleans. The Evangelist Bliss was called by Mr. Moody to continue the good work in New Orleans.

—Major Whittle's meetings in the leading cities of Kansas are being greatly blessed to the churches, and with many conversions. The revival of consecrated Christian life among professors of religion is the most marked effect of these meetings. Mr. Whittle went to Topeka on the 12th ult.

—Dr. L. W. Munhall is conducting revival meetings in the large cities of the Pacific coast. At Los Angeles, Sacramento, San Francisco and Portland crowded meetings and many conversions were the result. Over 350 persons publicly professed Christ in Portland.

—The labors of Bro. A. J. Bell at Anamosa and Fayette, Iowa, were blessed of the Holy Spirit in the conversion of over 300 persons since the 1st of January.

—Charles Herald, late of Chicago, and leader of the choir of the Moody church, one of the sweetest of Gospel singers, was called by the Yankton Congregational church to labor in Dakota as an evangelist. He has been conducting meetings at Chamberlain, Dakota, and Cherokee, Iowa, the past month, and with most precious results. Mr. Herald is a brother beloved, and whatever church calls him for evangelistic work will make no mistake. He gave up his business to devote himself to the work of an evangelist from pure love for the service.

—Wheeling, W. Va., reports an interesting revival in which the wealthiest people of the city have been converted.

—C. H. Fralic reports some 200 conversions in his pastors' Sunday-schools in Nebraska the past year, and the gathering of fourteen churches.

—Mr. Sankey has given a new building lot to the Methodist church in New Castle, Pa.

—The Congregational church at De Mars, Iowa, has received 117 members during the year, of whom 54 were on confession of faith.

—Moody and Sankey's meetings in New Orleans stirred up an enthusiasm in that city greater than any ever known there before.

—As a result of union services beginning with the Week of Prayer, about 100 persons have professed conversion in Worcester, N. Y.

—As a result of a recent revival at Drury College, Missouri, every student but one, every girl in Fairbanks Hall and all the servants have become Christians.

—A wonderful evangelistic work is said to be going on among policemen in New York city, conducted by a Hungarian young man, who is himself a remarkable illustration of Divine grace.

—Dr. L. W. Munhall goes to San Francisco on the 14th of March, for two months. The churches have divided the whole city into districts and appointed visitors for each district, in order to prepare the way for the evangelist before he begins his work. The California papers say Dr Munhall is going to the Sandwich Islands and to Australia to hold meetings. The Lord seems to use this evangelist in a remarkable manner for the conversion of souls.

—There are five Chinese Sunday-schools in Chicago, with 682 teachers and 760 pupils.

—A call has been made by the Presbytery of Cincinnati for a convention of the ministers and members of the Presbyteries of Southern Ohio, Southern Indiana and Kentucky. The convention will be held in the First Presbyterian church of Cincinnati, beginning on the evening of March 16 and continuing the two following days. The opening sentence of the call gives the reasons for the convention as follows: "Without undertaking to forecast the future, we cannot fail to recognize the present indications of a growing desire on the part of Christians for times of refreshing from the presence of the Lord, and a deepening conviction in the minds of all classes of people that we are already upon the eve of a religious movement of more than ordinary extent and power."

—The will of John B. Gough leaves $1,000 to the American Board of Commissioners of Foreign Missions, American Home Missionary Society of New York, American Seaman's Friend Society of New York, Children's Friend Society of Worcester, Mass., Trustees of the Memorial Hospital of Worcester, and National Temperance Publication Society of New York. The rest of his estate goes to his widow and other relatives.

—A letter in the London Times, written from Tientsin, speaks of missionaries as "the true pioneers of civilization," and adds that "the day has gone by when English missionaries are snubbed by their own authorities." The writer states that "a new wave of missionary interest is passing over China," and he seems to appreciate the young men of the English universities who have recently gone out under the China Inland Mission.

—What a grand example of consecration and courage is shown by the march of Bishop Taylor, with the van of his missionary army, into the heart of Africa! He leaves behind him the best positions, each occupied by one or more of his followers, and pushes on with the rest to occupy more stations. He seems to conciliate the natives wherever he goes, and the climate itself appears to be tempered to suit his pioneer forces. He calls for thirty or forty more missionaries and the means to pay their traveling expenses to their appointed stations; also the means to build houses for them and places of worship, but no means for their support; that is to be obtained, under the Divine guidance, from their own labors, of which teaching the natives will no doubt be a chief part.—N. Y. Witness.

—Not only from a Protestant, but from a Christian point of view, says the United Presbyterian, France is one of the most interesting of the civilized nations. It is almost without religion, and yet it contains some of the most religious people of the day. Rev. Dr. Baird has said that "France is the foremost foreign missionary field in the world," and all things taken into account, his language need not be pronounced extravagant. There is need of effort there, and work successfully done there becomes a mighty influence in behalf of effort elsewhere. To convert France is to add unspeakably to the power of the organized kingdom.

—The Sunday-Schools at Work, the organ of the New York Sunday-School Association, states that there are more than 740,000 children and youth in the State not under any religious instruction, Protestant or Catholic.

—Students who help themselves at Howard University, Washington, compose a large proportion of the numbers in the different departments. In the Normal Department there are forty who in part or whole are earning their support; in the Preparatory, twenty-five; in the College, eighteen; and in the Theological, forty-one; in all 124. The number is also large in the Medical and Law courses. Some of these work at trades; some are waiters in hotels and boarding-houses; some teach; some pick up odd jobs of labor; some perform services at the University; some preach to churches; some act as Government clerks.

THE CENTRAL BIBLE SEMINARY.

Stromsburg, Nebr., March 7, 1886.

Editor Christian Cynosure,

Dear Sir:—As you have kindly noticed the existence of the Central Bible Seminary before in your paper, I take the liberty hereby to send you further items for publication.

When about a year and a half ago, for good and sufficient reasons, we left the Baptist Seminary at Morgan Park in order to organize an independent institution of Christian learning, a Board for that purpose was organized at St. Paul, Minn., and a course of training for ministerial students commenced. During the winter we had thirty-nine students and seven instructors. Although the most of these students needed support, and we had no aid from any educational society, yet, through the blessing of God, we closed the year without a dollar's indebtedness. We had also during the same time received subscriptions towards an endowment, amounting to $28,000, the larger portion of which we deem good, and wills to an amount of about $12,000, all this from Swedish Baptists. We had also received several offers of loans for making a location. The offer of $10,500, together with forty acres of land, by the city of Stromsburg, Nebr., was accepted, and we moved to this place in the spring of last year.

We have now erected our first building intended for the Seminary proper. It is a brick structure of 100x40, three stories high, and basement cellar. The building contains rooms for forty-eight students, two professors, kitchen apartments, dining-room, reception-room, library, two recitation rooms, and a large chapel across the central part of the building in the third story. Every hall is light and airy, every room is ventilated directly from out doors, and the whole building is heated with steam. The building cost $10,800, and the heater $1,600. We opened with Theological and Academic studies in January. We have over thirty students present, mostly for the ministry, although we opened so late. By next fall we will probably have more students than the building can hold. We need an additional building for ladies, and by and by also a separate college building; but we must now work for an increase of endowments and general income, whereby, first of all, to support an adequate faculty.

The seminary building was dedicated on February 27th. Rev. J. W. Harris, of Omaha, preached the dedication sermon, a practical, suggestive, and eloquent sermon, on the necessity of Christian education. In the afternoon Rev. F. Peterson, of Minneapolis, read a paper on the History of this School. Prof. J. A. Edgren, a paper on the Principles and Aims of it; Prof. N. N. Norton spoke on the Library and the Secretary; Rev. A. B. Orgren, on the Finances. The morning and afternoon meetings were in English. In the evening Rev. C. Silene, of Topeka, preached in Swedish, and the delightful dedication services closed with a general prayer and conference meeting. Yours truly in Christ,

J. A. Edgren.

LODGE NOTES.

—A fine lodge swindle was lately exploded in Missouri. Charles H. Smith worked up a plan which was to form a secret order, from which was to grow a new and the only true religion. He would grant a charter to any six persons who applied for it, provided that each one paid $25 into the common fund. Then he would have prophetic visions, on the strength of which he easily induced his dupes to mortgage their farms to the order. Of all the notes and mortgages thus made, Smith, as financial agent, had entire charge. In this capacity of agent, also, he would purchase land near some town and divide it into town lots which were purchased by members of the lodge from him, as follows: A member paid $50 for a lot, one-third cash, and a note for the balance bearing 10 per cent interest, and gave a mortgage on the lot. He then got $50 from the treasurer, gave it and his note for $100 to the financial agent, and gave the treasurer a receipt for $50. The agent returned $50 to the treasurer and had the note for $100. In this way each member got a lot and the agent many notes of from $100 to $500 each. The notes were good. The agent sold them and got $20,000. This is not the only lodge swindle in America.

—Henry Hof, treasurer at St. Louis of Damon Lodge No. 28, Knights of Pythias, drowned himself in a cistern Friday morning. He had misappropriated the funds of the lodge.

—D. P. Sagendorph of Charlotte, Mich., who is a leader in the prohibition ranks of the State, having been voted for as candidate for Governor, is a Royal Arch Mason. But, to the credit of his good sense, the Detroit Freemason says he does not work lodgery and has not for some time.

—John C. Smith, whom the Republicans elected Lieutenant governor of Illinois in 1884, seems to regard himself now in better business than ever. He is chief officer of the new Odd-fellow Patriarchs Militant for what is termed the Division of the Lakes, which at present comprises Michigan, Wisconsin, Minnesota, Illinois and Dakota Territory, but it is soon to be enlarged to embrace Iowa, Missouri, and further territory as far west as the Rocky Mountains. His title is that of Major General. He says that the degree is becoming justly popular, and is destined to be the military degree of the Odd-fellows, and is kept very busy instituting new cantons.

The Detroit Freemason counts a million more every time. It now reports 15,000,000 Freemasons in the world. Lately it was but 14,000,000. If this number is correct, bout seven-eighths are seceded.

A BEARING ORANGE GROVE IN CHICAGO.

One of the greatest novelties of the age will be presented to the people of the Northwest, at the Exposition building in Chicago, during the latter part of March, in the shape of a grove of bearing orange trees. This exhibit will be made in connection with an exhibit of Citrus Fruits, such as Oranges and Lemons, from the now famous orange section of the Pacific Coast, under the auspices of the Immigration Association of Southern California. The transcontinental railroads have generously offered to bring this exhibit to Chicago free of freight. It will fill twenty cars and twelve men will accompany it.

The exhibit will be under the management of L. M. Holt, editor of the Riverside (Cal.) Press and Horticulturist, assisted by H. N. Rust, formerly of Chicago, as business manager, J. E. Clark, Commissioner of Immigration, C. Z. Culver, of Santa Ana, and Frank A. Kimball, of National City, San Diego county.

This will be a novel exhibit for the people of Chicago and the Northwest; and will attract crowds of people.

Those who desire to get information relative to Southern California should attend this Fair and consult with the best posted men of that section who will be in attendance.

Bronchitis is cured by frequent small doses of Piso's Cure for Consumption.

BUSINESS.

There is no more faithful, persistent and undiscouraged worker than our friend L. B. Lathrop, of the Pacific coast. He has a zealous co-worker in Dr. Neal, a seceding Freemason and earnest Christian.

As long as these brethren live there will be at least one standard raised against the flood of secret lodges on the California coast.

A large list of yearly subscribers attest their success.

Rufus Johnson sends $10 toward circulating the Cynosure among ministers in the South. He wishes to help those ministers who need instruction. Do not fail to read the letters of Elders Woodsmall and Countee in this number. The Cynosure is certainly a Pole Star of light and life to the Southern churches. The names of many Southern ministers who need the Cynosure, have recently been furnished this office by Secretary Woodsmall. Who now will furnish the means for sending them the Cynosure? Many have contributed liberally already, whose reward is evident from the good work which the Cynosure has accomplished for the South.

SUBSCRIPTION LETTERS.

The following have made remittances of money to the Cynosure from March 8 to 13 inclusive:

Readers ordering goods advertising in the CHRISTIAN CYNOSURE will do well to mention the paper when ordering as we have reason to believe that our advertisers treat the readers well.

Sing the Reform

Into the Hearts of the People!

One of the most popular books against lodgery is the latest compilation of GEORGE W. CLARK, the Minstrel of Reform, a forty-page book of soul-stirring, conscience-awakening songs appropriate for lectures, conventions and the home circle. What can add more to the interest of a meeting than a song well sung? What means will more quickly overthrow the power of the secret lodges than to sing the truth into the popular conscience?
